From the time of Dr. Muck's arrest Monday night until he was taken to East Cambridge at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon efforts were being made to bring about his release and to make his stay in custody as pleasant as possible under the circumstances. Business Manager Charles A. Ellis of the Boston Symphony orchestra was in communication with his associates and with Mrs. Muck, assuring all that no effort would be spared to procure Dr. Muck's attendance at the concerts. His secretary, Charles A. Foley, went to the federal building early in the day and carried with him a tin box of cigarettes of the particular brand Dr. Muck is accustomed to smoke.

Shortly after 4 o'clock Mr. Dewey announced that he did not require the prisoner's attendance any longer, and Marshal Mitchell issued directions that he be made ready for the trip to jail. Deputy Marshal Arthur J. Shinners went to the detention room to prepare the prisoners.

The deputy had two pairs of handcuffs in his hand as he entered the room and Dr. Muck shrank back in the corner as his glance fell upon them. The officer unlocked the cage in which two of the prisoners were confined and handcuffed them but nodded to Dr. Muck to follow him, without handcuffs.

An automobile was at the door waiting for its fares and just as the officer and his prisoner emerged from the detention room Mrs. Muck, carrying another tin box of cigarettes under her arm and accompanied by a woman friend, entered the outer office. Mrs. Muck accosted the officer and asked if she might speak to her husband. Deputy Shinners stepped aside and Dr. Muck took a quick step forward to greet his wife, the color returning to his pale cheeks as he smiled at her and grasped her hand.

Mrs. Muck asked the question—was she permitted to pass to her husband some cigarettes? The officer told her that he did not object to her giving Dr. Muck the box, but he doubted that he would be permitted to smoke them at East Cambridge. Mrs. Muck and her husband were both plainly surprised at this announcement.

Assured of Consideration

"He can't smoke cigarettes over there?" she asked, hesitating to mention the jail, though she evidently knew he was going there. Dr. Muck, too, asked that question, and the deputy turned to Chief Deputy Duane, who turned from his desk at the inquiry. Chief Duane explained that it was against the rules to smoke cigarettes at East Cambridge and said that only a pipe would be permitted. Dr. Muck hastily declared that he never smoked a pipe or a cigar in his life and that he could smoke only cigarettes. Chief Duane informed them that they might arrange with the sheriff to have cigarettes, but he could not grant such a permit.

Mrs. Muck was deeply concerned about the sleeping accommodations at the jail and United States Marshal Mitchell arrived at this juncture, just in time to assure her that the beds were quite comfortable, the jail very clean and orderly and that every consideration possible in keeping with jail rules would be shown Dr. Muck.

Mrs. Muck asked concerning the food and the marshal told her he had been informed that arrangements were made to have Dr. Muck's meals sent in from outside of the jail. Mrs. Muck said: "That is excellent, for you know his digestion is very poor."

When the interview was concluded Mrs. Muck grasped Marshal Mitchell's hand, expressed her pleasure at meeting him and thanked him for his kindness. Then she turned to her husband who took her in his arms and kissed her fervently. Both were smiling as they parted and she hurried to the corridor.

Mrs. Muck waited in the corridor until her husband passed into the elevator and as he started downward he threw her a kiss through the grating, to which she responded with a wave of her hand.

Curious Crowd Gathers

Newspaper photographers and a crowd of curious people were at the waiting automobile when Dr. Muck appeared. Mrs. Muck did not use the elevator, but walked down two flights of stairs to the Postoffice square side of the building where she sought to evade the photographers by getting into a taxicab.

Asst. Dist.-Atty. Dewey issued orders that the prisoner was not to be permitted to receive visitors except his wife, but he later granted passes to the jail to Mr. Ellis and Mr. Foley.

Dr. Muck's trip was uneventful, but when he walked up the stone steps at East Cambridge he paled visibly and hesitated as the door swung open to receive him. Deputy Shinners ushered him into the office where he made known his identity to Sheriff John R. Fairbairn and Dr. Muck immediately asked if he would be permitted the privilege of smoking cigarettes. Sheriff Fairbairn told him that cigarettes were not permitted, but that he could smoke a pipe. The orchestra leader said he didn't smoke a pipe and never did smoke one.

Last night it was announced at the jail that there would be no setting aside of the cigarette rule and that if Dr. Muck didn't care to smoke a pipe he would have to forego smoking or become accustomed to a pipe.

Considerable speculation was indulged in last night as to the time Dr. Muck would be held at Cambridge. He told one of his guards that he thought it would be three or four days. Officers at the federal building said they could not tell anything about it as much would depend upon Washington's findings.

Under Washington Orders

It was pointed out that Dr. Muck is now held as an enemy alien, subject to orders from Washington and without any privileges of trial. If the papers seized at his house reveal incriminating information he may be charged with a violation of one or more of the regulations of the espionage act, in which event he will be arraigned in court for a trial. No information on this point was forthcoming last night, but officials did say that no further arrests were expected before today.

From Dr. Muck's friends it was learned last night that eminent counsel was engaged to defend him against charges, but inasmuch as enemy aliens are not entitled to hearings or opportunities to set up defences, no counsel appeared, nor would the prisoner's friends say who counsel was.

Mrs. Muck declined to be interviewed after her visit to the federal building, but earlier in the day she declared that the arrest of her husband was a preposterous thing and she expressed her belief that any charges against him would be disproved. She expected that Dr. Muck would be released, but when informed later that he probably would be detained for several days she made arrangements to visit him at the jail.

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC GIVEN

All the Matthew Production Heard in Symphony Hall at Two Sessions

SCHMIDT CONDUCTS IN PLACE OF DR. MUCK

By PHILIP HALE

The whole of Bach's Matthew Passion music was performed yesterday in two sessions, afternoon and evening, in Symphony Hall, by a chorus of 400 voices—prepared by Stephen Townsend—a boy choir of 80, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and these solo singers: Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Herbert Witherspoon, bass; Arthur Myers, tenor. John P. Marshall was the organist, Alfred De Voto the pianist. Ernest Schmidt conducted.

Camille Saint-Saens, a sympathetic and profound student of Bach, declared over 30 years ago that the performance of that master's great choral works is now a chimera. "There can be only more or less curious attempts; attempts made for the joy of scholars and library rats; but they are far from being the realization of the work imagined by the composer." Saint-Saens then spoke of instruments employed by Bach which are now out of date; of the music written for a small chorus, swarming with complicated phrases, leaps to far-off intervals, trills, all sorts of difficulties; of extremely dangerous pages for the solo singers.

Some musicians, as Robert Franz, have believed in the enlargement and enrichment of Bach's score for the Matthew Passion. Purists have objected to Franz's tinkering and patching. They have argued in favor of performances exactly as Bach gave them in the St. Thomas Church at Leipsic. The introduction of clarinets especially disturbs them. The management of Symphony Hall, in its announcement of the concert yesterday, stated that "it is an [illegible] into the score Bach died in 1750. Let us waive the question whether J. C. Denner of Nuremberg "invented" the clarinet about 1700 or merely modified the then existing chalumeau or schalmei. A mass composed by a Belgian in 1720 contains a clarinet part. La Poupliniere of Paris imported two German clarinetists about 1751 and they played in the Concert Spirituel. Rameau employed clarinets in 1751. Clarinets were used in J. C. Bach's opera "Orione," produced in London in 1763. The boy Mozart in London copied an overture of Abel that contained clarinet parts. In 1771 Mozart at Milan wrote for clarinets. A clarinet solo was played in a concert at Philadelphia in 1769. Clarinets were heard in New York concerts as early as 1764. Here in Boston a local orchestra that gave concerts in 1774 contained clarinets as well as oboes, bassoons and French horns.

Exercising the utmost piety, the most learned and skilful conductor cannot give a performance of the Matthew Passion similar to the one heard in Leipsic in 1729. Bach employed only a very small chorus. He had only a pitiably little orchestra. Suppose that today a few trained singers of great ability and Bach's orchestra were at hand; that the oboi da caccia were not missing; that the common oboe of 1918 resembled in power and quality of tone the oboe of 1729; that Bach himself were the organist. The audience would not be the same in education, environment, mood and disposition. It might have a devout spirit, but its devotional frame of mind could not possibly be that of the congregation at Leipsic. Even the chorals have not the same intense significance. It is impossible to revive the conditions for which Bach wrote. It may furthermore be said that a performance in a concert hall probably never entered Bach's mind.

Dr. Muck had devoted much of his time and all of his skill to a reverential reconstruction of the score. The result was as interesting as it was effective, but it could not transport the players or hearers back to the Leipsic of the composer's period. Nor was it successful in relieving the inherent monotony of many pages, but this was not Dr. Muck's intention.

There are two ways of considering a performance of the Passion Music: one is to view it as a religious service; the other is to treat it as one would treat any concert work. If the music is to be regarded as any other sacred composition performed in a concert hall and without religious services, the performance of the whole work is a mistake. Certain solos, irksome to the singer, boresome as music, without truly emotional or religious significance, seldom expressive of the text, might be omitted with advantage to the composer. Did anyone yesterday afternoon find musical pleasure or religious benefit in the soprano solos in the first part? Only those who believe in the plenary inspiration of Bach would insist on the performance of every page. Bach could be as dull as any Kapellmeister in Eisleven. The purely decorative arias in the Passion Music might well be omitted. Even Mme. Hinkle, with her excellent voice and art, coul dnot turn the long aria in the second part into a thing of beauty, or hardly mitigate its barbaric ugliness.

When the Matthew Passion was first performed at Leipsic there were probably religious exercises between the two parts. In a concert hall the performance must be considered as a performance of any sacred composition.

It may then be said that the performance yesterday was an extraordinarily impressive one, admirable in nearly all respects, one not likely to be surpassed here in the coming years. It was far superior to any one that we have heard in Germany. Mr. Townsend had brought the chorus to a high degree of proficiency. The tonal quality and the plasticity of the great body of singers were remarkable. Dr. Muck in the final rehearsals had so completed the preparation that Mr. Schmidt, called suddenly to conduct, found his task greatly lessened. Nevertheless, he should be warmly praised for carrying out so well Dr. Muck's intentions. In the second part there were times when the accompaniment of solo singers in arias was not sufficiently subdued, but these instances were not many.

Mr. Murphy's reading of the narrator's music was a constant delight; his enunciation was so clear, his diction had so great significance. Not too dramatic, he steered clear of sentimentalism. Mr. Werrenrath's singing of the music of Jesus was marked by rare dignity, by an expressiveness that was intelligent as well as emotional. Mme. Alcock again displayed a beautiful voice and vocal and aesthetic understanding. Nor should Mr. Longy's playing of the oboe obbligato in the first part be forgotten.

There was a large and deeply interested audience. The performance will be repeated with the same singers next Tuesday.

REDUCTION RATIO 13x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

60

Seizure of Papers at Home of Dr. Muck May Lead to re Arrests

NEW ARRESTS IN MUCK CASE HINTED AT

Traveler 3/27

Report Follows Seizing of Papers in Home of Musician

Mrs. Karl Muck, wife of the famous orchestra leader held as an alien enemy. She came to this country with him in 1906. The picture was taken soon after her arrival here. She appears to be greatly shocked at her husband's detention.

Government officials were busy today with papers taken from the home of Dr Karl Muck which may involve others in Boston besides the musician. Dr Muck is being detained at the East Cambridge jail and it is likely he will remain there until disposition of his case is made at Washington.

Dr. Muck did not rest well his first night in confinement and it was evident this morning that his situation has distressed him despite his smiles and calm of yesterday. His breakfast was taken into him again today, and he will not be confined to the jail diet while in East Cambridge.

(Continued on Page Five, Column 3.)

(Continued from Page One.)

Diplomatic Battle

A dispatch from New York that Hans Sulzer, the Swiss minister to the United States, will interfere in behalf of Dr. Muck in case he is called upon, has added another interesting feature to the detention. The Swiss minister stated that Dr. Muck is a citizen of Switzerland and entitled to protection by the legation at Washington.

Department of justice officials here stated that they are fully prepared to answer any complaints which may be made by the Swiss legation at Washington on the ground that Dr. Muck is a citizen of Switzerland. They report that his claim was gone into at great detail before Dr. Muck was detained.

In case Dr. Muck asks aid from Sulzer, a diplomatic battle regarding the conductor's nationality may arise.

Dr Muck is a model prisoner, according to guards at the East Cambridge jail.

He expressed keen disappointment in not being allowed to conduct at the concert at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and last night.

Although he had never smoked a pipe he took to one when he found there was a jail rule forbidding the use of cigarettes or cigars. After smoking several pipe loads of tobacco he appeared to enjoy it.

Useful articles have been removed from Dr. Muck's room in his Fenway street house to his cell.

May Be Interned

Government officials here maintain silence in regard to definite charges which the government may have against Dr. Muck. Department of justice men continue to maintain that his detention is considered important and there is little chance he will be released.

One report was that Dr. Muck will be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where a great many important enemy aliens are interned.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who at the time of the "Star Spangled Banner" incident came quickly to Dr. Muck's rescue, has not declared himself regarding the latest development and musical people are all waiting to see what is going to happen. Some have manifested an interest in seeing that the famous conductor is given every consideration a man in his predicament can be, but that is as far as they go.

Dr. Muck is now being held as an enemy alien. In case the government makes direct charges that he has violated the espionage act he will be arrested and arraigned in court for trial. In this case he would be allowed to employ counsel. As long as he is merely detained as an enemy alien he cannot be represented by attorney. It is understood that Mrs. Muck has talked with a Boston lawyer regarding the case.

Before Dr. Muck departed yesterday from the federal building he learned that department of justice agents had visited his home and other places frequented by him and had seized correspondence and papers.

The house at 50 Fenway, Back Bay, owned and occupied by Dr. Karl Muck and Mrs. Muck. The musician purchased the property in 1914 for $30,000, according to the press reports of that time.

Suspect Kaiser Had Object in Sending Dr. Muck to U. S.

So far as is known there is no direct evidence to prove when Emperor William made it possible for Dr. Muck to come to America that the move was part of the German campaign which in 1914 was to take on its cruel military aspect, but examination of German methods indicate clearly that Germany considered Dr. Muck could do much to make Germany popular in the United States.

German propaganda has been pushed in America in devious ways; by scientists, by professors, by financiers. Dr. Muck, a great musician, had easy access to people and groups in the United States where a good word for Germany could be counted on to do much good in such an emergency as a world war.

Missed No Opportunity

The Kaiser missed no opportunity to send his missionaries into the world and there is small wonder that one of the first statements credited to Dr. Muck upon his arrival in Boston in the fall of 1906 was:

"I have had many splendid offers to come to America. So many tried to prevent me from coming I had a personal interview with Kaiser Wilhelm and it was through his influence that I was finally able to sign the contract. The Kaiser was very much in favor of my coming here. It was he who encouraged me to make the decision, and it was through his personal influence that the barriers which seemed to hinder my acceptance were overcome."

Made It Possible

Musical people in Berlin did not want to lose Dr. Muck from the Royal orchestra. He had won a supreme reputation all over Europe as a conductor, and there was much opposition to his going away. But Kaiser William wished it, and not only made it possible for the musician to come for the first year, but for him to remain for two years.

Comment in American papers at the time it was announced that Emperor William had permitted Dr. Muck to remain with the Boston orchestra for a second season were the sort which tended to greatly strengthen the friendship for Germany of a class of Americans the Kaiser seemed to wish to cultivate. The following, taken from the press of the day, is an example:

Diplomatic Move

"Incidentally, it was one of the most diplomatic and graceful things the Kaiser ever did. From every part of the United States has come praise of this act of international courtesy."

In the light of today's events the "courtesy" of the Kaiser might be interpreted as a master stroke of developing the German propaganda in America. Opening the road for world conquest with such men as Dr. Muck might be credited as a superlative move in international intrigue, even if the great musician himself was ignorant that he was part of the preparation.

Reputation International

Dr. Muck has made as brilliant a musical reputation upon this side of the Atlantic as he won on the other. His splendid artistic work with the Boston orchestra had widened his reputation so it is international. In all the principal cities of America Dr. Muck won admiration for himself and for Germany. During the troubled days of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last fall, how strong Dr. Muck was with musical people was attested by the crowds which supported him and cheered him every time he raised his magic baton to lead his orchestra.

And while all these honors were coming to him Dr. Muck never let it be forgotten that he was of the German school. He took unlimited pride in his Boston orchestra, but he did not hesitate to let people know that the musicians who composed it were for the most part Europeans, and Europeans from the fatherland. Dr. Muck's musical career was established in Germany, his record of early musical triumphs is the story of the seasons in the great musical centres of the central powers.

Favorite in Berlin

At Berlin he was a favorite and the Kaiser was his particular friend and admirer.

It is not likely that Dr. Muck knew during his first visit to Boston that the German Emperor planned to later make a bid for world dominion by the force of blood and iron, but he was no less an important factor in creating the sentiment which for so many months kept many good Americans blinded regarding the merits of the struggle which is now being waged.

At the same time Dr. Muck knows something besides his music. He studied at Heidelburg and Leipsic and was awarded the degree of doctor of philosophy by the University of Leipsic when he was but 21 years old.

Called Him Bavarian

His wife, before her marriage, was Fraulein Anita Portugall of Graz, the capital of Styria, and her father was mayor Graz for years. Her mother still lives there and she has visited her home frequently. Mrs. Muck is regarded as a woman of great intellect and had won a reputation as an author in Germany.

Mrs. Muck Sees Husband in Jail

Mrs. Karl Muck visited her husband today for the first time since he has been in jail. She obtained a pass from United States Marshal Mitchell. She told her husband she was greatly concerned over his comfort and expressed the hope he had obtained some rest.

When Mrs. Muck arrived at the jail she was shown every courtesy and was allowed to talk with her husband for some time. She brought newspapers, magazines and things to eat.

very kind to us."

Upon his return to Europe Dr. Muck was largely responsible for having the German conductor, Max Fiedler of Hamburg, who had been a student with him at Leipsic, take his place in Boston. The Emperor approved of the appointment of Fiedler.

After Dr. Muck's return to America, in 1912, he quickly regained all his popular favor in Boston and other metropolitan centres. Where, with music and harmony, he increased German popularity among an important class of Americans.

Dr. Muck returned to America, Oct. 7, 1914, after having been detained in Berlin a month to work in the war office. When he arrived in New York he immediately denied reports of German atrocities in Belgium, and said he had seen men who had been maltreated by the Belgians.

He said he had seen three German soldiers who had their eyes gouged out by Belgians, and told many other incidents of the sort.

During this period before America entered the war Dr. Muck was one of Germany's most staunch supporters.

continuation

A significant comment credited to Mrs. Muck upon her arrival in America in 1906, in view of Dr. Muck's claim that he is a Swiss, was:

"Dr. Muck is a Bavarian."

When the conductor arrived in America in 1906 he could speak but little English, but upon his return here in 1914 he was master of it. Mrs. Muck learned English as a child. On March [illegible] Dr. Muck purchased the to[illegible] brick house at 50 Fenway, tor[illegible] and has lived there since.

Friend of Muensterberg

An interesting comment, taken from a newspaper file of 1906 and telling of the arrival of the Mucks in Boston was:

"Society women will take Mrs. [illegible] in hand and make her one of th[illegible]selves."

In many newspapers of that day Dr. Muck was referred to as Herr Dr. Muck.

The Swiss legation at Washington has said that Dr. Muck is a Swiss, but this does not account in any way for the fact that he was much better acquainted with German diplomats in America than he was with Swiss diplomats, until the Germans were given their papers.

Before the war Dr. Muck was a great favorite in Boston. He was dined and wined. Upon his departure for Berlin after conducting the Boston orchestra for two years, he was given a remarkable banquet by the Deutscher Verein of Harvard. President Eliot, Prof. Muensterberg, Maj. Higginson and other dignitaries were present.

At this banquet Prof. Muensterberg said:

"It is the object of the Germans in this country to introduce aestheticism, especially with harmony and music."

Spoke for Successor

During the evening a prominent man said:

"The Emperor of Germany has been

Transcript March 28, 1918

DR. KARL MUCK'S ARREST APPROVED

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass. — Approval by Thomas W. Gregory, Attorney-General of the United States, of the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck by the United States authorities in this city was received today at the Federal Building by John J. Mitchell, United States Marshal. Attorney-General Gregory stated that the action in arresting Dr. Muck under Article 12 of the proclamation of President Wilson, issued April 6, 1917, met with the approbation of the department. This article gave officials of the United States authority to apprehend any person believed to be, when at large, a menace to the people of the United States.

Dr. Muck remained in East Cambridge jail today, and at noon a special luncheon was served him by one of his friends living in the Back Bay section of the city.

Dr. Muck's Successor

BOSTON, Mass.—Ernest Schmidt, who as assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, succeeds to the duties of Dr. Karl Muck, first came to Boston in the fall of 1914. He took the place of Otto Urak, who was assistant conductor of the orchestra the two previous seasons.

The post of assistant conductor was first formally instituted when Dr. Muck came for his second engagement with the orchestra in the fall of 1912. Mr. Schmidt came to Boston from Darmstadt, Germany, where he was con[illegible] master in an orchestra and the dir[illegible] of a choral society.

He has taken Dr. Muck's plac[illegible] number of occasions in Boste[illegible] bridge and other cities.

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

Herald March 28, 1918

DR. MUCK FACES FRESH QUIZZING

Federal Attorneys Planning Re-examination of Prisoner

DIRECTOR LEARNS TO SMOKE PIPE IN JAIL

Dr. Karl Muck will undergo a new examination by United States district atorneys at the Federal building within the next few days. This much, and this only, was admitted by federal officials yesterday, but it is considered significant that the new examination follows the raid on the orchestra leader's home in which a number of papers were seized. It is thought that the delay is to give department of justice agents time to investigate "leads" given them by the contents of these papers.

Rumors were rife yesterday and Tuesday of arrests that will follow as the result of Dr. Muck's incarceration, one report even naming a prominent business man of German birth who was in his early youth a member of one of the Kaiser's crack regiments; but the federal officials would neither admit nor deny the truth of any of these. "If any arrests are made the people will be informed," said one of the active heads of the department of justice in Boston. "And unless arrests are made we can't say anything."

See Kaiser's Hand in Coming

It is evident, however, that the federal authorities view Dr. Muck as an important prisoner, aside from all importance he has had as a great musician and a social favorite. They consider it established that his Boston residence was part of the Kaiser's policy of some years ago of "planting" musicians, college professors and other men of great accomplishment and culture in various countries, as part of his gorgeous scheme of eventual world-wide conquest. Dr. Muck, claiming Swiss citizenship, was "loaned by the Kaiser" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and constantly expressed his pride in the fact that his orchestra was comprised almost wholly of Germans and Austrians. At the time Dr. Muck first came to America the Kaiser came in for much complimentary talk on the part of American music lovers for "removing obstacles" to the musician's residence in America. There is a close analogy between the circumstances surrounding the coming to America of Dr. Muck, and the arrival of other men famed in learning, art and literature, who came bearing the Potsdam trade mark. All of these while making themselves acceptable and popular with Americans, lost no opportunity to glorify the "Fatherland."

(Continued on Page Three, Column 3.)

(Continued from Page One.)

A Tennis Incident

An interesting comment, although perhaps far-fetched, on the acumen with which the Kaiser's agents chose men as unofficial representatives of Germany, occurred yesterday during a discussion of the Muck case.

During the international tennis matches of 1914 the great Wilding, the Australian tennis marvel, who died fighting with the allies at Gallipoli, was playing singles with a German army officer at the Allegheny Country Club, just outside of Pittsburgh. Glum, nervous and irascible, Wilding was rather unpopular with the gallery. He easily bested his opponent, a brown-haired, laughing youngster, but the German's efforts were applauded even more than the "cheer for the under dog" spirit would justify. The Belgians were defending Liege at the time the match took place. Immediately after Wilding sailed to join his regiment. The German was interned in Scotland while trying to make his way back to Germany.

Takes Life Easy in Jail

r. Muck took life easy at the East nbridge jail yesterday. He is the h man to join the interned German ony there. He ate three hearty meals, ught in from a nearby "one-arm" ch, and learned to smoke a pipe. The ductor is an inveterate cigarette ioker and was worried when he was t that he would not be permitted to ve cigarettes at the jail. He was own the clay pipes, the "T. D.'s" n prisoners unable to buy a pipe of own, but decided to send out for r. It was brought to him, and he much of the day to becoming ned to it, seeming to enjoy it.

Muck visited him at about 1 and they talked together for n hour. No other visitors will be permitted him as a result of orders from U. S. Dist.-Atty. Boynton's office.

The Swiss consul at New York has interested himself in the case to some extent, but federal agents do not anticipate any protest from the Swiss government. Dr. Muck's father purchased his citizenship from the Swiss in the days when there were lax naturalization laws in the cantons of the mountain democracy, and it is doubtful that Dr. Muck, who, for so long, was under the protection of the Kaiser and spoke so often of his German birth, could convince Switzerland that he has any claim for protection from it.

No Immediate Removal

There was talk yesterday that Dr. Muck will soon be interned in a federal camp in Georgia, or sent to a federal prison, but it is probable that his stay at the East Cambridge jail will be somewhat extended. At the time of his arrest department of justice agents said that he would be at the jail for some time, and it is believed that study of his personal papers has developed even more necessity to have him on hand during the course of the spy probe.

Transcript March 28-1918

U. S. CONSIDERS DR. MUCK DANGER TO PUBLIC PEACE

ATTORNEY GENERAL GREGORY TELEGRAPHS INSTRUCTIONS TO MARSHAL MITCHELL—MRS. JOHN L. GARDNER VISITS THE PRISONER

A telegram was received by United States Marshal Mitchell today from Attorney General Gregory at Washington in which it is stated that Dr. Karl Muck is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States. The marshal was further instructed from Washington to keep the prisoner in a hygienic place.

A representative of Mrs. John L. Gardner called at the office of Marshal Mitchell and secured a pass for the admittance of Mrs. Gardner today to the East Cambridge Jail to see Dr. Muck. Mrs. Muck is absent from Boston, and Mrs. Gardner decided to help cheer the prisoner by her visit.

Later Mrs. Gardner and C. J. Foley, secretary of C. A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, visited Dr. Muck and stayed half an hour. Mrs. Gardner brought jam, jellies, preserves and cake, with which the prisoner was greatly pleased.

Dr. Muck has two pipes now, one a French briar and the other a long-stemmed German meerschaum, and, with a large can of pipe tobacco, smokes first one and then the other with apparent enjoyment. He is a great reader, and spends the greater part of his time in smoking and reading, taking but little exercise in the jail yard.

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey today denied the rumor that the arrest of Dr. Muck was the result of any information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are jealous of the leader's connection with the orchestra. Mr. Dewey declared that his attention had not been previously called to any trouble among musicians relative to Dr. Muck's affairs.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was made under Section 12 of the President's Proclamation of April 6, 1917.

Post March 28-1918

GOING THROUGH MUCK'S PAPERS

Conductor Learns to Smoke a Pipe in Jail

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest as an alien enemy, yesterday smoked a pipe for the first time in his life. At the East Cambridge jail, where he is the best known prisoner confined there for many years, no cigarettes are allowed by the regulations, and Sheriff Fairbairn refused to let down the bars in favor of the orchestra leader. So it being plainly a case of a pipe or nothing, the conductor chose the briar. And after a few wry faces, when he possibly was comparing it with his well-loved "weed," he decided it wasn't so bad, and even appeared to enjoy it. He didn't have to christen a "T. D.," such as are supplied to impecunious prisoners. He bought a French briar of his own.

Dr. Muck's first day in jail was passed very quietly. He had three callers, Mrs. Anita Muck, his wife, Manager Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra and C. J. Foley, Mr. Ellis' secretary.

At the federal building yesterday there appeared to be small chance of further developments in the case for several days at least. Agents of the Department of Justice are going through the mass of correspondence and documents that were seized at Dr. Muck's home and elsewhere, and until this task is finished it is believed Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey will not act.

Advertiser March 29-'18

AWAIT REPORT TO DECIDE MUCK'S FATE

Musician Will Not Be Interned Before U. S. Attorney Acts

The internment of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held as an alien enemy in the East Cambridge Jail, now depends on the report to be submitted to the Department of Justice by the United States Attorney here.

Department of Justice officials in Washington last night announced that the internment of the Boston musician will be definitely decided upon only after the report is received.

A dispatch from Washington gave the information that only a preliminary report had been submitted by the Government investigators. The Department of Justice, according to the dispatch, refused to divulge the contents of this report.

It is understood, however, that the officials are in possession of all the information in the case, which they have gleaned from evidence obtained at Dr. Muck's home, are now in a position to make their report.

Following the search at the Muck home yesterday it was stated that the evidence contained in the papers seized implicated other prominent Bostonians, whose identity the Federal officials refused to reveal.

Armed with three search warrants, the officials conducted exhaustive searches at two places long regarded with suspicion by the government agents.

At the Muck home, No. 50 Fenway, the searching officials did not ask Mrs. Muck, the prisoner's wife, to assist in locating the desired documents.

Following an executive session of the raiding officials in the office of the United States District Attorney in the Federal Building, it was said that the names of the persons appearing in the correspondence will be fully investigated by the government.

The fact that Dr. Muck had engaged counsel to direct his fight for freedom was not regarded seriously yesterday, as allen enemies are not entitled to a hearing necessitating the presence of an attorney.

The conductor spent an uneventful day in the East Cambridge jail yesterday, struggling with a clay pipe he had to smoke instead of the expensive cigarettes with which he usually indulges his craving for the weed.

Globe March 28, 1918

MRS GARDNER VISITS DR MUCK AT EAST CAMBRIDGE

Dr Karl Muck, Symphony Orchestra leader, now confined in the East Cambridge Jail as an enemy alien, was visited yesterday by Mrs John L. Gardner, accompanied by Mr Foley, secretary to Dr Muck. Mrs Muck, it is understood, has gone to New York and Mrs Gardner was granted a permit by United States Marshal Mitchell to visit the prisoner.

The marshal yesterday received a telegram from Atty Gen Gregory instructing the Boston official to hold Dr Muck in a hygienic place and stating that "Muck's presence at large was a danger to the public peace and the safety of the United States."

Post March 29-1918

SCRUTINIZING MUCK PAPERS

Officials May Not Act for Several Days

Federal officials are still busy going over the mass of correspondence and documents seized in connection with the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and it is believed that there will be few developments in the next day or two.

Passes were secured at the office of United States Marshal Mitchell for Mrs. John L. Gardner and Charles J. Foley, secretary of Manager Ellis of the orchestra. Later Mrs. Gardner and Mr. Foley motored over to East Cambride jail, where they immediately went into a conference in the guardroom with the prisoner. Mrs. Muck did not visit her husband yesterday as, it is understood, she is out of town. The visitors brought several hampers of fruit and other food.

Monitor March 29, 1918

DR. KARL MUCK AT WAR OPENING

Current Comment When Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Returned From Germany Called Him Patriot

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—In connection with the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck under the enemy alien proclamation of President Wilson, it may be recalled that certain news comment was published in Boston in October, 1914, relative to the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor's return from Germany. This comment, which seems, in part, at least, to have had the sanction of the Symphony Orchestra management, was printed the day after the conductor reached Boston to assume the direction of the concerts of 1914-15. Excerpts from an account of the conductor's arrival which appeared in a Boston newspaper are as follows:

"Dr. Muck came directly from Berlin, where he had spent the greater part of the time since he left Bayreuth in the middle of August. Shortly before sailing he went to his summer home in Doblebad, in Southern Austria. When Germany ordered the mobilization of its army Saturday, Aug. 1, Dr. Muck was conducting the second performance of 'Parsifal' in Bayreuth. Up to the very beginning of the performance there was much doubt whether it could be given, but finally word came that none of the members of the orchestra need leave Bayreuth before the end of the performance. A good part of the orchestra was in the army within 24 hours.

"Dr. Muck expressed himself as being unwilling to discuss the war. An intense patriot and an absolute believer in his country, he naturally feels very deeply on the subject. He is bitterly disappointed that he is unable to serve Germany in some capacity.

"It was through Dr. Muck's efforts that nearly all of the younger Germans in the orchestra who were in Germany last summer were released from their military duty and were able to return to their work here in Boston. There were, however, several musicians whom he had engaged to fill vacancies in the orchestra who have been unable to come because of being in the army. These places have been filled satisfactorily and there will be no lessening of the artistic value of the orchestra."

Legal aid was secured on Thursday for Dr. Muck, the attorney being Cliff Rogers Clapp, one of the counsel for Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra.

After a conference with Dr. Muck at the jail in Cambridge, Mr. Clapp said that he did not intend to appear in any criminal proceedings, except possibly to go over what evidence might be submitted by Dr. Muck to support the contention that he has not been active in the German cause.

Traveler March 29-1918

NO UPHEAVAL

Notwithstanding the opinion of the New York Sun, there will be no "social upheaval" in Boston because of the arrest of Dr. Muck. The only upheaval worth recording in this city at the present time is a Boston-wide upheaval in behalf of the world against the Hun, accompanied by a tremendous purpose to make the Liberty loan drive a success in New England's capital.

"Social upheavals," whatever importance they may carry in time of peace, pass unnoticed in time of war, when rich and poor, influential and unimportant, are marching and fighting side by side, while their mothers, sisters, wives and sweethearts are working and praying side by side at home.

New York, for example, formerly had a "400" and was obviously proud of. Today she doesn't know whether her inner social circle contains 400 or 4000, and any woman who carries her domestic tribulations into a divorce court of the metropolis has a fair chance of being classified by the press as "a well known member of society."

American March 29—1918

MUCK'S ARREST LEADS TO TALK OF WIRELESS

Discussion in the Back Bay today of the case of Dr. Karl Muck, the Symphony orchestra director, now held in East Cambridge jail as an alien enemy, developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling.

Federal authorities decline to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interested speculation.

According to the story told across the tea tables the person using this wireless is a skilled operator of this means of aerial communication.

This person is also accredited with extreme cunning in covering up the wireless trail, even going to the extent of having a man chop wood on the premises, while the wireless was being operated, in order that the noise of the wood-chopping might drown, or at least detract from, the sound of the wireless.

The Back Bay discussion also turned upon probable location of the operating end of the wireless outfit. One report was that it was located in the basement of a house. Another report established it in a fireplace.

It was assumed in this discussion that a person resourceful and daring enough to operate such a wireless would be equally resourceful in methods of concealment.

Mrs. Muck arrived at the jail shortly before noon today and made a short call on her husband. She brought him, among other things, a bag of pretzels, of which the doctor is said to be very fond.

The couple conversed about family matters for some time in the presence of Sheriff Fairbairn and Mrs. Muck left in her automobile for Boston. Mrs. Muck had been in New York for a few days.

Record March 29-1918

SEE MOVE TO SEIZE MUCK'S PROPERTIES

Pending the Federal investigation of Dr. Karl Muck's activities, a Presidential warrant has been issued for his stay in custody, and he will remain in the East Cambridge jail until the case against him is completed. The issuance of the Presidential warrant indicates the seriousness of the charges against Dr. Muck by the Department of Justice.

It is probable that Dr. Muck will be taken to the Federal Building from the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon for conference with Asst. Dist. Atty. who has charge of the case. What this conference might portend was not indicated.

For a considerable time this morning Mr. Dewey and Asst. Dist. Atty. Shea were in conference on the Muck case with Marshal Mitchell.

Seizure Action

Following the warrant, it is expected that action will be started to seize Dr. Muck's property holdings in Boston, including his home in the Fenway and his securities. As yet no such order has been received, but it is the general opinion that the U. S. Attorney General is in possession of material which is sufficient to render a final judgment against the musician and to order his detention until further proceedings are begun.

Clift Rogers Clapp, attorney for Maj. Henry L. Higginson in affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conferred with Dr. Muck at East Cambridge and stated that he did not represent the orchestra leader in any criminal case nor did he think there would be any court proceedings in which he would appear. Dr. Muck is not detained as a criminal, he said, but under the President's proclamation defining alien enemies. This was the first appearance of counsel in the case.

Government officials are also thought to be watching a prominent woman educator, who is suspected of spreading German propaganda. The woman, it is thought, has been under suspicion for some time, and may shortly be placed under arrest. Her case, however, is not thought to have any connection with that of Dr. Muck.

Herald - March 28, 1918

DR. MUCK FACES FRESH QUIZZING

Federal Attorneys Planning Re-examination of Prisoner

DIRECTOR LEARNS TO SMOKE PIPE IN JAIL

Dr. Karl Muck will undergo a new examination by United States district atorneys at the Federal building within the next few days. This much, and this only, was admitted by federal officials yesterday, but it is considered significant that the new examination follows the raid on the orchestra leader's home in which a number of papers were seized. It is thought that the delay is to give department of justice agents time to investigate "leads" given them by the contents of these papers.

Rumors were rife yesterday and Tuesday of arrests that will follow as the result of Dr. Muck's incarceration, one report even naming a prominent business man of German birth who was in his early youth a member of one of the Kaiser's crack regiments; but the federal officials would neither admit nor deny the truth of any of these. "If any arrests are made the people will be informed," said one of the active heads of the department of justice in Boston. "And unless arrests are made we can't say anything."

See Kaiser's Hand in Coming

It is evident, however, that the federal authorities view Dr. Muck as an important prisoner, aside from all importance he has had as a great musician and a social favorite. They consider it established that his Boston residence was part of the Kaiser's policy of some years ago of "planting" musicians, college professors and other men of great accomplishment and culture in various countries, as part of his gorgeous scheme of eventual world-wide conquest. Dr. Muck, claiming Swiss citizenship, was "loaned by the Kaiser" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and constantly expressed his pride in the fact that his orchestra was comprised almost wholly of Germans and Austrians. At the time Dr. Muck first came to America the Kaiser came in for much complimentary talk on the part of American music lovers for "removing obstacles" to the musician's residence in America. There is a close analogy between the circumstances surrounding the coming to America of Dr. Muck, and the arrival of other men famed in learning, art and literature, who came bearing the Potsdam trade mark. All of these while making themselves acceptable and popular with Americans, lost no opportunity to glorify the "Fatherland."

(Continued on Page Three, Column 3.)

(Continued from Page One.)

A Tennis Incident

An interesting comment, although perhaps far-fetched, on the acumen with which the Kaiser's agents chose men as unofficial representatives of Germany, occurred yesterday during a discussion of the Muck case.

During the international tennis matches of 1914 the great Wilding, the Australian tennis marvel, who died fighting with the allies at Gallipoli, was playing singles with a German army officer at the Allegheny Country Club, just outside of Pittsburgh. Glum, nervous and irascible, Wilding was rather unpopular with the gallery. He easily bested his opponent, a brown-haired, laughing youngster, but the German's efforts were applauded even more than the "cheer for the under dog" spirit would justify. The Belgians were defending Liege at the time the match took place. Immediately after Wilding sailed to join his regiment. The German was interned in Scotland while trying to make his way back to Germany.

Takes Life Easy in Jail

Dr. Muck took life easy at the East Cambridge jail yesterday. He is the [illegible] man to join the interned German [illegible]ony there. He ate three hearty meals, [illegible]ught in from a nearby "one-arm" [illegible]h, and learned to smoke a pipe. The [illegible]ductor is an inveterate cigarette [illegible]oker and was worried when he was [illegible] that he would not be permitted to [illegible]e cigarettes at the jail. He was [illegible]wn the clay pipes, the "T. D.'s" [illegible]n prisoners unable to buy a pipe of [illegible] own, but decided to send out for [illegible]r. It was brought to him, and he [illegible] much of the day to becoming [illegible]ned to it, seeming to enjoy it.

[illegible] Muck visited him at about 1 [illegible], and they talked together for [illegible]n hour. No other visitors will be permitted him as a result of orders from U. S. Dist.-Atty. Boynton's office.

The Swiss consul at New York has interested himself in the case to some extent, but federal agents do not anticipate any protest from the Swiss government. Dr. Muck's father purchased his citizenship from the Swiss in the days when there were lax naturalization laws in the cantons of the mountain democracy, and it is doubtful that Dr. Muck, who, for so long, was under the protection of the Kaiser and spoke so often of his German birth, could convince Switzerland that he has any claim for protection from it.

No Immediate Removal

There was talk yesterday that Dr. Muck will soon be interned in a federal camp in Georgia, or sent to a federal prison, but it is probable that his stay at the East Cambridge jail will be somewhat extended. At the time of his arrest department of justice agents said that he would be at the jail for some time, and it is believed that study of his personal papers has developed even more necessity to have him on hand during the course of the spy probe.

Transcript March 28-1918

U. S. CONSIDERS DR. MUCK DANGER TO PUBLIC PEACE

ATTORNEY GENERAL GREGORY TELEGRAPHS INSTRUCTIONS TO MARSHAL MITCHELL—MRS. JOHN L. GARDNER VISITS THE PRISONER

A telegram was received by United States Marshal Mitchell today from Attorney General Gregory at Washington in which it is stated that Dr. Karl Muck is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States. The marshal was further instructed from Washington to keep the prisoner in a hygienic place.

A representative of Mrs. John L. Gardner called at the office of Marshal Mitchell and secured a pass for the admittance of Mrs. Gardner today to the East Cambridge Jail to see Dr. Muck. Mrs. Muck is absent from Boston, and Mrs. Gardner decided to help cheer the prisoner by her visit.

Later Mrs. Gardner and C. J. Foley, secretary of C. A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, visited Dr. Muck and stayed half an hour. Mrs. Gardner brought jam, jellies, preserves and cake, with which the prisoner was greatly pleased.

Dr. Muck has two pipes now, one a French briar and the other a long-stemmed German meerschaum, and, with a large can of pipe tobacco, smokes first one and then the other with apparent enjoyment. He is a great reader, and spends the greater part of his time in smoking and reading, taking but little exercise in the jail yard.

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey today denied the rumor that the arrest of Dr. Muck was the result of any information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are jealous of the leader's connection with the orchestra. Mr. Dewey declared that his attention had not been previously called to any trouble among musicians relative to Dr. Muck's affairs.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was made under Section 12 of the President's Proclamation of April 6, 1917.

Post March 28-1918

GOING THROUGH MUCK'S PAPERS

Conductor Learns to Smoke a Pipe in Jail

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest as an alien enemy, yesterday smoked a pipe for the first time in his life. At the East Cambridge jail, where he is the best known prisoner confined there for many years, no cigarettes are allowed by the regulations, and Sheriff Fairbairn refused to let down the bars in favor of the orchestra leader. So it being plainly a case of a pipe or nothing, the conductor chose the briar. And after a few wry faces, when he possibly was comparing it with his well-loved "weed," he decided it wasn't so bad, and even appeared to enjoy it. He didn't have to christen a "T. D.," such as are supplied to impecunious prisoners. He bought a French briar of his own.

Dr. Muck's first day in jail was passed very quietly. He had three callers, Mrs. Anita Muck, his wife, Manager Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra and C. J. Foley, Mr. Ellis' secretary.

At the federal building yesterday there appeared to be small chance of further developments in the case for several days at least. Agents of the Department of Justice are going through the mass of correspondence and documents that were seized at Dr. Muck's home and elsewhere, and until this task is finished it is believed Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey will not act.

Advertiser March 28-'18

AWAIT REPORT TO DECIDE MUCK'S FATE

Musician Will Not Be Interned Before U. S. Attorney Acts

The internment of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held as an alien enemy in the East Cambridge Jail, now depends on the report to be submitted to the Department of Justice by the United States Attorney here.

Department of Justice officials in Washington last night announced that the internment of the Boston musician will be definitely decided upon only after the report is received.

A dispatch from Washington gave the information that only a preliminary report had been submitted by the Government investigators. The Department of Justice, according to the dispatch, refused to divulge the contents of this report.

It is understood, however, that the officials are in possession of all the information in the case, which they have gleaned from evidence obtained at Dr. Muck's home, are now in a position to make their report.

Following the search at the Muck home yesterday it was stated that the evidence contained in the papers seized implicated other prominent Bostonians, whose identity the Federal officials refused to reveal.

Armed with three search warrants, the officials conducted exhaustive searches at two places long regarded with suspicion by the government agents.

At the Muck home, No. 50 Fenway, the searching officials did not ask Mrs. Muck, the prisoner's wife, to assist in locating the desired documents.

Following an executive session of the raiding officials in the office of the United States District Attorney in the Federal Building, it was said that the names of the persons appearing in the correspondence will be fully investigated by the government.

The fact that Dr. Muck had engaged counsel to direct his fight for freedom was not regarded seriously yesterday, as alien enemies are not entitled to a hearing necessitating the presence of an attorney.

The conductor spent an uneventful day in the East Cambridge jail yesterday, struggling with a clay pipe he had to smoke instead of the expensive cigarettes with which he usually indulges his craving for the weed.

Globe March 28, 1918

MRS GARDNER VISITS DR MUCK AT EAST CAMBRIDGE

Dr Karl Muck, Symphony Orchestra leader, now confined in the East Cambridge Jail as an enemy alien, was visited yesterday by Mrs John L. Gardner, accompanied by Mr Foley, secretary to Dr Muck. Mrs Muck, it is understood, has gone to New York and Mrs Gardner was granted a permit by United States Marshal Mitchell to visit the prisoner.

The marshal yesterday received a telegram from Atty Gen Gregory instructing the Boston official to hold Dr Muck in a hygienic place and stating that "Muck's presence at large was a danger to the public peace and the safety of the United States."

Post March 29-1918

SCRUTINIZING MUCK PAPERS

Officials May Not Act for Several Days

Federal officials are still busy going over the mass of correspondence and documents seized in connection with the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and it is believed that there will be few developments in the next day or two.

Passes were secured at the office of United States Marshal Mitchell for Mrs. John L. Gardner and Charles J. Foley, secretary of Manager Ellis of the orchestra. Later Mrs. Gardner and Mr. Foley motored over to East Cambride jail, where they immediately went into a conference in the guardroom with the prisoner. Mrs. Muck did not visit her husband yesterday as, it is understood, she is out of town. The visitors brought several hampers of fruit and other food.

Monitor March 29, 1918

DR. KARL MUCK AT WAR OPENING

Current Comment When Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Returned From Germany Called Him Patriot

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—In connection with the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck under the enemy alien proclamation of President Wilson, it may be recalled that certain news comment was published in Boston in October, 1914, relative to the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor's return from Germany. This comment, which seems, in part, at least, to have had the sanction of the Symphony Orchestra management, was printed the day after the conductor reached Boston to assume the direction of the concerts of 1914-15. Excerpts from an account of the conductor's arrival which appeared in a Boston newspaper are as follows:

"Dr. Muck came directly from Berlin, where he had spent the greater part of the time since he left Bayreuth in the middle of August. Shortly before sailing he went to his summer home in Doblebad, in Southern Austria. When Germany ordered the mobilization of its army Saturday, Aug. 1, Dr. Muck was conducting the second performance of 'Parsifal' in Bayreuth. Up to the very beginning of the performance there was much doubt whether it could be given, but finally word came that none of the members of the orchestra need leave Bayreuth before the end of the performance. A good part of the orchestra was in the army within 24 hours.

"Dr. Muck expressed himself as being unwilling to discuss the war. An intense patriot and an absolute believer in his country, he naturally feels very deeply on the subject. He is bitterly disappointed that he is unable to serve Germany in some capacity.

"It was through Dr. Muck's efforts that nearly all of the younger Germans in the orchestra who were in Germany last summer were released from their military duty and were able to return to their work here in Boston. There were, however, several musicians whom he had engaged to fill vacancies in the orchestra who have been unable to come because of being in the army. These places have been filled satisfactorily and there will be no lessening of the artistic value of the orchestra."

Legal aid was secured on Thursday for Dr. Muck, the attorney being Cliff Rogers Clapp, one of the counsel for Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra.

After a conference with Dr. Muck at the jail in Cambridge, Mr. Clapp said that he did not intend to appear in any criminal proceedings, except possibly to go over what evidence might be submitted by Dr. Muck to support the contention that he has not been active in the German cause.

Traveler March 29-1918

NO UPHEAVAL

Notwithstanding the opinion of the New York Sun, there will be no "social upheaval" in Boston because of the arrest of Dr. Muck. The only upheaval worth recording in this city at the present time is a Boston-wide upheaval in behalf of the world against the Hun, accompanied by a tremendous purpose to make the Liberty loan drive a success in New England's capital.

"Social upheavals," whatever importance they may carry in time of peace, pass unnoticed in time of war, when rich and poor, influential and unimportant, are marching and fighting side by side, while their mothers, sisters, wives and sweethearts are working and praying side by side at home.

New York, for example, formerly had a "400" and was obviously proud of. Today she doesn't know whether her inner social circle contains 400 or 4000, and any woman who carries her domestic tribulations into a divorce court of the metropolis has a fair chance of being classified by the press as "a well known member of society."

American March 29-1918

MUCK'S ARREST LEADS TO TALK OF WIRELESS

Discussion in the Back Bay today of the case of Dr. Karl Muck, the Symphony orchestra director, now held in East Cambridge jail as an alien enemy, developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling.

Federal authorities decline to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interested speculation.

According to the story told across the tea tables the person using this wireless is a skilled operator of this means of aerial communication.

This person is also accredited with extreme cunning in covering up the wireless trail, even going to the extent of having a man chop wood on the premises, while the wireless was being operated, in order that the noise of the wood-chopping might drown, or at least detract from, the sound of the wireless.

The Back Bay discussion also turned upon probable location of the operating end of the wireless outfit. One report was that it was located in the basement of a house. Another report established it in a fireplace.

It was assumed in this discussion that a person resourceful and daring enough to operate such a wireless would be equally resourceful in methods of concealment.

Mrs. Muck arrived at the jail shortly before noon today and made a short call on her husband. She brought him, among other things, a bag of pretzels, of which the doctor is said to be very fond.

The couple conversed about family matters for some time in the presence of Sheriff Fairbairn and Mrs. Muck left in her automobile for Boston. Mrs. Muck had been in New York for a few days.

Record March 29-1918

SEE MOVE TO SEIZE MUCK'S PROPERTIES

Pending the Federal investigation of Dr. Karl Muck's activities, a Presidential warrant has been issued for his stay in custody, and he will remain in the East Cambridge jail until the case against him is completed. The issuance of the Presidential warrant indicates the seriousness of the charges against Dr. Muck by the Department of Justice.

It is probable that Dr. Muck will be taken to the Federal Building from the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon for conference with Asst. Dist. Atty. who has charge of the case. What this conference might portend was not indicated.

For a considerable time this morning Mr. Dewey and Asst. Dist. Atty. Shea were in conference on the Muck case with Marshal Mitchell.

Seizure Action

Following the warrant, it is expected that action will be started to seize Dr. Muck's property holdings in Boston, including his home in the Fenway and his securities. As yet no such order has been received, but it is the general opinion that the U. S. Attorney General is in possession of material which is sufficient to render a final judgment against the musician and to order his detention until further proceedings are begun.

Clift Rogers Clapp, attorney for Maj. Henry L. Higginson in affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conferred with Dr. Muck at East Cambridge and stated that he did not represent the orchestra leader in any criminal case nor did he think there would be any court proceedings in which he would appear. Dr. Muck is not detained as a criminal, he said, but under the President's proclamation defining alien enemies. This was the first appearance of counsel in the case.

Government officials are also thought to be watching a prominent woman educator, who is suspected of spreading German propaganda. The woman, it is thought, has been under suspicion for some time, and may shortly be placed under arrest. Her case, however, is not thought to have any connection with that of Dr. Muck.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Advertiser March 29 –

PRESIDENTIAL WARRANT FOR MUCK ISSUED

Washington Officials Say the Charges Against Director Are Serious

MRS. GARDNER VISITS PRISONER AT JAIL

Presents Musician with a Supply of Jams, Jellies and Cakes

A special Washington dispatch to the Boston Daily ADVERTISER stated that a presidential warrant on which Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now in custody as an enemy alien will be held pending further investigation of evidence, was issued through the Department of Justice late yesterday.

In issuing the warrant the Department of Justice officials said that the preliminary reports which they admitted having received from their Boston agents were of such a serious nature as to make its issuance advisable.

Dr. Muck, it was stated, will be held pending final decision on the evidence presented against him. While giving no hint as to what the decision will be, the officials said the Boston conductor would be interned at Fort Oglethorpe for the duration of the war should it prove adverse to him.

GIVE SERIOUS SUSPICIONS.

The issuance of a presidential warrant means that the suspicions entertained against Dr. Muck are of a serious nature.

It was stated here last night that the issuance of the warrant means that Dr. Muck faces specific charges by the Department of Justice. If the evidence brought out in the final investigation tallies with that obtained in the preliminary investigation the internment of the musical director will bring the case to a close.

It was said last night that in the past presidential warrants have been issued in the cases of twenty or thirty aliens brought before the Federal officials. Out of these a number have been released. It is still possible, therefore, that Dr. Muck may escape internment.

Clift Rogers Clapp, of 60 State street, Major Henry L. Higginson's attorney and legal representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon conferred with Dr. Muck at the East Cambridge jail.

Although declining to say what legal action may be taken in the prisoner's case, the lawyer stated that he was his only legal representative at the present. He said his visit to the jail was in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Together with the announcement yesterday of Attorney-General Gregory's telegram to United States Marshal Mitchell to the effect that Dr. Muck's "presence at large is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States," it became known that a prominent woman educator, suspected of being involved in pro-German propaganda, is also being watched by government officials.

This woman, it was said, has been under surveillance for some time and may face arrest. With the information that the investigation of the woman's activities is being conducted by agents of another government department it was indicated by the Federal officials that her case is not in any way connected with that of Dr. Muck.

United States Attorney Judd Dewey refused to make any statement yesterday. Although officials refused to comment on the new suspect, it is understood that the woman has been engaged in pro-German activities since the United States entered the war. It was not said whether her name was found in Dr. Muck's papers seized by the Department of Justice officials.

MRS. GARDNER VISITS MUCK.

It was revealed yesterday that Muck's arrest was made under section 12 of the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, which states that an alien enemy reasonably suspected of aiding the enemy is subject to summary arrest and confinement in such penitentiary, prison, jail, military camp or other place of detention as may be directed by the President.

Amonog the visitors to the East Cambridge Jail yesterday were Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, who presented Dr. Muck with a supply of jams, jellies and cakes, and several Back Bay patronesses of art who conversed with the musician about Bach's "Passion according to Matthew."

Herald March 29 – 1918

MAJ. HIGGINSON'S LAWYER MUCK'S

R. Clapp Calls on Detained Orchestra Leader in Cambridge Jail

QUESTION OF SOCIAL STATUS IS RAISED

Clift Rogers Clapp, an attorney at 60 State street, conferred with Dr. Karl Muck at the East Cambridge jail yesterday afternoon, and after the conference said that the newspaper stories about Dr. Muck were all wrong, that newspaper writers just cut loose with their imagination and there was no occasion for saying anything about the case.

He then said that Dr. Muck was not detained as a criminal, but under the proclamation of the President defining enemy aliens. Dr. Muck did not consider that he was an enemy alien, and whether he was or was not was a question on which lawyers might differ.

Has Acted for Maj. Higginson

Mr. Clapp has been Maj. Henry L. Higginson's attorney in many other matters and in affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and he said his visit to the Tast Cambridge jail yesterday was as legal representative of the organization. Last night he declared that he was the only legal representative Dr. Muck has at present. He declined to make any statement as to any action that may be taken in Dr. Muck's behalf.

Mr. Clapp's application to the United States marshal's office for a permit to visit Dr. Muck at the jail was met with immediate compliance and he went at once to East Cambridge, where he talked with the prisoner for a long time. This was the first appearance of counsel in the case, though it was said immediately after Dr. Muck was arrested that officials of the Symphony Orchestra had discussed the affair with counsel.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's claims that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the government has already declared that he does.

Mr. Clapp said he did not consider that he represented Dr. Muck in any criminal case or that there would be any court proceedings in which he would appear, but the case was different from others and would have to be considered.

The authorities at Washington yesterday issued a Presidential warrant for Dr. Muck's stay in custody, pending further investigation of his pro-German activities, and late yesterday afternoon it was definitely decided that he would remain at the East Cambridge jail until the federal officials complete the case against him as an enemy alien. Additional arrests are expected to follow.

Following a declaration of his status as an enemy it was expected that the custodian of enemy alien property would begin an action to seize Dr. Muck's property holdings in Boston, including his $30,000 home on Fenway, as well as his securities, which are thought to be in New York, but no word reached the Boston district officers last night. Mrs. Muck was reported as having gone to New York for a two days' visit, but no explanation of her trip was forthcoming from Dr. Muck's business representatives.

Standing of His Friends

Numerous questions were raised by federal officers yesterday in the Muck case, as it is now officially listed, and among them was that of the scope within which his former friends might assist him. An opinion was expressed that when Dr. Muck became officially an alien enemy his status as an artist and musician left him simply as an enemy, and that former friends and admirers who aided him with sympathy or comforted him with material things were violating the law.

Many Bostonians have entertained him in their homes and some were sponsors for him at other places. Mrs. Muck received the same courtesies, and now that her husband is an enemy alien she is also under the ban, and the question as to the proprieties has arisen. A majority of Boston society leaders have answered that question with an announcement that Dr. Muck and Mrs. Muck are no longer members of those circles within which they were formerly so prominent and welcome.

The federal officials received many assurances yesterday from persons who were warm friends of Dr. Muck when he was at liberty that their friendships were not un-American in the slightest degree, because they received Dr. Muck as an artist and not as a citizen of another nation, and since he is now an enemy alien their obligations are at an end.

Officials were reticent regarding the discoveries made during their search of Dr. Muck's letters and other papers, but did say that no mistake was made in taking Dr. Muck into custody. An opinion was also expressed that the United States attorney general was in possession of sufficient evidence to warrant a final judgment against the orchestra leader and to order his detention until further proceedings were begun.

No U. S. Citizen Suspected

A story, which gained circuation yesterday, that among the persons who might be arrested was a former officer of the German military establishment, led to a statement at the federal building that no American citizen was under suspicion in connection with the revelations concerning Dr. Muck.

Asst.-U. S. Dist.-Atty. Judd Dewey made no further statements about the case yesterday, but he received several reports on it from investigating officers. He also set out to trace some of Dr. Muck's papers and to find out the manner in which they were connected with affairs of interest to Germany and German sympathizers.

Dr. Muck spent the day at the East Cambridge jail much as other prisoners, except that he received more attention. He had several visitors and had the privilege of meeting them in Sheriff Fairbairn's office. In the absence of Mrs. Muck, Mrs. John L. Gardner, accompanied by C. J. Foley, went to the jail with food and delicacies for the prisoner and they remained in conversation with him for more than half an hour.

Arrangements for future concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been made, and it was announced yesterday that Ernst Schmidt, assistant conductor, who has conducted many times in Dr. Muck's absence, will continue to fill his place for the rest of the season. The Pop concerts will be given, and, as far as business officers of the orchestra now know, there will be no change in the schedule. Mr. Schmidt has been connected with the orchestra for four years.

Herald - March 30-1918

19TH CONCERT OF SYMPHONY

Mozart Composition Is Featured by Orchestra—Schmidt Conductor

PROGRAM WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE

The 19th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Cherubini, Overture to "Les Abencerages"; Mozart, Clarinet Concerto (first time at these concerts); Rameau, Ballet Suite; Schumann, Symphony in B-flat Major No. 1. Mr. Schmidt conducted.

Mr. Sand, the first clarinet of the orchestra, is the second to play a solo at these concerts. Mr. Strasser played Weber's Concertino in E-flat early in 1884. The oboe, flute and horn have been heard as solo instruments, but the wind choir, as a rule, has not been largely represented in this manner. Years ago the bassoon in many European orchestras insisted on the privilege. Many of us have heard the trombone play "with great expression" Stigelli's "Tear" or some other sentimental ditty.

Mozart wrote this concerto two months and a few days before his death. He wrote it for a famous clarinetist, Anton Stadler, who, outside of his ability as a virtuoso, was not a desirable or a restful companion. He was a toss-pot, a loose-liver, and he had a trick of borrowing money and not repaying it. Mozart, who was very poor, was fascinated by him, enjoying his animal spirits, his jests that set the tavern table in a roar. He lent him money. He wrote for Stadler this concerto and the clarinet quintet.

The concerto is an amiable bit of music. Mozart wrote it in a day. No doubt he could have easily written one each day of the week, so that Stadler could have had one for daily use, as some men possess a case of seven razors. The music has all the Mozartean flavor. It is suave, graceful, spontaneous, with the slight tinge of melancholy in certain pages that one finds even in joyous scenes of "Le Nozze di Figaro" and "The Magic Flute"; an inconsequential piece on the whole. Mr. Sand played the concerto expressively. His tone was agreeable; his mechanism was fluent and polished. The audience was greatly pleased.

The other compositions do not call for comment. Cherubini's overture and the charming music of Rameau were played last season. Schumann's Symphony is perhaps too familiar.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Dvorak, Symphony "From the New World"; Debussy, Nocturne "Nuages" (In Memoriam); Charpentier, Suite "Impressions of Italy."

Post March 30-1918

SCHMIDT AT HELM WITH SYMPHONY

Violinist Conducts Orchestra in Place of Dr. Muck

BY OLIN DOWNES

Cherubini's overture to "Les Abencerrages," Mozart's A major concerto for clarinet and orchestra, ballet music by Rameau and Schumann's "Spring" symphony made the programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Ernst Schmidt conducted.

BRILLIANT PERFORMANCE

The orchestral performances were brilliant. Schumann's symphony appeared as the appropriate harbinger of warmth and sunshine, and never a composer rejoiced more whole-heartedly at such a prospect than Schumann. The pulse of spring, its languor, its accumulating energy, are in this music.

A clarinet concerto is an uncommon thing in these days. Mozart's work is brimful of melody, particularly the slow movement, and it was excellently played by Mr. Sand, who was warmly applauded.

The overture of Cherubini is a stirring and dramatic piece, and it would be difficult to imagine anything more charming and piquant than the arrangement of music by Rameau played yesterday.

The glories of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is not an orchestra that depends on any one living conductor for either its reputation or its efficiency, were again displayed. The audience applauded heartily, and rose to its feet during the playing of the national anthem.

American March 30-1918

CLARINET SOLO WELL PLAYED BY SAND

'Les Abencerages' and 'Spring' Classic Skilfully Interpreted by Boston Symphony

By FRED J. McISAAC.

There are five more pairs of Symphony concerts to be given in Boston this season, and it seems to have been settled that Ernst Schmidt will conduct for the rest of the year, always provided that the jail doors which closed on Dr. Muck do not open again and release him with a clean bill of health.

Mr. Schmidt made an excellent impression at yesterday's concert—they were wont to call the Friday afternoon affairs public rehearsals, but do so no longer.

The outstanding feature of the program was a Mozart clarinet concerto, which was played for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony, and you don't hear a Mozart composition that is to all intents and purposes brand new, every day.

The clarinet is not ordinarily considered a solo instrument, the library of clarinet concertos is very small, and the number of clarinetists who have appeared as soloists with big orchestras in recent years, very small.

Nevertheless it is an instrument of a considerable degree of flexibility with rich and mellow tone in its lower registers. It was evidently highly considered by Mozart. If the clarinet concerto were as long as the average violin concerto I suspect we would get very tired of its reedy voice, but Mozart was content with three short movements which were bright, lively and gushing with melody of sweetness and charm.

Albert Sand, the leading clarinetist of the orchestra, played the solo instrument with great brilliancy and fine effect, and the applause was by no means perfunctory.

That dainty little ballet suite arranged by Kretzschmar from works by Rameau, the Parisian composer of the reign of Louis Quinze, which made a sensation when introduced by Dr. Muck last season, was played with equally good effect. A Cherubini overture, that to the forgotten opera, "Les Abencerages," completed the first half of the program and Schumann's immortal "Spring" symphony filled the second half.

Traveller March 29-1918

Ernst Schmidt Enemy Alien

Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the absence of Dr. Karl Muck, is a registered enemy alien —a German.

He registered in Boston under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States government.

Globe March 30 - 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Globe 3/30

Yesterday's Symphony concert contained one novelty, Mozart's concerto for clarinet, Albert Sand, the leading clarinetist of the orchestra, appearing as soloist. Cherubini's Overture to "Les Abencerages," Rameau's Ballet Suite and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony completed the program. Ernest Schmidt conducted.

Mr Sand's performance of his part in the concerto was highly enjoyable, for it displayed his skill as executant to an advantage not possible when the clarinet is but one of many instruments in the orchestra. The three movements of the Mozart work are cleverly contrasted and enable the soloist, if possessed of sufficient ability, to practically reveal all the resources of the "perverse little tube."

Under Mr Sand's tractable fingers the voices of the clarinet were made sweet and expressive, the numerous figurations of the themes were executed with splendid clarity and celerity and there were no uncertainties about the attack. The tones were full, prompt and true to pitch. The piece is scored for strings and wood-winds and is mainly interesting as a composition by which the capabilities of the clarinet are shown. Mr Sand was cordially received.

The various dance themes of Rameau's Ballet were performed delightfully, each mood being given its proper musical significance, and the Cherubini number was made pleasing more by reason of interpretation than by the material provided. The concert closed with the Schumann work, played in the usual impressive manner.

MAY SEIZE MUCK'S HOME

Speed up Inquiry Into Musician's Alleged Activities

The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have already been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's claims that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the government has already declared that he does.

Monitor March 30-1918

KARL MUCK HAD INTENT IN RESIGNATION

Monitor 3/30

BOSTON, Mass.—Dr. Karl Muck's resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted before his arrest by officials of the United States Department of Justice, and was to have taken effect at the close of the Boston concerts in May, according to acknowledgment which representatives of the orchestra manager made today. The conductor himself, it is said, desired the resignation to be accepted. After Henry L. Higginson, the sustainer of the orchestra, wrote to Dr. Muck early in March, accepting the resignation, an application was entered, it is understood, for passports for the conductor, that he might leave the United States.

Traveller 3/30/18

SCHMIDT LEADS AT SYMPHONY

The enjoyment in evidence throughout the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday afternoon was in itself a tribute to the orchestra, the acting conductor, Ernst Schmidt, and Dr. Muck. The program was: Cherubini, Overture to "Les Abencerages"; Mozart Clarinet Concerto (first time at these concerts); Rameau, Ballet Suite; Schumann, Symphony in B-flat Major No. 1.

When an orchestra can give such a concert without the services of its regular leader there is no question of the artistry of the players. The number of the afternoon was the symphony and here Mr. Schmidt was at his best. Mr. Sand made all possible of the clarinet number. There was also some notable oboe, bassoon and trombone playing in the course of the afternoon.

The program of the concerts next week will be as folows: Dvorak, Symphony "From the New World"; Debussy, Nocturne "Nuages" (In Memoriam); Charpentier, Suite "Impressions of Italy."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Advertiser march 29 -

PRESID... W...

Washington ... the Charges Agai... rector Are Serious

MRS. GARDNER VISITS PRISONER AT JAIL

Presents Musician with a Supply of Jams, Jellies and Cakes

A special Washington dispatch to the Boston Daily ADVERTISER stated that a presidential warrant on which Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now in custody as an enemy alien will be held pending further investigation of evidence, was issued through the Department of Justice late yesterday.

In issuing the warrant the Department of Justice officials said that the preliminary reports which they admitted having received from their Boston agents were of such a serious nature as to make its issuance advisable.

Dr. Muck, it was stated, will be held pending final decision on the evidence presented against him. While giving no hint as to what the decision will be, the officials said the Boston conductor would be interned at Fort Oglethorpe for the duration of the war should it prove adverse to him.

...E SERIOUS SUSPICIONS.

The issuance of a presidential warrant means that the suspicions entertained against Dr. Muck are of a serious nature.

It was stated here last night that the issuance of the warrant means that Dr. Muck faces specific charges by the Department of Justice. If the evidence brought out in the final investigation tallies with that obtained in the preliminary investigation the internment of the musical director will bring the case to a close.

It was said last night that in the past presidential warrants have been issued in the cases of twenty or thirty aliens brought before the Federal officials. Out of these a number have been released. It is still possible, therefore, that Dr. Muck may escape internment.

Clift Rogers Clapp, of 60 State street, Major Henry L. Higginson's attorney and legal representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday afternoon conferred with Dr. Muck at the East Cambridge jail.

Although declining to say what legal action may be taken in the prisoner's case, the lawyer stated that he was his only legal representative at the present. He said his visit to the jail was in behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Together with the announcement yesterday of Attorney-General Gregory's telegram to United States Marshal Mitchell to the effect that Dr. Muck's "presence at large is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States," it became known that a prominent woman educator, suspected of being involved in pro-German propaganda, is also being watched by government officials.

This woman, it was said, has been under surveillance for some time and may face arrest. With the information that the investigation of the woman's activities is being conducted by agents of another government department it was indicated by the Federal officials that her case is not in any way connected with that of Dr. Muck.

Herald March 29 - 1918

MAJ. HIGGINSON'S LAWYER MUCK'S

C. R. Clapp Calls on Detained Orchestra Leader in Cambridge Jail

QUESTION OF SOCIAL STATUS IS RAISED

Clift Rogers Clapp, an attorney at 60 State street, conferred with Dr. Karl Muck at the East Cambridge jail yesterday afternoon, and after the conference said that the newspaper stories about Dr. Muck were all wrong, that newspaper writers just cut loose with their imagination and there was no occasion for saying anything about the case.

He then said that Dr. Muck was not detained as a criminal, but under the proclamation of the President defining enemy aliens. Dr. Muck did not consider that he was an enemy alien, and whether he was or was not was a question on which lawyers might differ.

Has Acted for Maj. Higginson

Mr. Clapp has been Maj. Henry L. Higginson's attorney in many other matters and in affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and he said his visit to the Tast Cambridge jail yesterday was as legal representative of the organization. Last night he declared that he was the only legal representative Dr. Muck has at present. He declined to make any statement as to any action that may be taken in Dr. Muck's behalf.

Mr. Clapp's application to the United States marshal's office for a permit to visit Dr. Muck at the jail was met with immediate compliance and he went at once to East Cambridge, where he talked with the prisoner for a long time. This was the first appearance of counsel in the case, though it was said immediately after Dr. Muck was arrested that officials of the Symphony Orchestra had discussed the affair with counsel.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's claims that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the government has already declared that he does.

Mr. Clapp said he did not consider that he represented Dr. Muck in any criminal case or that there would be any court proceedings in which he would appear, but the case was different from others and would have to be considered.

The authorities at Washington yesterday issued a Presidential warrant for Dr. Muck's stay in custody, pending further investigation of his pro-German activities, and late yesterday afternoon it was definitely decided that he would remain at the East Cambridge jail until the federal officials complete the case against him as an enemy alien. Additional arrests are expected to follow.

Following a declaration of his status as an enemy it was expected that the custodian of enemy alien property would begin an action to seize Dr. Muck's property holdings in Boston, including his $30,000 home on Fenway, as well as his securities, which are thought to be in New York, but no word reached the Boston district officers last night. Mrs. Muck was reported as having gone to New York for a two days' visit, but no explanation of her trip was forthcoming from Dr. Muck's business representatives.

Standing of His Friends

Numerous questions were raised by federal officers yesterday in the Muck case, as it is now officially listed, and among them was that of the scope within which his former friends might assist him. An opinion was expressed that when Dr. Muck became officially an alien enemy his status as an artist and musician left him simply as an enemy, and that former friends and admirers who aided him with sympathy or comforted him with material things were violating the law.

Many Bostonians have entertained him in their homes and some were sponsors for him at other places. Mrs. Muck received the same courtesies, and now that her husband is an enemy alien she is also under the ban, and the question as to the proprieties has arisen. A majority of Boston society leaders have answered that question with an announcement that Dr. Muck and Mrs. Muck are no longer members of those circles within which they were formerly so prominent and welcome.

The federal officials received many assurances yesterday from persons who were warm friends of Dr. Muck when he was at liberty that their friendships were not un-American in the slightest degree, because they received Dr. Muck as an artist and not as a citizen of another nation, and since he is now an enemy alien their obligations are at an end.

Officials were reticent regarding the discoveries made during their search of Dr. Muck's letters and other papers, but did say that no mistake was made in taking Dr. Muck into custody. An opinion was also expressed that the United States attorney general was in possession of sufficient evidence to warrant a final judgment against the orchestra leader and to order his detention until further proceedings were begun.

No U. S. Citizen Suspected

A story, which gained circuation yesterday, that among the persons who might be arrested was a former officer of the German military establishment, led to a statement at the federal building that no American citizen was under suspicion in connection with the revelations concerning Dr. Muck.

Asst.-U. S. Dist.-Atty. Judd Dewey made no further statements about the case yesterday, but he received several reports on it from investigating officers. He also set out to trace some of Dr. Muck's papers and to find out the manner in which they were connected with affairs of interest to Germany and German sympathizers.

Dr. Muck spent the day at the East Cambridge jail much as other prisoners, except that he received more attention. He had several visitors and had the privilege of meeting them in Sheriff Fairbairn's office. In the absence of Mrs. Muck, Mrs. John L. Gardner, accompanied by C. J. Foley, went to the jail with food and delicacies for the prisoner and they remained in conversation with him for more than half an hour.

Arrangements for future concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been made, and it was announced yesterday that Ernst Schmidt, assistant conductor, who has conducted many times in Dr. Muck's absence, will continue to fill his place for the rest of the season. The Pop concerts will be given, and, as far as business officers of the orchestra now know, there will be no change in the schedule. Mr. Schmidt has been connected with the orchestra for four years.

Herald - March 30-1918

19TH CONCERT OF SYMPHONY

Mozart Composition Is Featured by Orchestra—Schmidt Conductor

PROGRAM WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE

The 19th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Cherubini, Overture to "Les Abencerages"; Mozart, Clarinet Concerto (first time at these concerts); Rameau, Ballet Suite; Schumann, Symphony in B-flat Major No. 1. Mr. Schmidt conducted.

Mr. Sand, the first clarinet of the orchestra, is the second to play a solo at these concerts. Mr. Strasser played Weber's Concertino in E-flat early in 1884. The oboe, flute and horn have been heard as solo instruments, but the wind choir, as a rule, has not been largely represented in this manner. Years ago the bassoon in many European orchestras insisted on the privilege. Many of us have heard the trombone play "with great expression" Stigelli's "Tear" or some other sentimental ditty.

Mozart wrote this concerto two months and a few days before his death. He wrote it for a famous clarinetist, Anton Stadler, who, outside of his ability as a virtuoso, was not a desirable or a restful companion. He was a toss-pot, a loose-liver, and he had a trick of borrowing money and not repaying it. Mozart, who was very poor, was fascinated by him, enjoying his animal spirits, his jests that set the tavern table in a roar. He lent him money. He wrote for Stadler this concerto and the clarinet quintet.

The concerto is an amiable bit of music. Mozart wrote it in a day. No doubt he could have easily written one each day of the week, so that Stadler could have had one for daily use, as some men possess a case of seven razors. The music has all the Mozartean flavor. It is suave, graceful, spontaneous, with the slight tinge of melancholy in certain pages that one finds even in joyous scenes of "Le Nozze di Figaro" and "The Magic Flute"; an inconsequential piece on the whole. Mr. Sand played the concerto expressively. His tone was agreeable; his mechanism was fluent and polished. The audience was greatly pleased.

The other compositions do not call for comment. Cherubini's overture and the charming music of Rameau were played last season. Schumann's Symphony is perhaps too familiar.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Dvorak, Symphony "From the New World"; Debussy, Nocturne "Nuages" (In Memoriam); Charpentier, Suite "Impressions of Italy."

Post March 30-1918

SCHMIDT AT HELM WITH SYMPHONY

Violinist Conducts Orchestra in Place of Dr. Muck

BY OLIN DOWNES

Cherubini's overture to "Les Abencerrages," Mozart's A major concerto for clarinet and orchestra, ballet music by Rameau and Schumann's "Spring" symphony made the programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Ernst Schmidt conducted.

BRILLIANT PERFORMANCE

The orchestral performances were brilliant. Schumann's symphony appeared as the appropriate harbinger of warmth and sunshine, and never a composer rejoiced more whole-heartedly at such a prospect than Schumann. The pulse of spring, its languor, its accumulating energy, are in this music.

A clarinet concerto is an uncommon thing in these days. Mozart's work is brimful of melody, particularly the slow movement, and it was excellently played by Mr. Sand, who was warmly applauded.

The overture of Cherubini is a stirring and dramatic piece, and it would be difficult to imagine anything more charming and piquant than the arrangement of music by Rameau played yesterday.

The glories of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is not an orchestra that depends on any one living conductor for either its reputation or its efficiency, were again displayed. The audience applauded heartily, and rose to its feet during the playing of the national anthem.

American March 30-1918

CLARINET SOLO WELL PLAYED BY SAND

'Les Abencerages' and 'Spring' Classic Skilfully Interpreted by Boston Symphony

By FRED J. McISAAC.

There are five more pairs of Symphony concerts to be given in Boston this season, and it seems to have been settled that Ernst Schmidt will conduct for the rest of the year, always provided that the jail doors which closed on Dr. Muck do not open again and release him with a clean bill of health.

Mr. Schmidt made an excellent impression at yesterday's concert—they were wont to call the Friday afternoon affairs public rehearsals, but do so no longer.

The outstanding feature of the program was a Mozart clarinet concerto, which was played for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony, and you don't hear a Mozart composition that is to all intents and purposes brand new, every day.

The clarinet is not ordinarily considered a solo instrument, the library of clarinet concertos is very small, and the number of clarinetists who have appeared as soloists with big orchestras in recent years, very small.

Nevertheless it is an instrument of a considerable degree of flexibility with rich and mellow tone in its lower registers. It was evidently highly considered by Mozart. If the clarinet concerto were as long as the average violin concerto I suspect we would get very tired of its reedy voice, but Mozart was content with three short movements which were bright, lively and gushing with melody of sweetness and charm.

Albert Sand, the leading clarinetist of the orchestra, played the solo instrument with great brilliancy and fine effect, and the applause was by no means perfunctory.

That dainty little ballet suite arranged by Kretzschmar from works by Rameau, the Parisian composer of the reign of Louis Quinze, which made a sensation when introduced by Dr. Muck last season, was played with equally good effect. A Cherubini overture, that to the forgotten opera, "Les Abencerages," completed the first half of the program and Schumann's immortal "Spring' symphony filled the second half.

Traveller March 29-1918

Ernst Schmidt Enemy Alien

Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the absence of Dr. Karl Muck, is a registered enemy alien —a German.

He registered in Boston under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States government.

Globe March 30 - 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Globe 3/30

Yesterday's Symphony concert contained one novelty, Mozart's concerto for clarinet, Albert Sand, the leading clarinetist of the orchestra, appearing as soloist. Cherubini's Overture to "Les Abencerages," Rameau's Ballet Suite and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony completed the program. Ernest Schmidt conducted.

Mr Sand's performance of his part in the concerto was highly enjoyable, for it displayed his skill as executant to an advantage not possible when the clarinet is but one of many instruments in the orchestra. The three movements of the Mozart work are cleverly contrasted and enable the soloist, if possessed of sufficient ability, to practically reveal all the resources of the "perverse little tube."

Under Mr Sand's tractable fingers the voices of the clarinet were made sweet and expressive, the numerous figurations of the themes were executed with splendid clarity and celerity and there were no uncertainties about the attack. The tones were full, prompt and true to pitch. The piece is scored for strings and wood-winds and is mainly interesting as a composition by which the capablities of the clarinet are shown. Mr Sand was cordially received.

The various dance themes of Rameau's Ballet were performed delightfully, each mood being given its proper musical significance, and the Cherubini number was made pleasing more by reason of interpretation than by the material provided. The concert closed with the Schumann work, played in the usual impressive manner.

MAY SEIZE MUCK'S HOME

Speed up Inquiry Into Musician's Alleged Activities

The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have already been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's claims that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the government has already declared that he does.

Monitor March 30-1918

KARL MUCK HAD ...ENT IN RESIGNATION

Monitor 3/30

BOSTON, Mass.—Dr. Karl Muck's resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted before his arrest by officials of the United States Department of Justice, and was to have taken effect at the close of the Boston concerts in May, according to acknowledgment which representatives of the orchestra manager made today. The conductor himself, it is said, desired the resignation to be accepted. After Henry L. Higginson, the sustainer of the orchestra, wrote to Dr. Muck early in March, accepting the resignation, an application was entered, it is understood, for passports for the conductor, that he might leave the United States.

Traveller 3/30/18

SCHMIDT LEADS AT SYMPHONY

The enjoyment in evidence throughout the concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday afternoon was in itself a tribute to the orchestra, the acting conductor, Ernst Schmidt, and Dr. Muck. The program was: Cherubini, Overture to "Les Abencerages"; Mozart Clarinet Concerto (first time at these concerts); Rameau, Ballet Suite; Schumann, Symphony in B-flat Major No. 1.

When an orchestra can give such a concert without the services of its regular leader there is no question of the artistry of the players. The number of the afternoon was the symphony and here Mr. Schmidt was at his best. Mr. Sand made all possible of the clarinet number. There was also some notable oboe, bassoon and trombone playing in the course of the afternoon.

The program of the concerts next week will be as folows: Dvorak, Symphony "From the New World"; Debussy, Nocturne "Nuages" (In Memoriam); Charpentier, Suite "Impressions of Italy."

Advertiser March 30, 1918

Advertiser 3/30

ORCHESTRA FEELS DR. MUCK'S ABSENCE

Ernst Schmidt Conducts Symphony Concert Ably, However

WARM WELCOME TO NEW LEADER

Mozart's Concerto for Clarinette Rendered by Albert Sand

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.
Mr. Schmidt conducts. Mr. Albert Sand, soloist.

PROGRAMME.
Cherubini. "Les Abencerages" Overture.
Mozart. Concerto for Clarinet, Mr. Albert Sand, soloist.
Rameau. Ballet Suite.
Schumann. First Symphony, B-flat.

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

Astyanax could not swing the sword of Hector; Mr. Ernst Schmidt can scarcely swing the baton of Dr. Muck. Yet all credit must be given to him for the manner in which he has taken control of the great orchestra in the sudden emergency caused by the arrest of Dr. Muck. The programme of yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall was, however, so entirely conservative that he scarcely had a list better adapted for the conductor used to orchestral routine. Even Schumann has become conservative in these ultra-modern days. Not one of the numbers called for larger forces than the regular "classical orchestra."

Nevertheless we felt that the great conductor would have put more dramatic power, certainly more elasticity, into Cherubini's overture. That old Italian was able to give powerful effects without employing large forces, and he used strong contrasts on occasion. But why is his best overture, "The Water-Carrier," altogether shelved? We would have preferred it to "Les Abencerages." The direct and melodic touches made their due effect, however, and the overture won much applause. And Mr. Schmidt was greeted with considerable warmth when he came to the conductor's stand, a tribute which must at once have put him at ease.

We can scarcely understand why Mr. Sand chose Mozart's clarinette concerto for the display of his instrument. Mozart was, to be sure, the father of symphonic clarinette-playing. He first introduced the instrument into symphony in 1788, and he added most important clarinette touches to Handel's "Messiah." Handel himself, by the way, once used the clarinette in his "Richard I.," but discarded it as an impracticable instrument, which it was in his time. Mozart, although fond of the instrument, did not realize its possibilities, nor did even Beethoven. They knew but little of the spectral color which is attainable in its lower register—the Chalumeau—and failed to bring out its wonderful contrasts. It was Weber and Mendelssohn who first really comprehended its possibilities, and possibly because they were both intimate with the greatest clarinette player of the world, the grandfather of the late Professor Baermann. So that Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony presented the first really great use of clarinette, and one of Weber's clarinette concertos would have been more striking than the Mozart composition given yesterday afternoon.

But there were touches in the work that were more modern than Mozart. The cadenzas and some of the embellishments brought the full capacity of the instrument, the king of the woodwind, into play, and Mr. Sand's execution was something to grow enthusiastic over. Greater flexibility could not be imagined, and the straightforward, symmetrical form had its peculiar charm. Mr. Sand was recalled three times at the close of the work, and his playing richly deserved the tribute.

The Rameau Ballet Suite took us back to an epoch when music was not written to be puzzled over, but to please. Rameau, by the way, imagined that in his epoch (first half of the eighteenth century) music had come to the end of all possible combinations. "There is nothing new to say," he exclaimed (in 1722), "music is moribund." Nevertheless a few rather famous masters came after that time. The suite is daintily orchestrated by Kretschmar and is full of a naive charm. It is the kind of music which both musician and non-musician can unite in enjoying, a charming compromise between the classical and popular. It contained some excellent oboe and bassoon work, both favorite instruments for "obbligato" at the time it was written, and these passages were exquisitely played in yesterday's concert. We might have craved a little more Gallic elasticity in its movements, but it was all very agreeable and evidently appreciated.

Schumann's best symphony came as a benediction to a concert easy to play and easy to comprehend. This was the work that Schumann wrote in his exuberant joy after his marriage to Clara Wieck, and he always wrote best when he was happiest. What triumph there is in the first and last movements! What tenderness in the Larghetto, and how well the trombones played the noble transition at its end into the piquant Scherzo! One can only wonder that the English were so long deaf to its glorious beauties. It was excellently read and executed. Mr. Schmidt was at his best in the reading of this symphony.

If Dr. Muck had foreseen his absence from the orchestra he could not have arranged a better program to sit lightly upon the shoulders of his successor.

Globe March 31

RESIGNATION OF DR MUCK ACCEPTED

Dr Karl Muck's resignation as conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra has been accepted by Maj Henry L. Higginson, who has had it under consideration since early in November, a couple of days after the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" on request at Providence.

Dr Muck, who is now lodged in jail as an alien enemy, and Maj Higginson have understood since March 6 that Dr Muck would retire May 4 at the conclusion of the present series of concerts.

JOSEPH M. KILEY

Monitor March 30-

Monitor 3/30

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—In Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented its nineteenth program, with Albert Sand, clarinetist, appearing in a solo number. The selections comprised Cherubini's "Abencerrages" overture, Mozart's concerto for clarinet and orchestra, Rameau's ballet suite, arranged by Kretzschmar, and Schumann's first symphony in B flat major.

The pieces chosen for this program are among the easier ones of the repertory, being the kind generally used at Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts for filling in the spaces around heavy numbers. Very often it has happened in recent seasons that such pieces have been played in a spirit of more or less careless improvisation. Schumann symphonies have even been played in a spirit of something like contempt.

As far as the performance of Friday afternoon was concerned, the condescending manner was absent. The simply scored "Abencerrages" overture and the judiciously arranged ballet suite from the old French works, "Acante" and "Platée," were played seriously.

Too seriously, did a listener here and there in the audience think? They were, indeed, played with needlessly large sonority, their thin instrumentation considered. But the protesting listener would only have to remind himself of what the training of the orchestra has been for the past 10 years, to understand that superfluity of tone in its performance of old-school music is inevitable. Under the artistic discipline that has characterized the institution of late, little fishes must talk like whales; Cherubini and Rameau must sound like Bruckner and Strauss.

The performance of Mr. Sand in the clarinet concerto was exquisite in technical finish and persuasive in expression. The interpretation of the Schumann symphony was brilliant in execution and truthful in its setting forth of Schumann's moods.

Transcript March 30-1918

Transcript 3/30

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

PRESENT SIGNS OF AUSPICIOUS FUTURE

Again the Orchestra Proves Itself an Institution and Mr. Schmidt Pleasures a Cordial Audience—In Novel Experience a Concerto for Clarinet—Old Music from Cherubini and Rameau and Schumann's Perennial Symphony of the Spring

EVEN more than at the exceptional choral concert of last Tuesday, the Symphony Orchestra, at its regular concert of yesterday afternoon, stood clear and firm, dependent on the abilities of no single man, upon the good or the ill will of any group in the community. Dr. Muck was, indeed, the ablest conductor it had ever known, carrying it to a pitch of technical perfection and imparting eloquence that before his time it had never attained; but another may succeed him, as Mr. Schmidt did on Friday, give pleasure to his hearers, and receive applause deservedly won by intelligent and expert handling of music and band. This or that company may decline to frequent the concerts from motives wholly extraneous to the quality of pieces or performance. Another may, for like reasons, the more assiduously seek them. Between, and for reliance, by every sign of Friday afternoon, stands the public that has supported the concerts in the past and that bids fair to support them in the future. Aside from the anticipated absences, on a holy day in many churches, the audience yesterday was of the usual numbers, interest, temper. To the casual eye, it seemed nearly to fill the hall, while in the unreserved second balcony and with no noted "soloist" for "drawing" power, it was hardly less than on any afternoon of the musical year.

These are, indeed, happy auguries for a future which should now be the chief concern of both those who direct the affairs of the orchestra and those who week after week and year and year sit before it. A chapter in its history is definitely closed, as it was, for example, when Mr. Gericke finally departed. For months, it has been evident that Dr. Muck could not be prudently continued as conductor in the face of the recurring attacks and counter-attacks over him. To do so would have jeopardized, was jeopardizing, the morale of the orchestra and of its public. Outside hands have now removed Dr. Muck, definitively, to another place and Mr. Schmidt, eager to fulfill his task to the best of his ability, will conclude the work of the year much as it has been planned. For the season to come, it is absurd to say, as some extremists are saying, that there is no conductor in the United States, England, Italy, worthy to be trusted with the Symphony Orchestra, able to maintain its standards and prestige. For four years Mr. Fiedler, for four years Mr. Paur led that orchestra and the public found pleasure in its concerts, gave them hearty support. In all fact and reason are not Mr. Stock, Mr. Stokowski, even Mr. Gabrilowitsch, in America, Sir Henry Wood and Sir Thomas Beecham in England, Mr. Toscanini in Italy, Mr. Ysaye may be, quite as able to conduct the Symphony Concerts and sustain the quality of them as were Mr. Fiedler or Mr. Paur? So long as the orchestra abides, able and interesting conductors will not be lacking for it. So long as it abides, by the signs of present and past, a pleasured public will not be wanting to the concerts, here and in other cities. Unless wisdom—or better, plain common sense—close its eyes and shut its ears, one of the chief glories, local, national, international, of the arts in general, of music in particular, is not to be consumed even by the heats of a "world war." The orchestra, still intact and in full mettle, is the foundation of the Symphony Concerts; the conductor, whoever he may be, is only the capstone.

Clear token of these things were the interest, the pleasure, the satisfaction of the audience in Mr. Schmidt and the orchestra, in the chosen pieces and the performance of them, in Mr. Sand, the first clarinet of the band and the ablest clarinetist it has known since Mr. Pourteau's time, as "soloist" of the afternoon. Concertos for wind-instruments are rare nowadays in symphony concerts anywhere; not since 1884 has such a piece been heard from the Boston orchestra. Perhaps Mr. Damrosch set the precedent, when he proposed the Concerto of yesterday—Mozart's in A major—to the clarinetist of his own band; but, whereas Mr. Langner in New York played only two movements, Mr. Sand played it, as the blessed words go, "in entirety." As the event proved, the music is neither long drawn nor uninteresting. The first Allegro runs brightly, in sprightly play of amiable melodies, animated figure and "passage-work," artful opportunity for the skill and taste of the player. The Adagio is suavely flowing song, touched with gentle, musing sentiment, opening, sustaining the voice of the clarinet as ears are most accustomed to hear it in the orchestral ensemble. The final Rondo runs yet more lightly and smilingly than the other Allegro and again spurs the fluency and the aptness of the clarinetist. Descending from his place in the wind-choir, as becomes a "soloist" from its ranks and heartily applauded by both orchestra and audience, Mr. Sand exemplified not only the range and quality of the clarinet, as the Concerto discloses them, but his own command of the intricate and exacting virtuosity of lips, breath and fingers peculiar to reed instruments, the suavity, pliancy and color of his tone, his readiness in fleet and changeful measures, his just sense of sustained instrumental song. More heartily even than they had received him, orchestra and audience clapped him back to his place.

Before and after this Concerto of Mozart stood other pieces of ancient music to pleasure hearers still more and to confirm the impression both here and abroad that the years of the war have quickened general liking for it, perhaps because its relative calm and elegance make such contrast to the excitements and turbulences of the hour. One of these pieces was Cherubini's overture to his Moorish and martial opera, "The Abencerrages," dated indeed 1813, in the years of a composer who did not die until 1842, but still, within a certain magnitude of voice, intrinsically eighteenth-century music in twentieth-century ears. It is so by clarity as well as orthodoxy of form, by largeness of period and stateliness of march, by air of controlled yet fluent power, by plain token, with all the energy of the music, of the "grand manner." Sometimes, it is easy to fancy that had Händel flourished at the beginning of the nineteenth, instead of the beginning of the eighteenth century, he would have written overtures rather in the manner of those of Cherubini that conductors still play. To this day the sonorous voice, the ample progress, the measured mood, yet not without character or energy, of the Franco-Italian in these pieces for the opera house stir the ear and heart, especially in the rich-toned, amply paced performance that Mr. Schmidt and the orchestra gave to it. The stripped sinews of the music, in comparison with the thick or the prickly harmonies of our day hold and stimulate the hearer.

Of the "grand manner" also, still stately but more gentle and gracious, and of like bare sonorities were the succeeding Suite of dances, first resurrected last season, from pages of Rameau's "Acanthe et Céphise" and "Platée"—a Musette, a Rigadoon once repeated, two Minuets and a Gavotte. "Acanthe and Céphise" was an "heroic pastoral"; "Platée," a "ballet bouffon" of a jealous Juno; but none of these eighteenth-century classifications much alters twentieth-century anticipation of such ballet-music. Before [illegible] the sweetness of Gluck began to penetrate it. Rameau draws his pattern in large lines, even when he chooses to be playful, as in the Rigadoon or merry as in the Gavotte. He hears, feels the individual voice of his instruments and is prone to use them in solo-quality. His dance rhythms are as full of measured vigor, as devoid of mere tripping prettiness as those of Bach himself. By inclination and habit, a Minuet persuades him to grave harmonies and dignified march even though it courts the stringy voice of the vanished hurdy-gurdy that in his time was called a vièle. By like leaning, custom and necessity, no doubt for a composer with his living to earn in the Paris of Louis XV, Rameau writes also in the operas and ballets, of which these dances are as samples, a courtly, almost a ceremonial music. Behind these Minuets of mythology crackle brocades; powder flies, fans shake in the Gavotte; the Rigadoon smiles elegantly. Our present and retrospective pleasure is of a manner as well as of a matter—the more when the Symphony Orchestra rhythms and polishes these dances.

The contrasting end of the concert was Schumann's symphony in B-flat major, No 1, Op. 38, as the programme formally averred, but that a whole admiring world, more human, knows as the symphony of the coming of the spring. After three ancient classics, all intrinsically an indoor music, this symphony of bright skies, fresh airs, a blossoming world of river and hillside, of the joy of living—music of keen romantic sensation, of glowing romantic utterance from first note to final double bar. Descant as the over-exacting do, of Schumann's tendency to write for the orchestra as he would for the piano; complain as they may of the limitations of a composer who found it difficult sometimes to think and write in the terms of many instrumental voices; regret this and that not quite "professional" in the procedure and the progress of the symphony, yet Schumann's moods in it and the voice of those moods have conquered for it and made it a universal music. In the motives, so quick to broaden, warm and deepen into melodies of eager and exultant song, in the ardent periods, the glowing ejaculations, the onrush of impulsive sensation, the lingering of caressing mood, the sheer zest of rhythm and modulation, speak as in hardly any other music the springtime stirrings, old as the world and the race, new as this morning, of man and the nature that in this vernal day now whips, now toys with him. Schumann had barely turned his thirties when he wrote this symphony "in B-flat major" and all the rest. He could still write out of full romantic spirit, in free romantic speech—orthodox as he may have tried to be with the example of Mendelssohn before him—his music of youth, of the youth of the world of nature and of men's hearts beating to it in renewal of annual miracle. It was possible to wish Mr. Schmidt more fire, more elasticity with the symphony; but his wind choir, above all the others, kept Schumann's voice ringing.

H. T. P.

Herald March 31, 1918

Herald 3/31

WOMEN CEASE VISITING MUCK

Symphony Conductor and Bertling Fellow-Prisoners in Cambridge Jail

CASES WAIT WORD FROM WASHINGTON

Dr. Karl Muck and Dr. Karl O. Bertling are fellow prisoners at the Middlesex jail, East Cambridge, both awaiting the word from Washington which will decide the question of their restraint for the period of the war.

Government operatives were busy yesterday on new information which resulted from the announcement that the two Germans were under arrest, but the federal officers were mute as to how much bearing any of the new evidence has on either case.

Resignation Anticipated

Acceptance of Dr. Muck's resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, effective at the end of the concert season, was anticipated several months ago, when he submitted it following the criticism occasioned by his failure to include "The Star Spangled Banner" on the Providence concert program, but it was said at the time that the resignation would be taken under consideration.

Necessary legal preliminaries to Dr. Muck's departure have been taken by the business staff of the orchestra, though no effort was made to abrogate the contract with him on account of the conductor's inability to carry out his part of it.

Mrs. Muck, who was in New York for a brief visit, is again at the Fenway home, but she has made no statement as to her intentions. Women friends who volunteered to take her place as visitor to the East Cambridge jail during the time she was in New York have made no further efforts to see Dr. Muck.

Dr. Bertling had fewer admirers than Dr. Muck and there was less interest taken in his welfare, but from inquiries yesterday it was evident that his arrest excited considerable curiosity as to how far reaching the government drag-net would be and speculation was rife as to the identity of two or three others who were said to have received the attention of government investigators.

There are many Germans on the registered list at he federal building and the federal agents have been keeping close tabs on their movements since the Muck arrest. It is believed there was some activity immediately after the news was made public, and that Dr. Bertling, already registered as an enemy alien and known as a German agent, was one of the suspects whose actions decided the question of how far Dr. Muck's friends and associates would be permitted to go.

Federal officers observed yesterday, as they did every other day, by staying at their desks until last night. There was no observance of the Saturday half-holiday, and many matters were under consideration.

Boynton and Dewey Confer

Dist.-Atty. Boynton was in conference with Asst.-Dist.-Atty. Dewey, but at the close of the discussion the officials said there was no information to be given out. A short time later Asst.-Dist.-Atty. Dewey announced that the day's work was done so far as it applied to new arrests, but he had an accumulation of business on his desk which kept him busy until late in the evening.

The Muck and Bertling cases are now under consideration in Washington, a transcript of all local evidence having been forwarded. The restraining order against the two men is sufficient to hold them in jail until the department is ready to act, though it is doubtful that either case will be disposed of in less than a month.

Particular interest was taken in the pending amendments to the espionage regulations by which women will be amenable the same as men. The federal officers in the Boston district are awaiting their adoption before beginning action against some of the women of doubtful loyalty whose names have been linked with those of both Muck and Bertling. The officers said yesterday that the proposed amendments would furnish grounds for proceedings in several cases in which women were the active participants and would require their registration the same as male alien enemies.

Agents of the government in the New York district are now investigating facts revealed by the arrest of Dr. Bertling and as soon as their report is sent back action will be taken against him.

Post March 31, 1918

Dr. Muck and the Symphony

Basis of Orchestra Secure Without Famous Leader —"The Dance on Place Congo" a Triumph for Boston Composer—The Coming Concerts

Questions are asked as to the future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the remainder of this season and next, since Dr. Muck has been arrested under Section 12 of the alien enemy act. There seems to be a fear that with Dr. Muck gone the Boston Symphony Orchestra may not feel on as secure a musical basis as in the past.

There should be no apprehension on this point. There has been the mistaken impression on the part of some people that Dr. Muck made the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Muck did not make the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony Orchestra made Dr. Muck, made him a greater conductor than he ever was before he came here, made a very material increase in his prestige and reputation, both here and abroad. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its present very able and upright management, has brought to Boston a number of conductors just as great as Dr. Muck.

The man who made the Boston Symphony Orchestra was Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, and since Mr. Gericke left Boston, a much under-estimated man, the orchestra has remained one of the leading orchestras of the world, though its excellence and tonal beauty under Mr. Gericke in the last years of his conductorship has never been excelled since.

It take many years of patient labor to make a symphony orchestra of the quality of the Boston band. An orchestra is the result of the slow perfecting and welding today of its component parts. The component parts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are skilled instrumentalists who have been chosen with great care from all musical centres, and have been combined into a wonderfully efficient and artistic organization.

A number of able and brilliant leaders, even in these days of the war, may be found to lead the Boston Symphony in a manner worthy of its traditions. The men will not be lacking, for every conductor in the world would recognize his good fortune if invited to fill such a distinguished post. And, after the events of the preceding week, it is quite safe to say that no future conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will, after accepting the position, risk losing it or the loss of his personal reputation by privately or publicly running counter to the decisions and laws of the United States government.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the expression and the symbol of the artistic ideals and standards of Boston, the treasured inspiration of thousands of music-lovers of this city, must and will endure, long after Dr. Muck has been forgotten.

Traveller March 30-1918

ACCEPTS MUCK RESIGNATION

The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been accepted by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, it was learned today.

The resignation, which was offered by Dr. Muck at the time of the "Star Spangled Banner" incident, was accepted by Maj. Higginson March 6, to take effect May 4, the date the present series of concerts ends.

Dr. Muck is now held as an alien enemy, and is lodged in the East Cambridge jail.

The tickets to the present series here and in other cities were sold last spring and summer with the understanding that "a certain orchestra and a certain conductor" would take part, and for this reason the backers felt that they could not drop either Dr. Muck or any part of the orchestra, unless compelled by law.

In December, 1917, Mr. Higginson was told by officers of the department of justice at Washington that the orchestra could appear, with Dr. Muck, anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia, that having been forbidden by a presidential proclamation.

Globe Apr 3-1918

BACH'S MATTHEW "PASSION" REPEATED

Large audiences listened again yesterday afternoon and evening at Symphony Hall to a performance in its entirety of Bach's "Passion" music according to St Matthew. The performers were those of the first presentation Tuesday a week ago—Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Herbert Witherspoon, bass; the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chorus and Ernst Schmidt, conductor.

Advertiser April 2, 1918

BACH PASSION IS PERFORMED AGAIN

Mr. Werrenrath's Solo Work Wins Plaudits of Symphony Hall Audience

The second performance of the Bach Passion Music was given in Symphony Hall yesterday, with the same array of soloists, the Townsend chorus, and the Symphony Orchestra, all under the leadership of Ernst Schmidt, conductor.

A large audience was present, and the performance was in every way worthy of this wonderful masterpiece, a work which will test the ability of every participant.

The surprising feature in the Bach Passion, which deals with the most solemn and awful of sacred themes, is its amazing dramatic possibilities, and such passages as "Ye lightnings," where the chorus calls on the forces of Nature to avenge the prospective death of the Saviour, together with the duet and chorus "Alas! my Jesus now is taken," can be compared to the most thrilling and dramatic ensembles of the great operatic works. The solo numbers that so abound throughout the work are not likely to be carried in the memory, but the great strands of counterpoint that weave the web of the opening chorus, together with the stately and solemn chorales, are the things that make the greatest impression.

The performance of the entire work is doubtless a musical duty, once in each generation, but at other times the work should be carefully culled and brought within the compass of a single performance.

Of the soloists, Mr. Murphy in the part of the Evangelist, has a task of extraordinary difficulty. Miss Hinkle, in the soprano arias displayed excellent musicianship in her interpretation; but the solo work which merited the greatest praise, was the part of Jesus, as sung by Mr. Werrenrath. It would be difficult to imagine a better performance, both in the calm and dignified delivery, and also in the occasional dramatic touches with which he portrayed the sacred words of the Saviour. As already stated, the work is of monumental proportions and one which would be intolerable, save under the most perfect conditions. These conditions were fully met in yesterday's performance.

Mention must also be made of the eighty boys, whose voices were used in the obligato of that wonderful opening chorus, but interwoven as this obligato is with the female sopranos of the chorus, the boy voices might well have been doubled in number without destroying the proper ensemble.

The popularity of the three choral concerts as planned by Dr. Muck has proven the wisdom of the project, and the successful result of the plan should insure a repetition next season of similar great works, any of which, with such choral and orchestral forces, can be certain of a worthy presentation.

Herald Apr 3-1918

SYMPHONY GIVES MUSIC OF BACH

Bach's Passion music was repeated at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Symphony chorus, Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs. Werrenrath, Murphy, Witherspoon, Myers and Peirce. Ernst Schmidt conducted.

As before the performance was impressive, and opportunity was afforded for a better acquaintance with Dr. Muck's version of Bach's work. The chorus was again effective and the distinguished soloists were at their best.

Advertiser April 2, 1918

MUCK PLACED IN FEDERAL COURT PEN

Undergoes Long Examination by Government Officials

DR. VON BERTLING TO BE GRILLED TODAY

Remained in Cell at East Cambridge Jail Yesterday

Dr. Karl Oskar von Bertling, the former German army officer arrested last Friday night and held in the East Cambridge jail as an enemy alien, is expected to be grilled today by Federal officials.

Dr. Bertling was scheduled to appear for examination yesterday, but the Federal agents occupied most of their time questioning at length Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held on a similar charge in the East Cambridge jail.

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey said there was no statement to make at the close of the conference.

PLACED IN PEN.

Dr. Muck was taken to the Federal building from East Cambridge by Deputy United States Marshal Backus and confined in the pen. Later he was escorted to the Department of Justice building, No. 85 Milk street. Here a conference lasting two hours was held with United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, Assistant United States Attorney Dewey and George A. Kelleher, in charge of the special agents' office of the Department of Justice.

At the conclusion of the conference, Dr. Muck went back to the Federal building, where lunch was brought in for him. Late in the afternoon he was returned to the East Cambridge jail.

It was expected that Dr. von Bertling would accompany Dr. Muck, but he remained in seclusion in the East Cambridge jail.

SEEMS LESS BUOYANT.

Dr. Muck showed the effect of his incarceration. His step appeared to have lost elasticity and he was somewhat subdued, as compared with the buoyancy he displayed on the morning following his arrest a week ago. He was placed in the iron cage on his arrival at the federal building. Last week he was allowed to sit on a bench outside the cage.

Much refused to talk with Assistant United States Marshal Backus on the ride from East Cambridge to the federal building. When placed in the cage he remained quiet and sullen and did not attempt to talk with other prisoners as he did when first taken to the marshal's office.

Post Apr 1, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The second and last performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon and evening. The performance will be in every respect a duplicate of the performance a week ago.

Herald Apr 2, 1918 64

MUCK BROKEN BY JAIL LIFE

Quizzing by Federal Officers Revealed Little Against Suspect

DATA PREPARED FOR WASHINGTON

Dr. Karl Muck, broken in spirit from a week of restraint in the East Cambridge jail, was given several hours' respite from his confinement yesterday when he was transferred to the federal building to be subjected to an examination by federal officers. For more than two hours the prisoner was quizzed by U. S. Atty. Boynton, Asst. U. S. Atty. Judd Dewey and George E. Kelleher, acting agent in charge of the bureau of investigation.

For the greater part of the day Dr. Muck remained at the United States marshal's office, and though he was away from the close confines of the jail he was nevertheless in custody, but in a change of atmosphere which seemed a source of relief.

Inquisitors Learn Little

When the conference was over and the prisoner was recommitted to the jail the federal officials said there was no new development in the case and little liklihood of any new steps being taken until Washington was ready for a final determination of Dr. Muck's status.

Deputy Marshal John H. Backus, the officer who arested Dr. Karl Bertling, Dr. Muck's countryman who occupies an adjoining cell at the jail, went to East Cambridge yesterday morning to convey the prisoner to the federal building. The deputy attempted to rouse the fallen spirit of his charge, trying to inject some of his own good nature, but the doctor was completely broken down and made no response. His stay in jail has been far from comfortable despite the privileges of having his meals sent in to him and his occasional visitors, but the rigid enforcement of the jail rules against cigarette smoking and reading the daily newspapers has had full effect upon his temperament.

After he reached the federal building he was shown to a seat in the detention room, off the marshal's office, and a short time later was summoned before the officials. Clift Rogers Clapp, a State street attorney, was also at the federal building and in consultation with the prisoner, but he took no part in the conference between Muck and the federal attorneys.

Questioning Bored Prisoner

Sufficient time has passed since Dr. Muck was arrested and his papers seized to enable the investigation officers to go through the papers, and there were several matters upon which they wished to interrogate him, but if there was any reference to particular activities upon which the officers might later base specific charges, the officials declined to discuss the point.

Dr. Muck, when Deputy Marshal Backus was ready to recommit him, seemed to feel as much relief at getting away from the inquisition as he at first expressed at leaving the jail.

Assistant United States Attorney Dewey remained at his office until late last night reviewing the memorandum of the conference. Dr. Muck's replies to some of the examining officers' questions supplied entirely new angles of investigation, and Mr. Dewey had a mass of notes for comparison with other papers in the case. The assistant attorney began his day's work yesterday on the new time schedule, starting in an hour ahead of the usual time, but he didn't close his office on the same plan and worked about an hour overtime instead. With the clock set ahead an hour, the government official upon whom the task of handling alien enemy matters devolves takes advantage of the first hour and then adds an extra one on at night. When he completed his long day's labor he announced that the Muck case was still pending and there might or might not be further developments.

As to Dr. Bertling, Dr. Muck's fellow-prisoner, Mr. Dewey said that he intended to interview him at his earliest opportunity, but that matters of such importance are now at hand there is no time to take up Dr. Bertling, but would send for him in a day or two. He expressed an opinion that the government's action against both prisoners would be taken within a short time after the full information from Boston was forwarded to Washington.

Advertiser Apr 2-1918

Passion Music Today

The second and last performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" will be given in Symphony Hall today, the afternoon session beginning at four o'clock and the evening at eight. The performance will be in every respect a duplicate of the remarkably successful one of a week ago. Mr. Schmidt will conduct. The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Lambert Murphy, Reinald Werrenrath and Herbert Witherspoon.

Record Apr 2, 1918

Muck Leaves Jail, Taken to Federal Building Today

Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken to the Federal Building today from the East Cambridge jail, where he has been imprisoned since his arrest under the espionage act.

He will probably be returned to jail later today.

Considerable mystery surrounded the visit of the musician to Boston. He was brought to the office of U. S. Dist. Atty. Boynton, where he was closeted in conference. Asst. Dist. Atty. Dewey, Deputy U. S. Marshal Backus and Special Agent Kelliher of the Department of Justice were also present at the conference.

Whether the conference indicated some action on the part of Washington authorities, the local officials refused to say.

All the data in Muck's case has been forwarded to Washington and local officers had been awaiting word as to whether the musician should be sent to an internment camp or other disposition made of his case.

Herald Apr 2-1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The second and last performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon and evening, the afternoon session beginning at 4 o'clock and the evening at 8. The performance will be a duplicate of the highly successful performance a week ago. Mr. Schmidt will conduct. The same chorus and the same boy choir will be used, likewise the same soloists, who are Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Lambert Murphy, Reinald Werrenrath and Herbert Witherspoon.

Record Apr 2-1918

MUCK MUM AS HE GOES UNDER GRILL

Musician Won't Talk with Custodian or Prisoners

Karl Muck, former leader of the Berlin and Boston Symphony orchestras was taken from the East Cambridge jail this morning to the office of United States Attorney Thomas Boynton for further questioning by Atty. Boynton and Asst. U. S. Atty. Judd Dewey. The examination is presumed to be based on facts revealed by an examination of papers taken from Muck's house in the raid by federal officers.

Muck was placed in the iron cage on his arrival at the federal building. Last week he was allowed to sit on a bench outside the cage. It was a week ago he was detained as an enemy alien, and during the time he has been in the East Cambridge jail he has lost the debonnaire air which he maintained when arrested and for hours after.

Refuses to Talk

If the authorities have direct charges that Muck has violated the criminal code it is likely a proposition will be made to him to accept sentence without trial, with the understanding the term would be much shorter than if he were tried and found guilty.

Muck refused to talk with Assistant United States Marshal Backus on the ride from East Cambridge to the federal building. When placed in the cake he remained quiet and sullen and did not attempt to talk with other prisoners as he did when first taken to the marshal's office.

Post March 31, 1918

Dr. Muck and the Symphony

Basis of Orchestra Secure Without Famous Leader —"The Dance on Place Congo" a Triumph for Boston Composer—The Coming Concerts

Questions are asked as to the future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the remainder of this season and next, since Dr. Muck has been arrested under Section 12 of the alien enemy act There seems to be a fear that with Dr Muck gone the Boston Symphony Orchestra may not feel on as secure a musical basis as in the past.

There should be no apprehension on this point. There has been the mistaken impression on the part of some people that Dr. Muck made the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Muck did not make the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Boston Symphony Orchestra made Dr. Muck, made him a greater conductor than he ever was before he came here, made a very material increase in his prestige and reputation, both here and abroad. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its present very able and upright management, has brought to Boston a number of conductors just as great as Dr. Muck.

The man who made the Boston Symphony Orchestra was Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, and since Mr. Gericke left Boston, a much under-estimated man, the orchestra has remained one of the leading orchestras of the world, though its excellence and tonal beauty under Mr. Gericke in the last years of his conductorship has never been excelled since.

It take many years of patient labor to make a symphony orchestra of the quality of the Boston band. An orchestra is the result of the slow perfecting and welding today of its component parts The component parts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are skilled instrumentalists who have been chosen with great care from all musical centres, and have been combined into a wonderfully efficient and artistic organization.

A number of able and brilliant leaders, even in these days of the war, may be found to lead the Boston Symphony in a manner worthy of its traditions. The men will not be lacking, for every conductor in the world would recognize his good fortune if invited to fill such a distinguished post. And, after the events of the preceding week, it is quite safe to say that no future conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will, after accepting the position, risk losing it or the loss of his personal reputation by privately or publicly running counter to the decisions and laws of the United States government.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the expression and the symbol of the artistic ideals and standards of Boston, the treasured inspiration of thousands of music-lovers of this city, must and will endure, long after Dr. Muck has been forgotten.

Traveller March 30-1918

ACCEPTS MUCK RESIGNATION

The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been accepted by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, it was learned today.

The resignation, which was offered by Dr. Muck at the time of the "Star Spangled Banner" incident, was accepted by Maj. Higginson March 6, to take effect May 4, the date the present series of concerts ends.

Dr. Muck is now held as an alien enemy, and is lodged in the East Cambridge jail.

The tickets to the present series here and in other cities were sold last spring and summer with the understanding that "a certain orchestra and a certain conductor" would take part, and for this reason the backers felt that they could not drop either Dr. Muck or any part of the orchestra, unless compelled by law.

In December, 1917, Mr. Higginson was told by officers of the department of justice at Washington that the orchestra could appear, with Dr. Muck, anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia, that having been forbidden by a presidential proclamation.

Globe Apr 3-1918

BACH'S MATTHEW "PASSION" REPEATED

Large audiences listened again yesterday afternoon and evening at Symphony Hall to a performance in its entirety of Bach's "Passion" music according to St Matthew. The performers were those of the first presentation Tuesday a week ago—Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Herbert Witherspoon, bass; the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chorus and Ernst Schmidt, conductor.

Advertiser April 2, 1918

MUCK PLACED IN FEDERAL COURT PEN

Undergoes Long Examination by Government Officials

DR. VON BERTLING TO BE GRILLED TODAY

Remained in Cell at East Cambridge Jail Yesterday

Dr. Karl Oskar von Bertling, the former German army officer arrested last Friday night and held in the East Cambridge jail as an enemy alien, is expected to be grilled today by Federal officials.

Dr. Bertling was scheduled to appear for examination yesterday, but the Federal agents occupied most of their time questioning at length Dr. Karl Muck, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held on a similar charge in the East Cambridge jail.

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey said there was no statement to make at the close of the conference.

PLACED IN PEN.

Dr. Muck was taken to the Federal building from East Cambridge by Deputy United States Marshal Backus and confined in the pen. Later he was escorted to the Department of Justice building, No. 85 Milk street. Here a conference lasting two hours was held with United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, Assistant United States Attorney Dewey and George A. Kelleher, in charge of the special agents office of the Department of Justice.

At the conclusion of the conference, Dr. Muck went back to the Federal building, where lunch was brought in for him. Late in the afternoon he was returned to the East Cambridge jail.

It was expected that Dr. von Bertling would accompany Dr. Muck, but he remained in seclusion in the East Cambridge jail.

SEEMS LESS BUOYANT.

Dr. Muck showed the effect of his incarceration. His step appeared to have lost elasticity and he was somewhat subdued, as compared with the buoyancy he displayed on the morning following his arrest a week ago. He was placed in the iron cage on his arrival at the federal building. Last week he was allowed to sit on a bench outside the cage.

Much refused to talk with Assistant United States Marshal Backus on the ride from East Cambridge to the federal building. When placed in the cage he remained quiet and sullen and did not attempt to talk with other prisoners as he did when first taken to the marshal's office.

Post Apr 1, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The second and last performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon and evening. The performance will be in every respect a duplicate of the performance a week ago.

Advertiser April 2, 1918

BACH PASSION IS PERFORMED AGAIN

Mr. Werrenrath's Solo Work Wins Plaudits of Symphony Hall Audience

The second performance of the Bach Passion Music was given in Symphony Hall yesterday, with the same array of soloists, the Townsend chorus, and the Symphony Orchestra, all under the leadership of Ernst Schmidt, conductor.

A large audience was present, and the performance was in every way worthy of this wonderful masterpiece, a work which will test the ability of every participant.

The surprising feature in the Bach Passion, which deals with the most solemn and awful of sacred themes, is its amazing dramatic possibilities, and such passages as "Ye lightnings," where the chorus calls on the forces of Nature to avenge the prospective death of the Saviour, together with the duet and chorus "Alas! my Jesus now is taken," can be compared to the most thrilling and dramatic ensembles of the great operatic works. The solo numbers that so abound throughout the work are not likely to be carried in the memory, but the great strands of counterpoint that weave the web of the opening chorus, together with the stately and solemn chorales, are the things that make the greatest impression.

The performance of the entire work is doubtless a musical duty, once in each generation, but at other times the work should be carefully culled and brought within the compass of a single performance.

Of the soloists, Mr. Murphy in the part of the Evangelist, has a task of extraordinary difficulty. Miss Hinkle, in the soprano arias displayed excellent musicianship in her interpretation; but the solo work which merited the greatest praise, was the part of Jesus, as sung by Mr. Werrenrath. It would be difficult to imagine a better performance, both in the calm and dignified delivery, and also in the occasional dramatic touches with which he portrayed the sacred words of the Saviour. As already stated, the work is of monumental proportions and one which would be intolerable, save under the most perfect conditions. These conditions were fully met in yesterday's performance.

Mention must also be made of the eighty boys, whose voices were used in the obligato of that wonderful opening chorus, but interwoven as this obligato is with the female sopranos of the chorus, the boy voices might well have been doubled in number without destroying the proper ensemble.

The popularity of the three choral concerts as planned by Dr. Muck has proven the wisdom of the project, and the successful result of the plan should insure a repetition next season of similar great works, any of which, with such choral and orchestral forces, can be certain of a worthy presentation.

Herald Apr 3-1918

SYMPHONY GIVES MUSIC OF BACH

Bach's Passion music was repeated at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Symphony chorus, Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs. Werrenrath, Murphy, Witherspoon, Myers and Peirce. Ernst Schmidt conducted.

As before the performance was impressive, and opportunity was afforded for a better acquaintance with Dr. Muck's version of Bach's work. The chorus was again effective and the distinguished soloists were at their best.

Herald Apr 2-1918 64

MUCK BROKEN BY JAIL LIFE

Quizzing by Federal Officers Revealed Little Against Suspect

DATA PREPARED FOR WASHINGTON

Dr. Karl Muck, broken in spirit from a week of restraint in the East Cambridge jail, was given several hours' respite from his confinement yesterday when he was transferred to the federal building to be subjected to an examination by federal officers. For more than two hours the prisoner was quizzed by U. S. Atty. Boynton, Asst. U. S. Atty. Judd Dewey and George E. Kelleher, acting agent in charge of the bureau of investigation.

For the greater part of the day Dr. Muck remained at the United States marshal's office, and though he was away from the close confines of the jail he was nevertheless in custody, but in a change of atmosphere which seemed a source of relief.

Inquisitors Learn Little

When the conference was over and the prisoner was recommitted to the jail the federal officials said there was no new development in the case and little liklihood of any new steps being taken until Washington was ready for a final determination of Dr. Muck's status.

Deputy Marshal John H. Backus, the officer who arested Dr. Karl Bertling, Dr. Muck's countryman who occupies an adjoining cell at the jail, went to East Cambridge yesterday morning to convey the prisoner to the federal building. The deputy attempted to rouse the fallen spirit of his charge, trying to inject some of his own good nature, but the doctor was completely broken down and made no response. His stay in jail has been far from comfortable despite the privileges of having his meals sent in to him and his occasional visitors, but the rigid enforcement of the jail rules against cigarette smoking and reading the daily newspapers has had full effect upon his temperament.

After he reached the federal building he was shown to a seat in the detention room, off the marshal's office, and a short time later was summoned before the officials. Clift Rogers Clapp, a State street attorney, was also at the federal building and in consultation with the prisoner, but he took no part in the conference between Muck and the federal attorneys.

Questioning Bored Prisoner

Sufficient time has passed since Dr. Muck was arrested and his papers seized to enable the investigation officers to go through the papers, and there were several matters upon which they wished to interrogate him, but if there was any reference to particular activities upon which the officers might later base specific charges, the officials declined to discuss the point.

Dr. Muck, when Deputy Marshal Backus was ready to recommit him, seemed to feel as much relief at getting away from the inquisition as he at first expressed at leaving the jail.

Assistant United States Attorney Dewey remained at his office until late last night reviewing the memorandum of the conference. Dr. Muck's replies to some of the examining officers' questions supplied entirely new angles of investigation, and Mr. Dewey had a mass of notes for comparison with other papers in the case. The assistant attorney began his day's work yesterday on the new time schedule, starting in an hour ahead of the usual time, but he didn't close his office on the same plan and worked about an hour overtime instead. With the clock set ahead an hour, the government official upon whom the task of handling alien enemy matters devolves takes advantage of the first hour and then adds an extra one on at night. When he completed his long day's labor he announced that the Muck case was still pending and there might or might not be further developments.

As to Dr. Bertling, Dr. Muck's fellow-prisoner, Mr. Dewey said that he intended to interview him at his earliest opportunity, but that matters of such importance are now at hand there is no time to take up Dr. Bertling, but would send for him in a day or two. He expressed an opinion that the government's action against both prisoners would be taken within a short time after the full information from Boston was forwarded to Washington.

Advertiser Apr 2-1918

Passion Music Today

The second and last performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" will be given in Symphony Hall today, the afternoon session beginning at four o'clock and the evening at eight. The performance will be in every respect a duplicate of the remarkably successful one of a week ago. Mr. Schmidt will conduct. The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Lambert Murphy, Reinald Werrenrath and Herbert Witherspoon.

Record Apr 2, 1918

Muck Leaves Jail, Taken to Federal Building Today

Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken to the Federal Building today from the East Cambridge jail, where he has been imprisoned since his arrest under the espionage act.

He will probably be returned to jail later today.

Considerable mystery surrounded the visit of the musician to Boston. He was brought to the office of U. S. Dist. Atty. Boynton, where he was closeted in conference. Asst. Dist. Atty. Dewey, Deputy U. S. Marshal Backus and Special Agent Kelliher of the Department of Justice were also present at the conference.

Whether the conference indicated some action on the part of Washington authorities, the local officials refused to say.

All the data in Muck's case has been forwarded to Washington and local officers had been awaiting word as to whether the musician should be sent to an internment camp or other disposition made of his case.

Herald Apr 2-1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The second and last performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon and evening, the afternoon session beginning at 4 o'clock and the evening at 8. The performance will be a duplicate of the highly successful performance a week ago. Mr. Schmidt will conduct. The same chorus and the same boy choir will be used, likewise the same soloists, who are Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Lambert Murphy, Reinald Werrenrath and Herbert Witherspoon.

Record Apr 2-1918

MUCK MUM AS HE GOES UNDER GRILL

Musician Won't Talk with Custodian or Prisoners

Karl Muck, former leader of the Berlin and Boston Symphony orchestras was taken from the East Cambridge jail this morning to the office of United States Attorney Thomas Boynton for further questioning by Atty. Boynto and Asst. U. S. Atty. Judd Dewey. Th examination is presumed to be based o facts revealed by an examination of papers taken from Muck's house in the raid by federal officers.

Muck was placed in the iron cage on his arrival at the federal building. Last week he was allowed to sit on a bench outside the cage. It was a week ago he was detained as an enemy alien, and during the time he has been in the East Cambridge jail he has lost the debonnaire air which he maintained when arrested and for hours after.

Refuses to Talk

If the authorities have direct charges that Muck has violated the criminal code it is likely a proposition will be made to him to accept sentence without trial, with the understanding the term would be much shorter than if he were tried and found guilty.

Muck refused to talk with Assistant United States Marshal Backus on the ride from East Cambridge to the federal building. When placed in the cake he remained quiet and sullen and did not attempt to talk with other prisoners as he did when first taken to the marshal's office.

American
Apr. 2 - 1918

FEDERAL ACTION SOON IN CASE OF DR. MUCK

Conductor's Examination Is Followed by Long Study of Letters and Documents

Government action in the cases of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar von Bertling, is expected within a short time, according to a statement made today.

It is understood that this action will be taken immediately upon receipt of full information concerning the two men, which is to be forwarded by Federal officials in this city.

Following a two hours' questioning of Dr. Muck at the Federal building, Assistant United States Attorney Judd Dewey worked until a late hour on the mass of letters and documents that have been accumulated in connection with the case. This work was continued today, and it is considered of so much importance that no attempt will be made to question Dr. Bertling until it is completed.

The replies made by Dr. Muck to questions were of such a nature that it is said that a large number of notes were taken and further developments may be looked for. At the conclusion of the examination the musical director seemed much relieved, and even appeared anxious to get back to the East Cambridge Jail. Before his departure he was in consultation with Clift Rogers Clapp, a State street attorney.

It is said that Dr. Muck is not taking kindly to his incarceration, the many restrictions chafing his temperamental disposition.

---

om
ddress
ate

Bulletin
Providence, R. I.
MAR 19 1918

MUCK NOT TO LEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY AGAIN IN BROOKLYN

Institute of Arts and Sciences, Under Whose Auspices Concerts Are Given, Wants Only Artists in Sympathy with United States in the War.

New York, March 17.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play in Brooklyn next season under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences if Dr. Karl Muck remains its conductor. Announcement was made yesterday by the board of trustees of the institute that the contract with Maj. Henry Lee Higginson's musical organization would not be renewed unless some other leader was substituted for Dr. Muck. A resolution to this effect was adopted by the trustees at a meeting on Thursday, but why it was not made public before the concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday night was not explained. The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

That the President be and he is hereby authorized to express to Maj. Higginson the deep appreciation of this board of trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come.

In pursuance of the resolution, A. Augustus Healy, the President of the institute, has sent a letter to Major Higginson.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its last New York concert yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall here in Manhattan Borough. Dr. Muck conducted a programme of two numbers at his farewell to his local public, a symphony—that in E flat, numbered 543 in the Koechel edition—by Mozart, and after intermission the superb "Sheherazade" of Rimsky-Korsakoff, which the men of Boston had often played here before the music was appropriated to make a holiday for the Russian ballet.

"The Star Spangled Banner" was given at the start of the afternoon, and not only the patriotic number, but also the conductor and all his men in their later music received frequent and hearty applause. Police in less formidable force than at Thursday evening's concert were again on guard to prevent any untoward incident.

There was no renewal of attacks. Neither were there any further signs of protesting subscribers, beyond one group of blind children said to have been sent to occupy the objectors' seats. Some 20 of these had been received, according to the woman director of a local orchestra who led the campaign against the Bostonians.

Major Higginson accompanied his hundred players home on the 5 o'clock train over the New Haven road. He declined to say if action had been taken looking to next season's plans, and Manager C. A. Ellis explained that no steps were likely until the close of the Boston season, which with the usual term of summer "pops," will run into next July.

om REPUBLICAN
dress Springfield, Mass.
te MAR 14 19

Maj Higginson and Dr Muck

Maj Henry L. Higginson's courage in persistently standing by Dr Muck, the conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, commands one's unlimited admiration. Maj Higginson is himself a veteran of the civil war; his patriotism is above suspicion. His unqualified assurance that Dr Muck is unobjectionable to the most loyal American is a sufficient reply to those who have assailed the conductor of the orchestra.

The latest exhibition of this unwarranted and unintelligent intolerance appears in New York. Mrs William Jay, supported by the rector of Trinity, protests against the two remaining concerts of the Boston orchestra in Carnegie hall. Maj Higginson tells Mrs William Jay that Dr Muck is not a German subject. The conductor became a "Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day."

Dr Muck, as a Swiss, is entitled to the rights guaranteed to all citizens of Switzerland residing or sojourning in the United States by the treaty of 1850. Maj Higginson has not referred to this treaty and of course Dr Muck will not invoke its protection in a matter like his connection with the orchestra. Yet people who seek to prevent his appearance with the orchestra in public concerts, or to prevent public concerts by the orchestra under his direction, ignore a treaty of the United States which remains in full force and effect at this time. Article I of the treaty of 1850 provides that the citizens of Switzerland "shall be at liberty" not only to come to this country and live here, but also to "exercise their profession" here.

Dr Muck's profession is that of an orchestra conductor. He is a citizen of Switzerland. He is guaranteed by treaty the right to exercise his profession in the United States. Why, then should Mrs William Jay of New York, or Rev Dr Manning, the rector of Trinity church, attempt to make impossible his lawful connection with the Boston symphony orchestra? Our treaties are the law of the land.

n PUBLIC LEDGER
ress Philadelphia, Pa.

BIG AUDIENCE HAILS MUCK

New York Seems Unmoved by Protest Against German Conductor

Public Ledger's Bureau

New York, March 12.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall tonight, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

Doctor Muck entered the hall through a double line of uniformed policemen and five minutes after was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

n POST
ress: Washington, D. C.
MAR 15 1918

vail.

POLICE AT MUCK CONCERT.

No Hostility Shown, Despite Threats, at New York Performance.

New York, March 14.—With 80 detectives on guard to preserve order, Dr. Karl Muck appeared in Carnegie Hall tonight with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Police protection had been provided because of the many protests against the appearance of Dr. Muck and the fear that a disturbance might be caused by persons who considered him anti-American in his attitude.

The hall was crowded, but there was no disorder when Dr. Muck took his place on the stage. He was greeted with courteous applause, and immediately led the orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Springfield, UNION
1884
1918

ice on Guard as Muck Leads

Disturbance at Symphony Concert in New York Last Evening.

NEW YORK, March 15—New York last night bowed its head in shame as it stepped down from its proud position in the first rank of the patriotic cities of the Nation, says The Herald.

For Father Knickerbocker, possessor of an enviable reputation for patriotic war service, was compelled to play the unwilling host to Doktor Karl Muck, music direktor extraordinary to the Kaiser, and his 23 enemy alien associates.

While 50 uniformed policemen and a horde of Government Secret Service men looked on, the man who has been barred from half a dozen other cities because of his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero — the Kaiser's favorite — was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while 13 empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and 42 empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumber to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Maj. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his enemy aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season;" a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Maj. Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The 23 enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go also."

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform after his audience had waited several minutes for his appearance —and long after other members of the orchestra had been in their seats. After the applause had subsided and he had ceased bowing, he leaned over and bowed to his orchestra members, waved his baton and they rose to play "The Star Spangled Banner," which he repeatedly had announced as "not being fit for an artist to play," until he was forced to do so by being barred from five cities formerly on the program of the orchestra.

The direktor perfunctorily waved his baton while the orchestra played the national anthem. At the close of the number there was another burst of applause, obviously directed at the leader and not for the patriotic air which he had refused to play in Providence, R. I.

Then, returning to his printed program and the Teutonic symphonies, among which he felt more at home, Muck addressed himself to the duties of the evening and left no opportunity for the criticism that he was acting his part perfunctorily.

The orchestra management chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's 21st birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age. The Chancelor of Zug Canton, in verifying the document, also added a line. "With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection."

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document according to a translation appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed N. 644, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1858, be (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virture of which we give the definite assurance that the abovementioned citizen shall at any time and under all cricumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.
(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER,
in the name of the Town Council.

With the best recommendation of all authorities and their representative protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

m HERALD
dress Washington, D. C.
MAR 15 1918

SYMPHONY DIRECTOR PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

Dr. Karl Muck, Though Criticized, Leads Hub Orchestra.

New York, March 14.—The "Star Spangled Banner" was played by Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston symphony orchestra at the beginning of their concert tonight in Carnegie Hall.

Many police guarded the hall and there was a big sprinkling of detectivecs in the crowd which filled the house owing to suggestions of trouble arising over Dr. Muck's previous difficulties regarding playing the national anthem and the question of his German citizenship.

A large crowd gathered outside the hall early in the evening demanding admission, but the supply of tickets had been exhausted.

The strains of the anthem, drifted through to the lobby shortly after the concert opened but no demonstration ensued within the walls. The police saw to it that there was no disorder outside.

The question whether or not Dr. Muck and his musicians should be permitted to play here has been hotly debated in the newspapers, and demands were made that he be stopped.

City officials this afternoon, however, ruled the concert must go on and police arrangements were made accordingly. Inspector Daly took a large number of blue coats to the hall and kept curiosity-seekers moving.

JOURNAL
s Providence, R. I.
MAR 15 1918

Concerning Dr. Muck

Major H. L. Higginson's statement in the New York Times yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and the Providence Journal makes it necessary to say that the Journal's attack on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the chairman of the Liberty Loan committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on October thirtieth last. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before the Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr. Muck. Major Higginson's statement that Dr. Muck was made a Swiss citizen "in his childhood" is of course untrue. There is every reason to believe that Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship has been very recently acquired and the public is only waiting for this gentleman's presentation of his citizenship papers to have the doubt cleared up.

Major Higginson's attempt to have it appear that Dr. Muck is not a German propagandist is ridiculous in the face of the facts already printed in these columns. By Dr. Muck's own testimony in a San Francisco court he was a financial supporter of the notorious Viereck sheet known as the Fatherland and had been a supporter of many similar movements with money apparently accumulated by him from his salary as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A specific contribution of three hundred dollars which Dr. Muck believed was given to the Viereck newspaper was made by him immediately after that sheet had declared the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania "because they had sold their souls to England," and another statement over Viereck's own signature that if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin.

CITIZEN
: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

MUCK GIVES LAST CONCERT HERE

Presents Excellent Programme at the Academy

Notwithstanding the objection by many residents of Brooklyn that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a German citizen, or at least a German by birth and still a German sympathizer, the announced concert of the Boston Orchestra was held at the Academy of Music last night, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton. It was the last of a series of five concerts held here this season by the organization, and as the contracts had been made and the subscription tickets sold with the announcement that Dr. Muck would conduct, it was held that there was nothing to do but hold the concert according to schedule. The appeals to the Commissioner of Licenses and to the Department of Justice were fruitless and the petitions signed by hundreds of citizens went for naught, so far as last night's concert was concerned. However, as stated in another column of to-day's "Citizen," Dr. Muck will appear here no more.

While there were a good many seats vacant, which is something unheard of for a Boston Symphony concert, the audience was large and very friendly, applauding freely the splendid work of the musicians. The feeling appeared to prevail that it might be the last time they would see the famous conductor. As a matter of fact, his resignation has been in the hands of Major Higginson, the head of the organization, for months, but Major Higginson has been reported as hinting that rather than have another conductor he might disband the orchestra.

As was to be expected, there was no disturbance at the concert last night, but to avoid any possibility of such an occurrence, Inspector Meade had posted a guard of half a dozen policemen around the Academy under Captain B. Hayes, and there were ten detectives present from the Poplar Street Bureau, in charge of Captain John Coughlan.

The concert itself was up to the high mark set by the organization in times past, there being no sign of nervousness in the work of the conductor or the orchestra. There were no soloists. For his last programme here, Dr. Muck had selected three pieces of great value.

The symphony was Mozart's in E flat, the third of the wonderful trio of symphonies which this immortal genius composed in one summer. The first number of the second part of the programme was the exquisitely melodious Serenade for strings in C major by Tchaikowsky. This Serenade shows Tschaikowsky in one of his lighter moods and demonstrates how he was a master of melody in the finest and best sense of the word. The Serenade has been played by the orchestra with much success at several of its concerts the present season. The final number was the glowing, brilliant colorful overture of Goldmark, "Sakuntala."

Mrs. William Jay, society woman and leader of the subscribers who have bitterly assailed Mr. Muck as pro-German, worked hard all day to prevent his appearance in Brooklyn, but without success. Their failure to stop the concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night did not dismay them.

The last appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York this season is scheduled to take place this afternoon at Carnegie Hall.

Mrs. Jay yesterday issued an appeal to Boston Symphony concert subscribers to send their tickets to her.

Mrs. Jay announced that she wished to obtain the tickets for a definite purpose, in furtherance of the crusade "against this pro-German organization."

Associates of Mrs. Jay in the fight declared the leader of the opposition to Dr. Muck has a plan which will prove successful in preventing further appearances of Dr. Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Manhattan.

N. Y. COMMERCIAL
ess: New York City
MAR 15 1918

News of the Theatres

The Star Spangled Banner was played by Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the beginning of their concert last night in Carnegie aHll. Many police guarded the hall and there was a sprinkling of detectives in the crowd which filled the house owing to suggestions of trouble arising over Dr. Muck's previous difficulties regarding playing the National anthem and the question of his German citizenship.

The strains of the anthem drifted through to the lobby shortly after the concert opened but no demonstration ensued within the walls.

The question whether or not Dr. Muck and his musicians should be permitted to play here has been debated in the newspapers and demands were made that he be stopped. City officials, however, ruled the concert must go on and police arrangements were made accordingly.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
ess MAR 16 1918

After Doctor Muck's glorious reception in New York Philadelphians will have the melancholy satisfaction of knowing that, in hysteric servility, there is one place in the country that can go them one better.

TRIBUNE
s: Providence, R. I.
MAR 16 1918

DR. MUCK PLAYS IN BROOKLYN

A Large Audience Cheers the Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New York, March 16.—Dr. Karl Muck went over the top again last night with his baton and carried the second line trenches of his critics. He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn Academy of Music amid the plaudits of a crowd which packed the house, save for about half of the boxes.

Mrs. William Jay, society woman and leaders of the subscribers, who have bitterly assailed Mr. Muck as pro-German, worked hard all day to prevent his appearance in Brooklyn. Their failure to stop the concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night went against them.

"If the law did not uphold you in Manhattan, it would not in Brooklyn," was the answer to most of their protests.

As a precaution against any one starting a demonstration, 10 uniformed policemen were on duty, outside of the Academy, and about 15 detectives in civilian clothes were within.

LOUDLY APPLAUDED.

Dr. Muck was loudly applauded at the end of the "Star Spangled Banner," which, as usual, was the opening number. He won further applause by his msaterly leadership of Mozart's Symphony in E flat, Tschaiskowsky's Serenade for strings and a work by Goldmark.

Mrs. Jay yesterday issued an appeal to Boston Symphony concert subscribers to send their tickets to her. The tickets desired are those calling for seats at the matinee in Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

Mrs. Jay announced that she wished to obtain the tickets for a definite purpose, in furtherance of the crusade "against this pro-German reorganization."

Associates of Mrs. Jay in the fight declared the leader of the opposition to Dr. Muck has a plan which will prove successful in preventing further appearances of Dr. Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city.

Commenting upon the announced Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck, Mrs. Jay said yesterday:

"I have the deepest respect in the world for a pro-American German and the greatest contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I think I am voicing the sentiments of the American people when I say I think a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart rather than by the papers in his pockets."

Mrs. Jay refused to give any details of her plan for the matinee this afternoon.

om REPUBLICAN

dress Springfield, Mass.

te

Maj Higginson and Dr Muck

Maj Henry L. Higginson's courage in persistently standing by Dr Muck, the conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, commands one's unlimited admiration. Maj Higginson is himself a veteran of the civil war; his patriotism is above suspicion. His unqualified assurance that Dr Muck is unobjectionable to the most loyal American is a sufficient reply to those who have assailed the conductor of the orchestra.

The latest exhibition of this unwarranted and unintelligent intolerance appears in New York. Mrs William Jay, supported by the rector of Trinity, protests against the two remaining concerts of the Boston orchestra in Carnegie hall. Maj Higginson tells Mrs William Jay that Dr Muck is not a German subject. The conductor became a "Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day."

Dr Muck, as a Swiss, is entitle[illegible] the rights guaranteed to all cit[illegible]zen of Switzerland residing or sojou[illegible]ning in the United States by the trea[illegible]ty of 1850. Maj Higginson has not re[illegible]ferred to this treaty and of course D[illegible]r Muck will not invoke its protection in a matter like his connection with the orchestra. Yet people who seek to prevent his appearance with the orchestra in public concerts, or to prevent public concerts by the orchestra under his direction, ignore a treaty of the United States which remains in full force and effect at this time. Article I of the treaty of 1850 provides that the citizens of Switzerland "shall be at liberty" not only to come to this country and live here, but also to "exercise their profession" here.

Dr Muck's profession is that of an orchestra conductor. He is a citizen of Switzerland. He is guaranteed by treaty the right to exercise his profession in the United States. Why, then should Mrs William Jay of New York, or Rev Dr Manning, the rector of Trinity church, attempt to make impossible his lawful connection with the Boston symphony orchestra? Our treaties are the law of the land.

n PUBLIC LEDGER

ress Philadelphia, Pa.

BIG AUDIENCE HAILS MUCK

New York Seems Unmoved by Protest Against German Conductor

Public Ledger Bureau

New York, March 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall tonight, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

Doctor Muck entered the hall through a double line of uniformed policemen and five minutes after was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

n POST

ress: Washington, D. C.

MAR 15 1918

vail.

POLICE AT MUCK CONCERT.

No Hostility Shown, Despite Threats, at New York Performance.

New York, March 14.—With 80 detectives on guard to preserve order, Dr. Karl Muck appeared in Carnegie Hall tonight with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Police protection had been provided because of the many protests against the appearance of Dr. Muck and the fear that a disturbance might be caused by persons who considered him anti-American in his attitude.

The hall was crowded, but there was no disorder when Dr. Muck took his place on the stage. He was greeted with courteous applause, and immediately led the orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Springfield, Mass. UNION

1884

ice on Guard as Muck Leads

Disturbance at Symphony Concert in New York Last Evening.

NEW YORK, March 15—New York last night bowed its head in shame as it stepped down from its proud position in the first rank of the patriotic cities of the Nation, says The Herald.

For Father Knickerbocker, possessor of an enviable reputation for patriotic war service, was compelled to play the unwilling host to Doktor Karl Muck, music direktor extraordinary to the Kaiser, and his 23 enemy alien associates.

While 50 uniformed policemen and a horde of Government Secret Service men looked on, the man who has been barred from half a dozen other cities because of his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero—the Kaiser's favorite—was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while 13 empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and 42 empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumber to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Maj. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his enemy aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season;" a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Maj. Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The 23 enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go also."

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform after his audience had waited several minutes for his appearance—and long after other members of the orchestra had been in their seats. After the applause had subsided and he had ceased bowing, he leaned over and bowed to his orchestra members, waved his baton and they rose to play "The Star Spangled Banner," which he repeatedly had announced as "not being fit for an artist to play," until he was forced to do so by being barred from five cities formerly on the program of the orchestra.

The direktor perfunctorily waved his baton while the orchestra played the national anthem. At the close of the number there was another burst of applause, obviously directed at the leader and not for the patriotic air which he had refused to play in Providence, R. I.

Then, returning to his printed program and the Teutonic symphonies, among which he felt more at home, Muck addressed himself to the duties of the evening and left no opportunity for the criticism that he was acting his part perfunctorily.

The orchestra management chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's 21st birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age. The Chancelor of Zug Canton, in verifying the document, also added a line. "With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection."

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document according to a translation appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed N. 644, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1858, be (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virture of which we give the definite assurance that the abovementioned citizen shall at any time and under all cricumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.

(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER, in the name of the Town Council.

With the best recommendation of all authorities and their representative protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

om HERALD

dress Washington, D. C.

MAR 15 1918

SYMPHONY DIRECTOR PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

Dr. Karl Muck, Though Criticized, Leads Hub Orchestra.

New York, March 14.—The "Star Spangled Banner" was played by Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston symphony orchestra at the beginning of their concert tonight in Carnegie Hall.

Many police guarded the hall and there was a big sprinkling of detectivecs in the crowd which filled the house owing to suggestions of trouble arising over Dr. Muck's previous difficulties regarding playing the national anthem and the question of his German citizenship.

A large crowd gathered outside the hall early in the evening demanding admission, but the supply of tickets had been exhausted.

The strains of the anthem, drifted through to the lobby shortly after the concert opened but no demonstration ensued within the walls. The police saw to it that there was no disorder outside.

The question whether or not Dr. Muck and his musicians should be permitted to play here has been hotly debated in the newspapers, and demands were made that he be stopped.

City officials this afternoon, however, ruled the concert must go on and police arrangements were made accordingly. Inspector Daly took a large number of blue coats to the hall and kept curiosity-seekers moving.

TARGOS [illegible]

JOURNAL

s Providence, R. I.

Concerning Dr. Muck

Major H. L. Higginson's statement in the New York Times yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and the Providence Journal makes it necessary to say that the Journal's attack on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the chairman of the Liberty Loan committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on October thirtieth last. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before the Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr. Muck. Major Higginson's statement that Dr. Muck was made a Swiss citizen "in his childhood" is of course untrue. There is every reason to believe that Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship has been very recently acquired and the public is only waiting for this gentleman's presentation of his citizenship papers to have the doubt cleared up.

Major Higginson's attempt to have it appear that Dr. Muck is not a German propagandist is ridiculous in the face of the facts already printed in these columns. By Dr. Muck's own testimony in a San Francisco court he was a financial supporter of the notorious Viereck sheet known as the Fatherland and had been a supporter of many similar movements with money apparently accumulated by him from his salary as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A specific contribution of three hundred dollars which Dr. Muck believed was given to the Viereck newspaper was made by him immediately after that sheet had declared the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania "because they had sold their souls to England," and another statement over Viereck's own signature that if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin.

CITIZEN

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 16 1918

MUCK GIVES LAST CONCERT HERE

Presents Excellent Programme at the Academy

Notwithstanding the objection by many residents of Brooklyn that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a German citizen, or at least a German by birth and still a German sympathizer, the announced concert of the Boston Orchestra was held at the Academy of Music last night, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton. It was the last of a series of five concerts held here this season by the organization, and as the contracts had been made and the subscription tickets sold with the announcement that Dr. Muck would conduct, it was held that there was nothing to do but hold the concert according to schedule. The appeals to the Commissioner of Licenses and to the Department of Justice were fruitless and the petitions signed by hundreds of citizens went for naught, so far as last night's concert was concerned. However, as stated in another column of to-day's "Citizen," Dr. Muck will appear here no more.

While there were a good many seats vacant, which is something unheard of for a Boston Symphony concert, the audience was large and very friendly, applauding freely the splendid work of the musicians. The feeling appeared to prevail that it might be the last time they would see the famous conductor. As a matter of fact, his resignation has been in the hands of Major Higginson, the head of the organization, for months, but Major Higginson has been reported as hinting that rather than have another conductor he might disband the orchestra.

As was to be expected, there was no disturbance at the concert last night, but to avoid any possibility of such an occurrence, Inspector Meade had posted a guard of half a dozen policemen around the Academy under Captain B. Hayes, and there were ten detectives present from the Poplar Street Bureau, in charge of Captain John Coughlan.

The concert itself was up to the high mark set by the organization in times past, there being no sign of nervousness in the work of the conductor or the orchestra. There were no soloists. For his last programme here, Dr. Muck had selected three pieces of great value.

The symphony was Mozart's in E flat, the third of the wonderful trio of symphonies which this immortal genius composed in one summer. The first number of the second part of the programme was the exquisitely melodious Serenade for strings in C major by Tschaikowsky. This Serenade shows Tschaikowsky in one of his lighter moods and demonstrates how he was a master of melody in the finest and best sense of the word. The Serenade has been played by the orchestra with much success at several of its concerts the present season. The final number was the glowing, brilliant colorful overture of Goldmark, "Sakuntala."

Mrs. William Jay, society woman and leader of the subscribers who have bitterly assailed Mr. Muck as pro-German, worked hard all day to prevent his appearance in Brooklyn, but without success. Their failure to stop the concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night did not dismay them.

The last appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York this season is scheduled to take place this afternoon at Carnegie Hall.

Mrs. Jay yesterday issued an appeal to Boston Symphony concert subscribers to send their tickets to her.

Mrs. Jay announced that she wished to obtain the tickets for a definite purpose, in furtherance of the crusade "against this pro-German organization."

Associates of Mrs. Jay in the fight declared the leader of the opposition to Dr. Muck has a plan which will prove successful in preventing further appearances of Dr. Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Manhattan.

N. Y. COMMERCIAL

ess: New York City

MAR 15 1918

News of the Theatres

The Star Spangled Banner was played by Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the beginning of their concert last night in Carnegie aHll. Many police guarded the hall and there was a sprinkling of detectives in the crowd which filled the house owing to suggestions of trouble arising over Dr. Muck's previous difficulties regarding playing the National anthem and the question of his German citizenship.

The strains of the anthem drifted through to the lobby shortly after the concert opened but no demonstration ensued within the walls.

The question whether or not Dr. Muck and his musicians should be permitted to play here has been debated in the newspapers and demands were made that he be stopped. City officials, however, ruled the concert must go on and police arrangements were made accordingly.

NORTH AMERICAN

Philadelphia, Pa.

ess

After Doctor Muck's glorious reception in New York Philadelphians will have the melancholy satisfaction of knowing that, in hysteric servility, there is one place in the country that can go them one better.

TRIBUNE

s: Providence, R. I.

DR. MUCK PLAYS IN BROOKLYN

A Large Audience Cheers the Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New York, March 16.—Dr. Karl Muck went over the top again last night with his baton and carried the second line trenches of his critics. He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn Academy of Music amid the plaudits of a crowd which packed the house, save for about half of the boxes.

Mrs. William Jay, society woman and leaders of the subscribers, who have bitterly assailed Mr. Muck as pro-German, worked hard all day to prevent his appearance in Brooklyn. Their failure to stop the concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night went against them.

"If the law did not uphold you in Manhattan, it would not in Brooklyn," was the answer to most of their protests.

As a precaution against any one starting a demonstration, 10 uniformed policemen were on duty, outside of the Academy, and about 15 detectives in civilian clothes were within.

LOUDLY APPLAUDED.

Dr. Muck was loudly applauded at the end of the "Star Spangled Banner," which, as usual, was the opening number. He won further applause by his masterly leadership of Mozart's Symphony in E flat, Tschaiskowsky's Serenade for strings and a work by Goldmark.

Mrs. Jay yesterday issued an appeal to Boston Symphony concert subscribers to send their tickets to her. The tickets desired are those calling for seats at the matinee in Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

Mrs. Jay announced that she wished to obtain the tickets for a definite purpose, in furtherance of the crusade "against this pro-German reorganization."

Associates of Mrs. Jay in the fight declared the leader of the opposition to Dr. Muck has a plan which will prove successful in preventing further appearances of Dr. Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city.

Commenting upon the announced Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck, Mrs. Jay said yesterday:

"I have the deepest respect in the world for a pro-American German and the greatest contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I think I am voicing the sentiments of the American people when I say I think a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart rather than by the papers in his pockets."

Mrs. Jay refused to give any details of her plan for the matinee this afternoon.

om REPUBLICAN

dress Springfield, Mas

te

Maj Higginson and Dr Mu

Maj Henry L. Higginson's co in persistently standing by Dr the conductor of the Boston sym orchestra, commands one's unli admiration. Maj Higginson is hi a veteran of the civil war; his otism is above suspicion. His unqualified assurance that Dr Muck is unobjectionable to the most loyal American is a sufficient reply to those who have assailed the conductor of the orchestra.

The latest exhibition of this unwarranted and unintelligent intolerance appears in New York. Mrs William Jay, supported by the rector of Trinity, protests against the two remaining concerts of the Boston orchestra in Carnegie hall. Maj Higginson tells Mrs William Jay that Dr Muck is not a German subject. The conductor became a "Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day."

Dr Muck, as a Swiss, is entitle the rights guaranteed to all cit zens of Switzerland residing or sojourning in the United States by the treaty of 1850. Maj Higginson has not referred to this treaty and of course Dr Muck will not invoke its protection in a matter like his connection with the orchestra. Yet people who seek to prevent his appearance with the orchestra in public concerts, or to prevent public concerts by the orchestra under his direction, ignore a treaty of the United States which remains in full force and effect at this time. Article I of the treaty of 1850 provides that the citizens of Switzerland "shall be at liberty" not only to come to this country and live here, but also to "exercise their profession" here.

Dr Muck's profession is that of orchestra conductor. He is a citizen of Switzerland. He is guaranteed by treaty the right to exercise his profession in the United States. Why, should Mrs William Jay of New York or Rev Dr Manning, the rector of Trinity church, attempt to make impossible his lawful connection with Boston symphony orchestra? treaties are the law of the land.

n PUBLIC LEDGER

ress Philadelphia, Pa.

BIG AUDIENCE HAILS MUCK

New York Seems Unmoved by Protest Against German Conductor

Public Ledger's Bureau

New York, March 15.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall tonight, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

Doctor Muck entered the hall through a double line of uniformed policemen and five minutes after was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

n POST

ress: Washington, D. C.

MAR 15 1918

vail.

POLICE AT MUCK CONCERT.

No Hostility Shown, Despite Threats, at New York Performance.

New York, March 14.—With 80 detectives on guard to preserve order, Dr. Karl Muck appeared in Carnegie Hall tonight with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Police protection had been provided because of the many protests against the appearance of Dr. Muck and the fear that a disturbance might be caused by persons who considered him anti-American in his attitude.

The hall was crowded, but there was no disorder when Dr. Muck took his place on the stage. He was greeted with courteous applause, and immediately led the orchestra in "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Springfield, Mass. UNION

MAR 15 1918

Police on Guard as Muck Leads

No Disturbance at Symphony Concert in New York Last Evening.

NEW YORK, March 15—New York last night bowed its head in shame as it stepped down from its proud position in the first rank of the patriotic cities of the Nation, says The Herald.

For Father Knickerbocker, possessor of an enviable reputation for patriotic war service, was compelled to play the unwilling host to Doktor Karl Muck, music direktor extraordinary to the Kaiser, and his 23 enemy alien associates.

While 50 uniformed policemen and a horde of Government Secret Service men looked on, the man who has been barred from half a dozen other cities because of his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero — the Kaiser's favorite — was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while 13 empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and 42 empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumber to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Maj. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his enemy aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season;" a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Maj. Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The 23 enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go also."

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform after his audience had waited several minutes for his appearance —and long after other members of the orchestra had been in their seats. After the applause had subsided and he had ceased bowing, he leaned over and bowed to his orchestra members, waved his baton and they rose to play "The Star Spangled Banner," which he repeatedly had announced as "not being fit for an artist to play," until he was forced to do so by being barred from five cities formerly on the program of the orchestra.

The direktor perfunctorily waved his baton while the orchestra played the national anthem. At the close of the number there was another burst of applause, obviously directed at the leader and not for the patriotic air which he had refused to play in Providence, R. I.

Then, returning to his printed program and the Teutonic symphonies, among which he felt more at home, Muck addressed himself to the duties of the evening and left no opportunity for the criticism that he was acting his part perfunctorily.

The orchestra management chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's 21st birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age. The Chancelor of Zug Canton, in verifying the document, also added a line. "With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection."

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document according to a translation appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed N. 644, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1858, be (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virture of which we give the definite assurance that the abovementioned citizen shall at any time and under all cricumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.

(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER, in the name of the Town Council.

With the best recommendation of all authorities and their representative protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

m HERALD

dress Washington, D. C.

MAR 15 1918

SYMPHONY DIRECTOR PLAYS NATIONAL AIR

Dr. Karl Muck, Though Criticized, Leads Hub Orchestra.

New York, March 14.—The "Star Spangled Banner' was played by Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston symphony orchestra at the beginning of their concert tonight in Carnegie Hall.

Many police guarded the hall and there was a big sprinkling of detectivecs in the crowd which filled the house owing to suggestions of trouble arising over Dr. Muck's previous difficulties regarding playing the national anthem and the question of his German citizenship.

A large crowd gathered outside the hall early in the evening demanding admission, but the supply of tickets had been exhausted.

The strains of the anthem, drifted through to the lobby shortly after the concert opened but no demonstration ensued within the walls. The police saw to it that there was no disorder outside.

The question whether or not Dr. Muck and his musicians should be permitted to play here has been hotly debated in the newspapers, and demands were made that he be stopped.

City officials this afternoon, however, ruled the concert must go on and police arrangements were made accordingly. Inspector Daly took a large number of blue coats to the hall and kept curiosity-seekers moving.

TABOOS VIOLATED

JOURNAL

s Providence, R. I.

Concerning Dr. Muck

Major H. L. Higginson's statement in the New York Times yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and the Providence Journal makes it necessary to say that the Journal's attack on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the chairman of the Liberty Loan committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on October thirtieth last. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before the Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr. Muck. Major Higginson's statement that Dr. Muck was made a Swiss citizen "in his childhood" is of course untrue. There is every reason to believe that Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship has been very recently acquired and the public is only waiting for this gentleman's presentation of his citizenship papers to have the doubt cleared up.

Major Higginson's attempt to have it appear that Dr. Muck is not a German propagandist is ridiculous in the face of the facts already printed in these columns. By Dr. Muck's own testimony in a San Francisco court he was a financial supporter of the notorious Viereck sheet known as the Fatherland and had been a supporter of many similar movements with money apparently accumulated by him from his salary as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A specific contribution of three hundred dollars which Dr. Muck believed was given to the Viereck newspaper was made by him immediately after that sheet had declared the American authorities were responsible for the death of Americans on the Lusitania "because they had sold their souls to England," and another statement over Viereck's own signature that if a conflict should arise between the United States and Germany the blame would rest on Washington and not on Berlin.

CITIZEN

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 16 1918

MUCK GIVES LAST CONCERT HERE

Presents Excellent Programme at the Academy

Notwithstanding the objection by many residents of Brooklyn that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a German citizen, or at least a German by birth and still a German sympathizer, the announced concert of the Boston Orchestra was held at the Academy of Music last night, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton. It was the last of a series of five concerts held here this season by the organization, and as the contracts had been made and the subscription tickets sold with the announcement that Dr. Muck would conduct, it was held that there was nothing to do but hold the concert according to schedule. The appeals to the Commissioner of Licenses and to the Department of Justice were fruitless and the petitions signed by hundreds of citizens went for naught, so far as last night's concert was concerned. However, as stated in another column of to-day's "Citizen," Dr. Muck will appear here no more.

While there were a good many seats vacant, which is something unheard of for a Boston Symphony concert, the audience was large and very friendly, applauding freely the splendid work of the musicians. The feeling appeared to prevail that it might be the last time they would see the famous conductor. As a matter of fact, his resignation has been in the hands of Major Higginson, the head of the organization, for months, but Major Higginson has been reported as hinting that rather than have another conductor he might disband the orchestra.

As was to be expected, there was no disturbance at the concert last night, but to avoid any possibility of such an occurrence, Inspector Meade had posted a guard of half a dozen policemen around the Academy under Captain B. Hayes, and there were ten detectives present from the Poplar Street Bureau, in charge of Captain John Coughlan.

The concert itself was up to the high mark set by the organization in times past, there being no sign of nervousness in the work of the conductor or the orchestra. There were no soloists. For his last programme here, Dr. Muck had selected three pieces of great value.

The symphony was Mozart's in E flat, the third of the wonderful trio of symphonies which this immortal genius composed in one summer. The first number of the second part of the programme was the exquisitely melodious Serenade for strings in C major by Tchaikowsky. This Serenade shows Tschaikowsky in one of his lighter moods and demonstrates how he was a master of melody in the finest and best sense of the word. The Serenade has been played by the orchestra with much success at several of its concerts the present season. The final number was the glowing, brilliant colorful overture of Goldmark, "Sakuntala."

Mrs. William Jay, society woman and leader of the subscribers who have bitterly assailed Mr. Muck as pro-German, worked hard all day to prevent his appearance in Brooklyn, but without success. Their failure to stop the concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night did not dismay them.

The last appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York this season is scheduled to take place this afternoon at Carnegie Hall.

Mrs. Jay yesterday issued an appeal to Boston Symphony concert subscribers to send their tickets to her.

Mrs. Jay announced that she wished to obtain the tickets for a definite purpose, in furtherance of the crusade "against this pro-German organization."

Associates of Mrs. Jay in the fight declared the leader of the opposition to Dr. Muck has a plan which will prove successful in preventing further appearances of Dr. Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Manhattan.

TRIBUNE

s: Providence, R. I.

MAR 16 1918

DR. MUCK PLAYS IN BROOKLYN

A Large Audience Cheers the Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New York, March 16.—Dr. Karl Muck went over the top again last night with his baton and carried the second line trenches of his critics. He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn Academy of Music amid the plaudits of a crowd which packed the house, save for about half of the boxes.

Mrs. William Jay, society woman and leaders of the subscribers, who have bitterly assailed Mr. Muck as pro-German, worked hard all day to prevent his appearance in Brooklyn. Their failure to stop the concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night went against them.

"If the law did not uphold you in Manhattan, it would not in Brooklyn," was the answer to most of their protests.

As a precaution against any one starting a demonstration, 10 uniformed policemen were on duty, outside of the Academy, and about 15 detectives in civilian clothes were within.

LOUDLY APPLAUDED.

Dr. Muck was loudly applauded at the end of the "Star Spangled Banner," which, as usual, was the opening number. He won further applause by his msaterly leadership of Mozart's Symphony in E flat, Tschaiskowsky's Serenade for strings and a work by Goldmark.

Mrs. Jay yesterday issued an appeal to Boston Symphony concert subscribers to send their tickets to her. The tickets desired are those calling for seats at the matinee in Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

Mrs. Jay announced that she wished to obtain the tickets for a definite purpose, in furtherance of the crusade "against this pro-German reorganization."

Associates of Mrs. Jay in the fight declared the leader of the opposition [illegible] Muck has a plan which will [illegible] successful in preventing further [illegible] rances of Dr. Muck as leader of [illegible] oston Symphony Orchestra in this [illegible]

[illegible] menting upon the announced [illegible] citizenship of Dr. Muck, Mrs. [illegible] id yesterday:

[illegible] ve the deepest respect in the [illegible] or a pro-American German and [illegible] atest contempt for a pro-Ger- [illegible] iss. I think I am voicing the [illegible] ts of the American people [illegible] say I think a man should be [illegible] y the feelings in his heart [illegible] an by the papers in his pock- [illegible]

[illegible] y refused to give any de- [illegible] er plan for the matinee this

N. Y. COMMERCIAL

ess: New York City

MAR 15 1918

News of the Theatres

The Star Spangled Banner was played by Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the beginning of their concert last night in Carnegie aHll. Many police guarded the hall and there was a sprinkling of detectives in the crowd which filled the house owing to suggestions of trouble arising over Dr. Muck's previous difficulties regarding playing the National anthem and the question of his German citizenship.

The strains of the anthem drifted through to the lobby shortly after the concert opened but no demonstration ensued within the walls.

The question whether or not Dr. Muck and his musicians should be permitted to play here has been debated in the newspapers and demands were made that he be stopped. City officials, however, ruled the concert must go on and police arrangements were made accordingly.

NORTH AME

Philadelphia, Pa.

ess

After Doctor Muck's glorious reception in New York Philadelphians will have the melancholy satisfaction of knowing that, in hysteric servility, there is one place in the country that can go them one better.

IES Times
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

LET MUCK PLAY HERE AND THEN BLACKLIST HIM

Institute Directors Kept Resolution a Secret Two Days.

PASSED BEFORE CONCERT

Audience Thrilled by Masterful Work of Director.

Despite the fact that they passed resolutions on Thursday calling for the removal of Dr. Karl Muck from the leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences did not make the fact public until today when they sent the resolutions to the various newspapers for publication.

Just why the trustees did not announce their action before the concert instead of waiting until it was all over and it was practically assumed that Dr. Muck would not come to Brooklyn again until after the war, was not explained.

The resolutions call upon Major Henry Lee Higginson, who organized the Boston Symphony and placed Dr. Muck at its head, to substitute some other leader for the noted conductor. The trustees do not feel that they can continue their contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra while Dr. Muck is its conductor.

The resolutions adopted by the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences on March 14 follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony Concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come.

A. Augustus Healy, president of the Institute, has already sent a letter to Major Higginson in pursuance of the resolution.

The concert in the Academy last night was not only the last of the season but was undoubtedly the director's farewell appearance. Whether it realized that fact or not, the audience was generous in its applause and recalled Dr. Muck four times after the symphony and several times after the other two numbers.

Although there was a general impression prevalent that the cumulative force of the agitation against Dr. Muck would make it impossible to expect him to return next year, the only definite statement forthcoming to that effect last night was a remark of Charles D. Atkins, director of the Department of Education of the Brooklyn Institute.

"When art and war come into conflict," he said during the intermission, "there can be no question which has to give way. Personally, I think that this will be the last appearance of Dr. Muck in Brooklyn during the duration of the war."

Several of the directors of the Institute met and talked with Dr. Muck in the green room before the concert and during the intermission. Geraldine Farrar and her mother were present. Major Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, did not attend.

The attitude of the audience was cordial, especially after Dr. Muck led the orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" with a trifle more emphasis and spirit than he has heretofore shown. After each number he was recalled frequently and in every case finally asked the orchestra to rise in acknowledgement. The clapping was stimulated in places by groups of men and women who appeared to be unmistakably Teutonic, but that rather harmed than helped the general acknowledgement of the musician's genius, for several of his opponents seized upon the incident as a further striking argument of the unwisdom of permitting the Boston Symphony concerts to be continued under his leader-vacant seats where regular subscribers remained away were quite conspicuous in the orchestra. There was one block of between twenty and thirty seats in a few adjacent rows just to the left of the centre aisle and there were more than 100 vacant seats which had been paid for. Mr. Atkins, when they were pointed out to him, said that the seats belonged to regular subscribers.

Times March 16 Continued

"The house was sold out and they are standing up in the back, as you can see," he said.

The vacancies were, therefore, clearly due to a desire on the part of subscribers to show their disapproval of Dr. Muck.

A strong police guard, both outside and inside the building, was on hand to prevent any hostile demonstration. Mr. Atkins and some of the directors were also on hand behind the scenes on the stage when Dr. Muck went out to begin the concert.

Instead of the usual draped flag, the stage was decorated with two great banners and two others extended from the front of the stage on each side out to the line of the boxes. More flowers than usual were in evidence in front of the director's stand.

Dr. Muck led with his usual imperturbable mastery and yet there were indications in his bearing that seemed to show that he realized he was probably making his last appearance in the Academy. Although he might be reluctant to admit it himself, he directed with a trifle less of intellectual stiffness and a bit more emotional feeling than usual. It was to be noticed even in the playing of the National Anthem, when he gave a shade more time to the last phrases and called forth a slightly more impressive emphasis than usual from the full-toned orchestra.

The symphony was Mozart's in E-flat major. It was a masterly piece of interpretation from the short, slow introduction to the final elaborate rondo.

Dr. Muck followed it with Tschaikowsky's Serende for string orchestra, a long, elaborate and richly varied work for strings alone. The technical work of the violins, violas, 'cellos and basses was brilliant in the extreme, especially in the fine tonal passages

TIMES
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

COMMENT AND QUERY.

DOKTOR MUCK CONDEMNED.

Editor, Brooklyn Times:

SIR: What loyal citizen of the United States does not feel a burning interest in the current discussion of the notorious Dr. Muck and his Boston Orchestra? The matter fills many of the best people with amazement and indignation—amazement at the brazen audacity of the Kaiser's Court entertainer in persisting to play before American audiences when he knows he is not a welcome visitor, and indignation that people in Brooklyn are willing to patronize this pronounced alien enemy, who comes here to gather in American dollars while he refuses to have his symphony play the American National hymn. This monumental egotist, like his imperial master, has gall enough to float the Vaterland. If the people of Brooklyn shall sanction this outrage on patriotic sentiment they will stain themselves with indelible disgrace; and if the owners of the Academy of Music rent their hall for such a performance they should be boycotted to the close of the war.

Why does not some red blooded Brooklyn woman follow the example of Mrs. Joy and her powerful backers and say this colassal impudence shall not be allowed. Col. Higginson, the manager of the Boston Orchestra, must be in his dotage, or else a cold-blooded insulter of his country to continue to thrust this unpopular creature before American audiences in the face of the angry protests that have been sent to him from musical specialists and educated people from all over the country. What kind of a composition is the old man anyhow?

I wonder what the wealthy music-lovers of Brooklyn are thinking about when they allow this subject of the nation with which we are in relentless war to entertain them and hand him a handsome reward for his work while our brave boys—the very best America has—are being gassed in the trenches by the devilish soldiers of the leprous monster in Potsdam before whom Dr. Muck is proud to bow down and adore! Shades of Washington and Lincoln! If the rich people of our city have money they don't know what to do with, why not invest more of it in Liberty Bonds, W. S. S.'s and in the humanitarian work of the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A.? Is it possible that the superb harmonies of the Boston Symphony Club are so exceedingly entrancing as to drown the agonizing groans of the American soldiers in the hospitals, while the patriotic doctors in a frenzy of righteous indignation curse the incarnate friends who resort to such execrable methods of warfare instead of coming out into the open and fighting like men. All the bad words in the Standard Dictionary rush through my brain at this moment.

Sir, I hereby, as a minister of the Gospel of the Merciful Lord, protest against the proposed performance of the Boston Orchestra in Brooklyn. Such a performance should not be permitted anywhere under the starry flag. I condemn it as much as I condemn Sunday baseball, and I am opposed to that because it is a flagrant desecration of the day we are commanded to keep holy. I have little use for ministers who make such compromises with Satan. We tolerate far too many foreign customs in this cosmopolitan nation. We want no more of Dr. Muck. Muck! Thank God, sir, that I do not bear such a malodorous name. It is suggestive of a heap of moral decomposition. The world has had enough of Prussian kultur, and Prussian robbery, and Prussian lying and intrigue, and Prussian murder. Away with all this reckless defiance of God, decency, law and democracy! Dr. Muck should be banished at once, and Col. Higginson and his unpatriotic orchestra should be so powerfully rebuked that they will never again dare to perpetrate the indecency against which the best citizens of Manhattan are now protesting. I love America, and still believe the spies should be shot or hanged. We must sweep the accursed vermin from the country, that by some still undiscovered diabolism keeps the Hun Government informed of the time of the sailing of our troop transports. We must let the thick-headed Kaiser and his allies understand that we mean to continue this war with all the resources we possess until autocracy in every form is eliminated, and the democracy of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln is made triumphant throughout the earth. Respectfully,

WILLIAM MacNICHOLL.

March 14, 1918.

om EAGLE
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

DR. MUCK'S CONCERT IS GREAT SUCCESS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Loudly Applauded at the Academy.

PLAYS STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Plainclothes Policemen Present—Orchestra Plays Mozart's Symphony in Masterly Style.

The last concert of the present year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last evening in the Academy of Music, as scheduled, and all the protests and signed petitions which were circulating two days before had little or no effect upon the size and enthusiasm of the audience. There were, it is true, perhaps thirty vacant chairs in the orchestra and one box was unoccupied. These, it was announced, had been sold to subscribers, who did not use them because of the agitation or because they individually wished to register a silent protest against Dr. Karl Muck. But after all is said and done it was one of the best audiences the Boston Symphony has ever played to in Brooklyn, for in the past there have always been empty seats whenever the band has appeared here without the assistance of some noted soloist.

Captain Hayes and a half dozen plainclothes men from the Bergen street police station were on hand. They had nothing to do except to listen to the music, so that the protestants against Dr. Muck might console themselves with the thought that they have been instrumental in raising the standard of musical appreciation among New York's finest. The Manhattan police the night before had a stiffer dose, in that they listened to so scholarly a work as the Brahms Third Symphony, but the Mozart in E flat major was undoubtedly a more agreeable tonic and easier for the Brooklyn men to apprehend.

Two of the plainclothes men stood behind the writer when Dr. Muck began his program. Said one of them:

"Which is Muck?"

"Why, you bonehead," was the answer, "the one with his back to you."

When Doctor Muck entered he was greeted with great applause, and as in Manhattan the night before he had to choke it off by calling upon the orchestra to arise and begin the National Anthem. The band's playing of it was spirited and dignified and it was noted that the trumpets did not distort the music by playing the high B-flat at the close of the phrase "land of the free," a distortion that is indulged in by every other band we have heard this winter. There was much applause following "The Star-Spangled Banner," and after the Symphony and the other numbers Doctor Muck was recalled a number of times and finally had to call upon the entire organization to arise.

As for the concert itself, both the conductor and the band were on their mettle and gave the best exhibition musically that has been heard in Brooklyn this winter. The program began with Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major, the first of the immortal three that were composed within three months of the summer of 1788. Dr. Muck is ever at home in his reading of Mozart, and last evening the band gave a performance distinguished by smoothness of utterance, balance of choirs, beauty of tone and thorough repose and finish. The first movement was a spirited and inspired reading of grace and aristocratic feeling; the Andante reposeful and melodious with its full-sweeping cantelena; the Minuetto a thing of whispering humor; the Finale a true Rondo in its formal elegance. Such interpretation of Mozart we hear only when the Boston organization vouchsafes it to us.

Tschaikowsky's Serenade for Strings which was played by the same orchestra a month ago in Manhattan followed. It is Tschaikowsky in a lighter vein, the Tschaikowsky who was so rarely altogether happy; and as such Dr. Muck and his men played it. The strings were as velvet in texture, colorful and richly expressive responsive as one man to the conductor's beat. Apart from the sheer beauty of the music, the performance was a thrilling exhibition of the compelling virtuosity of the band.

Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala," one of the earliest compositions in which the color of the Orient has been successfully applied by Western composers and the musical father of all the "Schenerazades" and "Thamars" that have come since, was the concluding number. There are those who would prefer to follow a definite program in listening to the work, who would hear with Mr. Apthorp in the low trill "the gurgling of the spring—indicative of Sakuntala's parentage," but the work is best listened to as pure music inspired by the story of the play.

As Dr. Muck conducts it, it is a true overture, a full manifestation of the thought of the drama, and descriptive of the emotional content and the poetic thought contained therein. The richly orchestrated music sparkled and glistened under the burning touch of strings and woods, and glowed with the fire of the East. Even the one memorable passage when inspiration seemed to fail the composer and he reverted to the conventional, underwent transfiguration by the glory of

CITIZEN
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

INSTITUTE BARS DR. KARL MUCK

Trustees Will Not Renew the Contract.

PRES. HEALY WRITES TO MAJOR HIGGINSON

Artists Wanted Here "Who Are in Avowed Sympathy with Ideals and Aims of United States in the War."

Dr. Karl Muck has conducted his last concert in Brooklyn. He appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the Academy of Music, as announced in another column of to-day's "Citizen," but it was practically impossible to prevent him from doing so, as the contract had been entered into with Major Higginson, the organizer and head of the Boston orchestra, and the Major would not substitute another conductor. In future, however, the orchestra will come here with some other hand wielding the baton, or not at all.

The following resolutions were adopted by the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute at their regular monthly meeting held last Thursday, and were made public to-day:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this board of trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck, the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the Institute, has already sent a letter to Major Higginson in pursuance of the resolutions.

The objection to Dr. Muck, as voiced by thousands of persons not only in Brooklyn, but throughout the country, is that he is of German birth, and while he claims to be a naturalized Swiss, he has never given any evidence that he is in sympathy with the United States in the present war.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Let Us Have American Orchestral Conductors.

Dr. Karl Muck's usefulness as a conductor of an orchestra is entirely gone. The Brooklyn Institute trustees have decided not to have the Boston Symphony Orchestra any more until it gets a conductor who is in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the war.

Good music stimulates and feeds the patriotic emotion.

In the heart of a patriotic hearer it seems a sacrilege to have good music presented by a man who appears to regard our ideals and aims in this war with sarcastic contempt.

It would be one excellent result of the war if this country should breed up good American conductors of orchestras, so we would not have to run the risk that is inherent in the custom of importing them.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa. MAR 17 1918

REMEMBERING THE PILGRIMS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Four years ago a world war seemed impossible and we were looking forward to the celebration in 1920 of the three hundredth anniversary of the Pilgrims in Plymouth, Massachusetts. A commission was appointed by the Governor of Massachusetts to take charge of the celebration and it was generally assumed there would be something in the line of a world's fair as a result of their plans.

In view of the history of the world since July, 1914, it is fortunate that no steps were taken for holding a world's fair in 1920, either in Plymouth or anywhere else, but the year will not pass without commemoration of the anniversary, and doubtless it will be done in a dignified and suitable manner.

Even the most pronounced pessimists are hardly expecting the war to last two years more and if peace comes before 1920, there will be a splendid occasion for an international peace jubilee that would have far greater significance than the peace jubilee arranged under leadership of Patrick S. Gilmore in Boston some years ago. German bands and singers would hardly expect a pleasant reception, in spite of the popularity in Boston of Dr. Muck, but players and singers from the allied nations would arouse great interest and promote international good will.

The motto on the seal and flag of Massachusetts might well be taken as the principal for which America entered the war, "Ense petit placidam sub libertate quitem." ((By the sword she seeks a cal mpeace with liberty).

These words and the sentiment they represent are splendidly expressed in the choral work, "Peace with a Sword." This work might well be given as a part of the program of peace jubilee and a companion for it, is found in George Chadwick's setting of "The Pilgrims," beginning, "The breaking waves dashed high."

The Pilgrims were not a musical people and devoted little time or thought of music, excepting the hymns that were part of the church service. But:

"They left unchanged what they have found,
"Freedom to worship God."

At the end of war for freedom what celebration could be more appropriate to honor the Pilgrim anniversary than a grand musical peace jubilee.

B. C. BARNES.

Springfield, Mass., March 6, 1918.

"THE ADOPTED CHILD."

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—I inclose a copy of the poem, "The Adopted Child," requested by J. K. Metcalfe, in "The Press" of February 25.

D. M. WONDERS.

Johnstown, Pa., March 3, 1918.

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

BROOKLYN BARS DR. MUCK

Will Not Invite Symphony Orchestra If He Leads.

New York, March 16. — Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Scienes, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been announced of the action taken by the Brooklyn institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra might continue its visits to Brooklyn.

m HERALD
dress Washington, D. C.
MAR 16

Dr. Muck Again Conducts.

New York, March 15.—In spite of the protests of Mrs. William Jay and others opposed to Dr. Karl Muck's appearance, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra again opened his concert in Brooklyn with the "Star Spangled Banner" tonight. Dr. Muck made his appearance under heavy police protection.

m ENQUIRER
dress Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 17 1918

Boston Symphony Barred

Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn Institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Doctor Muck, the orchestra might continue its visits to Brooklyn.

1884

IES Times
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

LET MUCK PLAY HERE AND THEN BLACKLIST HIM

Institute Directors Kept Resolution a Secret Two Days.

PASSED BEFORE CONCERT

Audience Thrilled by Masterful Work of Director.

Despite the fact that they passed resolutions on Thursday calling for the removal of Dr. Karl Muck from the leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences did not make the fact public until today when they sent the resolutions to the various newspapers for publication.

Just why the trustees did not announce their action before the concert instead of waiting until it was all over and it was practically assumed that Dr. Muck would not come to Brooklyn again until after the war, was not explained.

The resolutions call upon Major Henry Lee Higginson, who organized the Boston Symphony and placed Dr. Muck at its head, to substitute some other leader for the noted conductor. The trustees do not feel that they can continue their contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra while Dr. Muck is its conductor.

The resolutions adopted by the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences on March 14 follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony Concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come.

A. Augustus Healy, president of the Institute, has already sent a letter to Major Higginson in pursuance of the resolution.

The concert in the Academy last night was not only the last of the season but was undoubtedly the director's farewell appearance. Whether it realized that fact or not, the audience was generous in its applause and recalled Dr. Muck four times after the symphony and several times after the other two numbers.

Although there was a general impression prevalent that the cumulative force of the agitation against Dr. Muck would make it impossible to expect him to return next year, the only definite statement forthcoming to that effect last night was a remark of Charles D. Atkins, director of the Department of Education of the Brooklyn Institute.

"When art and war come into conflict," he said during the intermission, "there can be no question which has to give way. Personally, I think that this will be the last appearance of Dr. Muck in Brooklyn during the duration of the war."

Several of the directors of the Institute met and talked with Dr. Muck in the green room before the concert and during the intermission. Geraldine Farrar and her mother were present. Major Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, did not attend.

The attitude of the audience was cordial, especially after Dr. Muck led the orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" with a trifle more emphasis and spirit than he has heretofore shown. After each number he was recalled frequently and in every case finally asked the orchestra to rise in acknowledgement. The clapping was stimulated in places by groups of men and women who appeared to be unmistakably Teutonic, but that rather harmed than helped the general acknowledgement of the musician's genius, for several of his opponents seized upon the incident as a further striking argument of the unwisdom of permitting the Boston Symphony concerts to be continued under his leader-vacant seats where regular subscribers remained away were quite conspicuous in the orchestra. There was one block of between twenty and thirty seats in a few adjacent rows just to the left of the centre aisle and there were more than 100 vacant seats which had been paid for. Mr. Atkins, when they were pointed out to him, said that the seats belonged to regular subscribers.

Times March 16 Continued

"The house was sold out and they are standing up in the back, as you can see," he said.

The vacancies were, therefore, clearly due to a desire on the part of subscribers to show their disapproval of Dr. Muck.

A strong police guard, both outside and inside the building, was on hand to prevent any hostile demonstration. Mr. Atkins and some of the directors were also on hand behind the scenes on the stage when Dr. Muck went out to begin the concert.

Instead of the usual draped flag, the stage was decorated with two great banners and two others extended from the front of the stage on each side out to the line of the boxes. More flowers than usual were in evidence in front of the director's stand.

Dr. Muck led with his usual imperturbable mastery and yet there were indications in his bearing that seemed to show that he realized he was probably making his last appearance in the Academy. Although he might be reluctant to admit it himself, he directed with a trifle less of intellectual stiffness and a bit more emotional feeling than usual. It was to be noticed even in the playing of the National Anthem, when he gave a shade more time to the last phrases and called forth a slightly more impressive emphasis than usual from the full-toned orchestra.

The symphony was Mozart's in E-flat major. It was a masterly piece of interpretation from the short, slow introduction to the final elaborate rondo.

Dr. Muck followed it with Tschaikowsky's Serende for string orchestra, a long, elaborate and richly varied work for strings alone. The technical work of the violins, violas, 'cellos and basses was brilliant in the extreme, especially in the fine tonal passages

TIMES
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

COMMENT AND QUERY.

DOKTOR MUCK CONDEMNED.

Editor, Brooklyn Times:

SIR: What loyal citizen of the United States does not feel a burning interest in the current discussion of the notorious Dr. Muck and his Boston Orchestra? The matter fills many of the best people with amazement and indignation—amazement at the brazen audacity of the Kaiser's Court entertainer in persisting to play before American audiences when he knows he is not a welcome visitor, and indignation that people in Brooklyn are willing to patronize this pronounced alien enemy, who comes here to gather in American dollars while he refuses to have his symphony play the American National hymn. This monumental egotist, like his imperial master, has gall enough to float the Vaterland. If the people of Brooklyn shall sanction this outrage on patriotic sentiment they will stain themselves with indelible disgrace; and if the owners of the Academy of Music rent their hall for such a performance they should be boycotted to the close of the war.

Why does not some red blooded Brooklyn woman follow the example of Mrs. Joy and her powerful backers and say this colassal impudence shall not be allowed. Col. Higginson, the manager of the Boston Orchestra, must be in his dotage, or else a cold-blooded insulter of his country to continue to thrust this unpopular creature before American audiences in the face of the angry protests that have been sent to him from musical specialists and educated people from all over the country. What kind of a composition is the old man anyhow?

I wonder what the wealthy music-lovers of Brooklyn are thinking about when they allow this subject of the nation with which we are in relentless war to entertain them and hand him a handsome reward for his work while our brave boys—the very best America has—are being gassed in the trenches by the devilish soldiers of the leprous monster in Potsdam before whom Dr. Muck is proud to bow down and adore! Shades of Washington and Lincoln! If the rich people of our city have money they don't know what to do with, why not invest more of it in Liberty Bonds, W. S. S.'s and in the humanitarian work of the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A.? Is it possible that the superb harmonies of the Boston Symphony Club are so exceedingly entrancing as to drown the agonizing groans of the American soldiers in the hospitals, while the patriotic doctors in a frenzy of righteous indignation curse the incarnate friends who resort to such execrable methods of warfare instead of coming out into the open and fighting like men. All the bad words in the Standard Dictionary rush through my brain at this moment.

Sir, I hereby, as a minister of the Gospel of the Merciful Lord, protest against the proposed performance of the Boston Orchestra in Brooklyn. Such a performance should not be permitted anywhere under the starry flag. I condemn it as much as I condemn Sunday baseball, and I am opposed to that because it is a flagrant desecration of the day we are commanded to keep holy. I have little use for ministers who make such compromises with Satan. We tolerate far too many foreign customs in this cosmopolitan nation. We want no more of Dr. Muck. Muck! Thank God, sir, that I do not bear such a malodorous name. It is suggestive of a heap of moral decomposition. The world has had enough of Prussian kultur, and Prussian robbery, and Prussian lying and intrigue, and Prussian murder. Away with all this reckless defiance of God, decency, law and democracy! Dr. Muck should be banished at once, and Col. Higginson and his unpatriotic orchestra should be so powerfully rebuked that they will never again dare to perpetrate the indecency against which the best citizens of Manhattan are now protesting. I love America, and still believe the spies should be shot or hanged. We must sweep the accursed vermin from the country, that by some still undiscovered diabolism keeps the Hun Government informed of the time of the sailing of our troop transports. We must let the thick-headed Kaiser and his allies understand that we mean to continue this war with all the resources we possess until autocracy in every form is eliminated, and the democracy of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln is made triumphant throughout the earth.

Respectfully,
WILLIAM MacNICHOLL.

March 14, 1918.

em EAGLE
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

DR. MUCK'S CONCERT IS GREAT SUCCESS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Loudly Applauded at the Academy.

PLAYS STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Plainclothes Policemen Present—Orchestra Plays Mozart's Symphony in Masterly Style.

The last concert of the present year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last evening in the Academy of Music, as scheduled, and all the protests and signed petitions which were circulating two days before had little or no effect upon the size and enthusiasm of the audience. There were, it is true, perhaps thirty vacant chairs in the orchestra and one box was unoccupied. These, it was announced, had been sold to subscribers, who did not use them because of the agitation or because they individually wished to register a silent protest against Dr. Karl Muck. But after all is said and done it was one of the best audiences the Boston Symphony has ever played to in Brooklyn, for in the past there have always been empty seats whenever the band has appeared here without the assistance of some noted soloist.

Captain Hayes and a half dozen plainclothes men from the Bergen street police station were on hand. They had nothing to do except to listen to the music, so that the protestants against Dr. Muck might console themselves with the thought that they have been instrumental in raising the standard of musical appreciation among New York's finest. The Manhattan police the night before had a stiffer dose, in that they listened to so scholarly a work as the Brahms Third Symphony, but the Mozart in E flat major was undoubtedly a more agreeable tonic and easier for the Brooklyn men to apprehend.

Two of the plainclothes men stood behind the writer when Dr. Muck began his program. Said one of them:

"Which is Muck?"

"Why, you bonehead," was the answer, "the one with his back to you."

When Doctor Muck entered he was greeted with great applause, and as in Manhattan the night before he had to choke it off by calling upon the orchestra to arise and begin the National Anthem. The band's playing of it was spirited and dignified and it was noted that the trumpets did not distort the music by playing the high B-flat at the close of the phrase "land of the free," a distortion that is indulged in by every other band we have heard this winter. There was much applause following "The Star-Spangled Banner," and after the Symphony and the other numbers Doctor Muck was recalled a number of times and finally had to call upon the entire organization to arise.

As for the concert itself, both the conductor and the band were on their mettle and gave the best exhibition musically that has been heard in Brooklyn this winter. The program began with Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major, the first of the immortal three that were composed within three months of the summer of 1788. Dr. Muck is ever at home in his reading of Mozart, and last evening the band gave a performance distinguished by smoothness of utterance, balance of choirs, beauty of tone and thorough repose and finish. The first movement was a spirited and inspired reading of grace and aristocratic feeling; the Andante reposeful and melodious with its full-sweeping cantelena; the Minuetto a thing of whispering humor; the Finale a true Rondo in its formal elegance. Such interpretation of Mozart we hear only when the Boston organization vouchsafes it to us.

Tschaikowsky's Serenade for Strings, which was played by the same orchestra a month ago in Manhattan, followed. It is Tschaikowsky in a lighter vein, the Tschaikowsky who was so rarely altogether happy; and as such Dr. Muck and his men played it. The strings were as velvet in texture, colorful and richly expressive, responsive as one man to the conductor's beat. Apart from the sheer beauty of the music, the performance was a thrilling exhibition of the compelling virtuosity of the band.

Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala," one of the earliest compositions in which the color of the Orient has been successfully applied by Western composers and the musical father of all the "Schenerazades" and "Thamars" that have come since, was the concluding number. There are those who would prefer to follow a definite program in listening to the work, who would hear with Mr. Apthorp in the low trill "the gurgling of the spring—indicative of Sakuntala's parentage," but the work is best listened to as pure music inspired by the story of the play.

As Dr. Muck conducts it, it is a true overture, a full manifestation of the thought of the drama, and descriptive of the emotional content and the poetic thought contained therein. The richly orchestrated music sparkled and glistened under the burning touch of strings and woods, and glowed with the fire of the East. Even the one memorable passage when inspiration seemed to fail the composer and he reverted to the conventional, underwent transfiguration by the glory of

CITIZEN
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

INSTITUTE BARS DR. KARL MUCK

Trustees Will Not Renew the Contract.

PRES. HEALY WRITES TO MAJOR HIGGINSON

Artists Wanted Here "Who Are in Avowed Sympathy with Ideals and Aims of United States in the War."

Dr. Karl Muck has conducted his last concert in Brooklyn. He appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the Academy of Music, as announced in another column of to-day's "Citizen," but it was practically impossible to prevent him from doing so, as the contract had been entered into with Major Higginson, the organizer and head of the Boston orchestra, and the Major would not substitute another conductor. In future, however, the orchestra will come here with some other hand wielding the baton, or not at all.

The following resolutions were adopted by the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute at their regular monthly meeting held last Thursday, and were made public to-day:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this board of trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck, the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the Institute, has already sent a letter to Major Higginson in pursuance of the resolutions.

The objection to Dr. Muck, as voiced by thousands of persons not only in Brooklyn, but throughout the country, is that he is of German birth, and while he claims to be a naturalized Swiss, he has never given any evidence that he is in sympathy with the United States in the present war.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Us Have American Orchestral Conductors.

Karl Muck's usefulness as a tor of an orchestra is entirely The Brooklyn Institute trusave decided not to have the Symphony Orchestra any ntil it gets a conductor who avowed sympathy with the and aims of the United in the war.
music stimulates and feeds triotic emotion.
e heart of a patriotic hearer, ns a sacrilege to have good presented by a man who ap-to regard our ideals and aims is war with sarcastic cont.
would be one excellent resul he war if this country shou d up good American conducto rchestras, so we would not ha un the risk that is inherent custom of importing them.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa. MAR 17 1918

REMEMBERING THE PILGRIMS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Four years ago a world war seemed impossible and we were looking forward to the celebration in 1920 of the three hundredth anniversary of the Pilgrims in Plymouth, Massachusetts. A commission was appointed by the Governor of Massachusetts to take charge of the celebration and it was generally assumed there would be something in the line of a world's fair as a result of their plans.

In view of the history of the world since July, 1914, it is fortunate that no steps were taken for holding a world's fair in 1920, either in Plymouth or anywhere else, but the year will not pass without commemoration of the anniversary, and doubtless it will be done in a dignified and suitable manner.

Even the most pronounced pessimists are hardly expecting the war to last two years more and if peace comes before 1920, there will be a splendid occasion for an international peace jubilee that would have far greater significance than the peace jubilee arranged under leadership of Patrick S. Gilmore in Boston some years ago. German bands and singers would hardly expect a pleasant reception, in spite of the popularity in Boston of Dr. Muck, but players and singers from the allied nations would arouse great interest and promote international good will.

The motto on the seal and flag of Massachusetts might well be taken as the principal for which America entered the war, "Ense petit placidam sub libertate quitem." ((By the sword she seeks a cal mpeace with liberty).

These words and the sentiment they represent are splendidly expressed in the choral work, "Peace with a Sword." This work might well be given as a part of the program of peace jubilee and a companion for it, is found in George Chadwick's setting of "The Pilgrims," beginning, "The breaking waves dashed high."

The Pilgrims were not a musical people and devoted little time or thought of music, excepting the hymns that were part of the church service. But:

"They left unchanged what they have found,
"Freedom to worship God."

At the end of war for freedom what celebration could be more appropriate to honor the Pilgrim anniversary than a grand musical peace jubilee.

B. C. BARNES.

Springfield, Mass., March 6, 1918.

"THE ADOPTED CHILD."

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—I inclose a copy of the poem, "The Adopted Child," requested by J. K. Metcalfe, in "The Press" of February 25.

D. M. WONDERS.

Johnstown, Pa., March 3, 1918.

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

BROOKLYN BARS DR. MUCK

Will Not Invite Symphony Orchestra If He Leads.

New York, March 16. — Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Scienes, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been announced of the action taken by the Brooklyn institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra might continue its visits to Brooklyn.

m HERALD
dress Washington, D. C.
MAR 16 1918

Dr. Muck

New York, M... the protests ...e Girls' and others ... Copenhag Muck's appea... black, ... the Boston ... tailored ... 31; New York again opened ... ribbon ... lyn with th... at... $1 ner" tongh... appearance ... denberg's— tection.

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 15 1918

Boston Symphony Barred

Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn Institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Doctor Muck, the orchestra might continue its visits to Brooklyn.

1884

ES
Times
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

LET MUCK PLAY HERE AND THEN BLACKLIST HIM

Institute Directors Kept Resolution a Secret Two Days.

PASSED BEFORE CONCERT

Audience Thrilled by Masterful Work of Director.

Despite the fact that they passed resolutions on Thursday calling for the removal of Dr. Karl Muck from the leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences did not make the fact public until today when they sent the resolutions to the various newspapers for publication.

Just why the trustees did not announce their action before the concert instead of waiting until it was all over and it was practically assumed that Dr. Muck would not come to Brooklyn again until after the war, was not explained.

The resolutions call upon Major Henry Lee Higginson, who organized the Boston Symphony and placed Dr. Muck at its head, to substitute some other leader for the noted conductor. The trustees do not feel that they can continue their contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra while Dr. Muck is its conductor.

The resolutions adopted by the Board of Trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences on March 14 follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony Concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come.

A. Augustus Healy, president of the Institute, has already sent a letter to Major Higginson in pursuance of the resolution.

The concert in the Academy last night was not only the last of the season but was undoubtedly the director's farewell appearance. Whether it realized that fact or not, the audience was generous in its applause and recalled Dr. Muck four times after the symphony and several times after the other two numbers.

Although there was a general impression prevalent that the cumulative force of the agitation against Dr. Muck would make it impossible to expect him to return next year, the only definite statement forthcoming to that effect last night was a remark of Charles D. Atkins, director of the Department of Education of the Brooklyn Institute.

"When art and war come into conflict," he said during the intermission, "there can be no question which has to give way. Personally, I think that this will be the last appearance of Dr. Muck in Brooklyn during the duration of the war."

Several of the directors of the Institute met and talked with Dr. Muck in the green room before the concert and during the intermission. Geraldine Farrar and her mother were present. Major Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, did not attend.

The attitude of the audience was cordial, especially after Dr. Muck led the orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" with a trifle more emphasis and spirit than he has heretofore shown. After each number he was recalled frequently and in every case finally asked the orchestra to rise in acknowledgement. The clapping was stimulated in places by groups of men and women who appeared to be unmistakably Teutonic, but that rather harmed than helped the general acknowledgement of the musician's genius, for several of his opponents seized upon the incident as a further striking argument of the unwisdom of permitting the Boston Symphony concerts to be continued under his leader-vacant seats where regular subscribers remained away were quite conspicuous in the orchestra. There was one block of between twenty and thirty seats in a few adjacent rows just to the left of the centre aisle and there were more than 100 vacant seats which had been paid for. Mr. Atkins, when they were pointed out to him, said that the seats belonged to regular subscribers.

Times
March 16 Continued

"The house was sold out and they are standing up in the back, as you can see," he said.

The vacancies were, therefore, clearly due to a desire on the part of subscribers to show their disapproval of Dr. Muck.

A strong police guard, both outside and inside the building, was on hand to prevent any hostile demonstration. Mr. Atkins and some of the directors were also on hand behind the scenes on the stage when Dr. Muck went out to begin the concert.

Instead of the usual draped flag, the stage was decorated with two great banners and two others extended from the front of the stage on each side out to the line of the boxes. More flowers than usual were in evidence in front of the director's stand.

Dr. Muck led with his usual imperturbable mastery and yet there were indications in his bearing that seemed to show that he realized he was probably making his last appearance in the Academy. Although he might be reluctant to admit it himself, he directed with a trifle less of intellectual stiffness and a bit more emotional feeling than usual. It was to be noticed even in the playing of the National Anthem, when he gave a shade more time to the last phrases and called forth a slightly more impressive emphasis than usual from the full-toned orchestra.

The symphony was Mozart's in E-flat major. It was a masterly piece of interpretation from the short, slow introduction to the final elaborate rondo.

Dr. Muck followed it with Tschaikowsky's Serende for string orchestra, a long, elaborate and richly varied work for strings alone. The technical work of the violins, violas, 'cellos and basses was brilliant in the extreme, especially in the fine tonal passages

TIMES
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

COMMENT AND QUERY.

DOKTOR MUCK CONDEMNED.

Editor, Brooklyn Times:

SIR: What loyal citizen of the United States does not feel a burning interest in the correct discussion of the notorious Dr. Muck and his Boston Orchestra? The matter fills many of the best people with amazement and indignation—amazement at the brazen audacity of the Kaiser's Court entertainer in persisting to play before American audiences when he knows he is not a welcome visitor, and indignation that people in Brooklyn are willing to patronize this pronounced alien enemy, who comes here to gather in American dollars while he refuses to have his symphony play the American National hymn. This monumental egotist, like his imperial master, has gall enough to float the Waterland. If the people of Brooklyn shall sanction this outrage on patriotic sentiment they will stain themselves with indelible disgrace; and if the owners of the Academy of Music rent their hall for such a performance they should be boycotted to the close of the war.

Why does not some red blooded Brooklyn woman follow the example of Mrs. Joy and her powerful backers and say this colassal impudence shall not be allowed. Col. Higginson, the manager of the Boston Orchestra, must be in his dotage, or else a cold-blooded insulter of his country to continue to thrust this unpopular creature before American audiences in the face of the angry protests that have been sent to him from musical specialists and educated people from all over the country. What kind of a composition is the old man anyhow?

I wonder what the wealthy music-lovers of Brooklyn are thinking about when they allow this subject of the nation with which we are in relentless war to entertain them and hand him a handsome reward for his work while our brave boys—the very best America has—are being gassed in the trenches by the devilish soldiers of the leprous monster in Potsdam before whom Dr. Muck is proud to bow down and adore! Shades of Washington and Lincoln! If the rich people of our city have money they don't know what to do with, why not invest more of it in Liberty Bonds, W. S. S.'s and in the humanitarian work of the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A.? Is it possible that the superb harmonies of the Boston Symphony Club are so exceedingly entrancing as to drown the agonizing groans of the American soldiers in the hospitals, while the patriotic doctors in a frenzy of righteous indignation curse the incarnate friends who resort to such execrable methods of warfare instead of coming out into the open and fighting like men. All the bad words in the Standard Dictionary rush through my brain at this moment.

Sir, I hereby, as a minister of the Gospel of the Merciful Lord, protest against the proposed performance of the Boston Orchestra in Brooklyn. Such a performance should not be permitted anywhere under the starry flag. I condemn it as much as I condemn Sunday baseball, and I am opposed to that because it is a flagrant desecration of the day we are commanded to keep holy. I have little use for ministers who make such compromises with Satan. We tolerate far too many foreign customs in this cosmopolitan nation. We want no more of Dr. Muck. Muck! Thank God, sir, that I do not bear such a malodorous name. It is suggestive of a heap of moral decomposition. The world has had enough of Prussian kultur, and Prussian robbery, and Prussian lying and intrigue, and Prussian murder. Away with all this reckless defiance of God, decency, law and democracy! Dr. Muck should be banished at once, and Col. Higginson and his unpatriotic orchestra should be so powerfully rebuked that they will never again dare to perpetrate the indecency against which the best citizens of Manhattan are now protesting. I love America, and still believe the spies should be shot or hanged. We must sweep the accursed vermin from the country, that by some still undiscovered diabolism keeps the Hun Government informed of the time of the sailing of our troop transports. We must let the thick-headed Kaiser and his allies understand that we mean to continue this war with all the resources we possess until autocracy in every form is eliminated, and the democracy of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln is made triumphant throughout the earth. Respectfully,

WILLIAM MacNICHOLL.

March 14, 1918.

em EAGLE
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

DR. MUCK'S CONCERT IS GREAT SUCCESS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Loudly Applauded at the Academy.

PLAYS STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Plainclothes Policemen Present—Orchestra Plays Mozart's Symphony in Masterly Style.

The last concert of the present year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last evening in the Academy of Music, as scheduled, and all the protests and signed petitions which were circulating two days before had little or no effect upon the size and enthusiasm of the audience. There were, it is true, perhaps thirty vacant chairs in the orchestra and one box was unoccupied. These, it was announced, had been sold to subscribers, who did not use them because of the agitation or because they individually wished to register a silent protest against Dr. Karl Muck. But after all is said and done it was one of the best audiences the Boston Symphony has ever played to in Brooklyn, for in the past there have always been empty seats whenever the band has appeared here without the assistance of some noted soloist.

Captain Hayes and a half dozen plainclothes men from the Bergen street police station were on hand. They had nothting to do except to listen to the music, so that the protestants against Dr. Muck might console themselves with the thought that they have been instrumental in raising the standard of musical appreciation among New York's finest. The Manhattan police the night before had a stiffer dose, in that they listened to so scholarly a work as the Brahms Third Symphony, but the Mozart in E flat major was undoubtedly a more agreeable tonic and easier for the Brooklyn men to apprehend.

Two of the plainclothes men stood behind the writer when Dr. Muck began his program. Said one of them:

"Which is Muck?"

"Why, you bonehead," was the answer, "the one with his back to you."

When Doctor Muck entered he was greeted with great applause, and as in Manhattan the night before he had to choke it off by calling upon the orchestra to arise and begin the National Anthem. The band's playing of it was spirited and dignified and it was noted that the trumpets did not distort the music by playing the high B-flat at the close of the phrase "land of the free," a distortion that is indulged in by every other band we have heard this winter. There was much applause following "The Star-Spangled Banner," and after the Symphony and the other numbers Doctor Muck was recalled a number of times and finally had to call upon the entire organization to arise.

As for the concert itself, both the conductor and the band were on their mettle and gave the best exhibition musically that has been heard in Brooklyn this winter. The program began with Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major, the first of the immortal three that were composed within three months of the summer of 1788. Dr. Muck is ever at home in his reading of Mozart, and last evening the band gave a performance distinguished by smoothness of utterance, balance of choirs, beauty of tone and thorough repose and finish. The first movement was a spirited and inspired reading of grace and aristocratic feeling; the Andante reposeful and melodious with its full-sweeping cantelena; the Minuetto a thing of whispering humor; the Finale a true Rondo in its formal elegance. Such interpretation of Mozart we hear only when the Boston organization vouchsafes it to us.

Tschaikowsky's Serenade for Strings which was played by the same orchestra a month ago in Manhattan followed. It is Tschaikowsky in a lighter vein, the Tschaikowsky who was so rarely altogether happy; and as such Dr. Muck and his men played it. The strings were as velvet in texture, colorful and richly expressive responsive as one man to the conductor's beat. Apart from the sheer beauty of the music, the performance was a thrilling exhibition of the compelling virtuosity of the band.

Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala," one of the earliest compositions in which the color of the Orient has been successfully applied by Western composers and the musical father of all the "Schenerazades" and "Thamars" that have come since, was the concluding number. There are those who would prefer to follow a definite program in listening to the work, who would hear with Mr. Apthorp in the low trill "the gurgling of the spring—indicative of Sakuntala's parentage," but the work is best listened to as pure music inspired by the story of the play.

As Dr. Muck conducts it, it is a true overture, a full manifestation of the thought of the drama, and descriptive of the emotional content and the poetic thought contained therein. The richly orchestrated music sparkled and glistened under the burning touch of strings and woods, and glowed with the fire of the East. Even the one memorable passage when inspiration seemed to fail the composer and he reverted to the conventional, underwent transformation by the glory of

CITIZEN
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 16 1918

INSTITUTE BARS DR. KARL MUCK

Trustees Will Not Renew the Contract.

PRES. HEALY WRITES TO MAJOR HIGGINSON

Artists Wanted Here "Who Are in Avowed Sympathy with Ideals and Aims of United States in the War."

Dr. Karl Muck has conducted his last concert in Brooklyn. He appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the Academy of Music, as announced in another column of to-day's "Citizen," but it was practically impossible to prevent him from doing so, as the contract had been entered into with Major Higginson, the organizer and head of the Boston orchestra, and the Major would not substitute another conductor. In future, however, the orchestra will come here with some other hand wielding the baton, or not at all.

The following resolutions were adopted by the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute at their regular monthly meeting held last Thursday, and were made public to-day:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this board of trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck, the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the Institute, has already sent a letter to Major Higginson in pursuance of the resolutions.

The objection to Dr. Muck, as voiced by thousands of persons not only in Brooklyn, but throughout the country, is that he is of German birth, and while he claims to be a naturalized Swiss, he has never given any evidence that he is in sympathy with the United States in the present war.

STANDARD UNION
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Let Us Have American Orchestral Conductors.

Dr. Karl Muck's usefulness as a conductor of an orchestra is entirely gone. The Brooklyn Institute trustees have decided not to have the Boston Symphony Orchestra any more until it gets a conductor who is in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the war.

Good music stimulates and feeds the patriotic emotion.

In the heart of a patriotic hearer, it seems a sacrilege to have good music presented by a man who appears to regard our ideals and aims in this war with sarcastic contempt.

It would be one excellent result of the war if this country should breed up good American conductors of orchestras, so we would not have to run the risk that is inherent in the custom of importing them.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa. MAR 17 1918

REMEMBERING THE PILGRIMS.

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—Four years ago a world war seemed impossible and we were looking forward to the celebration in 1920 of the three hundredth anniversary of the Pilgrims in Plymouth, Massachusetts. A commission was appointed by the Governor of Massachusetts to take charge of the celebration and it was generally assumed there would be something in the line of a world's fair as a result of their plans.

In view of the history of the world since July, 1914, it is fortunate that no steps were taken for holding a world's fair in 1920, either in Plymouth or anywhere else, but the year will not pass without commemoration of the anniversary, and doubtless it will be done in a dignified and suitable manner.

Even the most pronounced pessimists are hardly expecting the war to last two years more and if peace comes before 1920, there will be a splendid occasion for an international peace jubilee that would have far greater significance than the peace jubilee arranged under leadership of Patrick S. Gilmore in Boston some years ago. German bands and singers would hardly expect a pleasant reception, in spite of the popularity in Boston of Dr. Muck, but players and singers from the allied nations would arouse great interest and promote international good will.

The motto on the seal and flag of Massachusetts might well be taken as the principal for which America entered the war, "Ense petit placidam sub libertate quitem." ((By the sword she seeks a cal mpeace with liberty).

These words and the sentiment they represent are splendidly expressed in the choral work, "Peace with a Sword." This work might well be given as a part of the program of peace jubilee and a companion for it, is found in George Chadwick's setting of "The Pilgrims," beginning, "The breaking waves dashed high."

The Pilgrims were not a musical people and devoted little time or thought of music, excepting the hymns that were part of the church service. But:

"They left unchanged what they have found,
"Freedom to worship God."

At the end of war for freedom what celebration could be more appropriate to honor the Pilgrim anniversary than a grand musical peace jubilee.

B. C. BARNES.

Springfield, Mass., March 6, 1918.

"THE ADOPTED CHILD."

To the Editor of "The Press."

Sir:—I inclose a copy of the poem, "The Adopted Child," requested by J. K. Metcalfe, in "The Press" of February 25.

D. M. WONDERS.

Johnstown, Pa., March 3, 1918.

SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

BROOKLYN BARS DR. MUCK

Will Not Invite Symphony Orchestra If He Leads.

New York, March 16. — Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Scienes, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been announced of the action taken by the Brooklyn institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra might continue its visits to Brooklyn.

m HERALD
dress Washington, D. C.
MAR 16 1918

Dr. Muck

New York, M... the protests ... and others ... Muck's appea... the Boston ... again opened ... lyn with the ... ner" tonight ... appearance ... tection.

...immed... skirt... and laces ... Girls' ... Copenhag... black, ... tailored ... ribbon ... ally ... at... $1 ... denberg's— ... 31; New York

ENQUIRER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 17 1918

...ton Symphony Barred

...present only such artists as ...pathy with United States ... Board of Trustees of the ...stitute of Arts and Sciences, ...nounced today, decided not to ... Boston Symphony Orchestra ...on provided Dr. Karl Muck is ...

...r. Henry L. Higginson, backer of ...rchestra, has been notified of the ...taken by the Brooklyn Institute. ...tions expressed the hope that with ...bstitution of some other conductor ... Doctor Muck, the orchestra might ...ue its visits to Brooklyn.

1884

TIMES
s: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 17 1918

The Muck Incident.

Dr. Carl Muck, a very accomplished musician, has led the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a musical organization of the highest quality, at a Brooklyn Institute concert in the Academy of Music here, and there was not the slightest disturbance of the public peace. He had the same experience in New York.

Dr. Muck, according to Major Higginson, who has been the financial backer of the organization for years, is a man of German birth and Swiss citizenship. We are at war with the land of his birth, but not with the land of his political allegiance. The fact that he became naturalized in Switzerland, may be regarded as an indication in some measure of the conductor's lack of sympathy with the government under which he was born. Our own guess at the political view of the musician is that he is thoroughly engrossed in music, considers all governments more or less a nuisance, and preferred the Swiss to the German because it was the nearest at hand that offered him the greatest latitude of personal freedom.

The agitation against Dr. Muck began when a story was published in which it was asserted that he had refused to have his orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner" on the pretext that it was inartistic. The truth of this is denied by Major Higginson.

What interests us particularly is this. Twice since the attack upon Muck began, the Academy of Music has been crowded with Brooklynites who listened to the performances of his musicians with pleasure, and each time under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute. The directors of that great democratic cultural institution are men of superior intelligence and of unquestioned American patriotism. Their countenancing of the performances of this orchestra indicated that Americans who think, have found nothing at all inimical to the cause of our country in these concerts. Now they announce that in future they will be glad to have the Boston Orchestra here again, but under different leadership. Obviously, they rightly desire to refrain from occupying a position which any section of American opinion might hold to be unpatriotic. No one will blame them—at present, and under the existing circumstances, it is the proper course to follow. But it seems a pity that the enthusiasm devoted to preventing what intelligent American opinion considers innocuous, if not on the other hand actually profitable, should not be expended in a direction more helpful to the cause of the country at the point where it actually meets armed Germany on the field of battle. There is so much to be done in a forward moving direction. Why do we waste energy with trifles out of the main line?

EAGLE
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 18 1918

THE PASSING OF MUCK.

The Brooklyn Institute has taken the only practicable way out of a difficult situation in deciding not to engage the Boston Symphony Orchestra next year, if Dr. Muck remains its leader. It has yielded to the feeling of a considerable number of people in Brooklyn, a feeling strong enough so that it has led some twenty or thirty people to leave unoccupied seats for which they had paid as a protest against Dr. Muck's appearance.

Regardless of the question whether that feeling was well founded, it existed and the agitation grew stronger instead of wearing away as the season went on. If the action of the Institute should lead to the disappearance of the Boston Orchestra from Brooklyn we would regret the loss. No other organization has done service for the cultivation of musical taste and knowledge in this country comparable to that of Major Higginson's orchestra, and its playing is without a rival the world over. There are, however, reports of Dr. Muck's probable resignation at the end of this season and they seem to be based on knowledge of the leader's intention. In that case the summer vacation will give abundant time for the selection of a new leader and for the rehearsals necessary to give to the new man perfect control of this unrivaled musical instrument.

In case such a change is made the Institute should certainly renew its contract with the orchestra, and those cities which have this season canceled its contracts—Baltimore, Pittsburg and Detroit—should welcome its return. Major Higginson has been sorely hurt by the attitude of protestants toward his leader, but he must know that feeling like that which has been stirred up in Brooklyn and other cities is inevitable in war time and that this feeling having concentrated upon Dr. Muck a change of leaders will enable his orchestra to go on doing the work for which the whole country has honored it and him and will delight to do them honor in future, once the cause of popular irritation is removed

rom TELEGRAM
ddress: New York City.

LAST WORD ON MUCK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:

Are we going to stand to hear an entirely German music programme? If Dr. Muck thinks he is a great orchestra leader why doesn't he include in his programme Italian, French, Russian, modern as well as old pieces? There are fine compositions by Mortucci, Scambotti, Zantonai and many others, played by the finest orchestras in the world. Persons will never appreciate them unless they hear them. There are lots of fine compositions that can be included in programmes besides German.

AMERICAN CITIZEN.

New York, March 15, 1918.

Apparently we are "going to stand it" as far as our local and federal authorities are concerned. Occasionally a Russian, French or Italian composition is rendered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the programmes are predominantly German.

Last Thursday the programme was composed of two numbers by Germans and one by a Finn, probably in mean celebration of the fact that Germany has just swallowed Finland. It was really an all-German evening.

m PUBLIC LEDGER
dress Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 17 1918

BROOKLYN SPURNS MUCK

Will Not Invite Orchestra Unless New Conductor Is Obtained

New York, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn institution. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Doctor Muck the orchestra might continue ss: Baltimore, Md.

AMERICAN

MUCK NOT WANTED

Brooklyn Sends Word to Boston Symphony Orchestra Backer.

New York, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra, provided Dr. Karl Muck is director. Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn Institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra might continue

m STANDARD UNION
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
e MAR 18 1918

Brooklyn will not have Dr. Muck as a conductor, but there probably would be no objection to his coming back as a motorman.

ablished: London, 1881; New York, 15

n TELEGRAM
ress: New York City.
MAR

ARROGANCE VS. HYSTERIA

Do you not think that when we know of the fiendish horrors our boys are facing now from the culture Dr. Muck represents the most ardent lovers of music could, with Herculean effort, deprive themselves of German culture, at least for the duration of the war, and put up with the great hardship of listening to Italian, French, English and American music?—A Times correspondent.

Now that the hysteria over Dr. Muck's nativity is generally past, there appears to be an intelligent realization that no question concerning an orchestra conductor's personal sympathies can turn the classics of world music into pro-German propaganda.—World editorial.

When resentment of enemy arrogance is termed hysteria it is time to look beyond a fiddler for foes.

WORLD
ess: New York City
MAR 20

Dr. Muck.

To the Editor of The World:

I cannot understand your attitude regarding this Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—you who have been foremost in exposing the enemy aliens.

Had others refused to play our national anthem simply because it was not a "classic," you not only would look upon them with suspicion but you would not tolerate them or their sentiments, at this time particularly.

I read your editorial "A Narrow Escape," and it was satire from the first to the last word on all things American. It made my blood boil with indignation that you of all papers should take such a stand.

On the same page was a letter on "The Dr. Muck Peril," and really it was written just as I would like to have written you.

There are so many in this and other cities who are Americans only as far as the American dollars go, who give no thought whatever to American ideals.

Will you be so kind as to enlighten me why this Dr. Muck is allowed to conduct these concerts anywhere in the United States except in Washington, D. C., and why is he not allowed there?

AMERIC

rom TELEGRAM
ddress: New York City.
Date

"Put None but Americans on Guard."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

Your editorial on Dr. Muck and the Boston alien enemy orchestra is good and to the point. Keep up the good work.

The passive attitude of the present city administration is easy to understand. Elected by the pro-German vote, the pro-German element must be protected and favored.

Moral:—Put none but (real) Americans on guard!

W. R.

New York, March 15, 1918.

h REPUBLICAN
ress Springfield, Mass.

The Boston symphony orchestra returned to its New England home last night without having been mobbed in Carnegie hall. The "hate" campaign engineered by a few New York society women and a fashionable impresario failed of its object, which was, Mrs Jay said, to compel the conductor to "retire permanently from the musical life." But this is only part of a larger campaign to drive foreign musicians from public life and to fill their places with their often inferior rivals who are supposedly "Americans." The chauvinism of the paper called the Chronicle, which is active in the fight against foreign musicians, is more easily understood when one considers that this paper professes to be the organ of high society. In New York the Philharmonic orchestra has had to fight hostile interests. Walter Damrosch, whose name does not seem to indicate Anglo-Saxon origin, has resisted the assaults on Dr Muck. The musical world has its politics and its jealousies, and it is hoped that they will not seriously damage the Boston symphony orchestra, which, thanks to Major Higginson's generous backing and firm judgment, has been able to build up its reputation solely on its merits.

The Am

m NEW YORK HERALD
dress New York City
te MAR 21 1918

WOMEN IN LEAGUE TO END HALF-WAY PATRIOTISM HERE

Organization Launched by Miss Marbury to Demand Undivided Loyalty.

When half the women attending a lecture on Ireland given the day before yesterday at the Colony Club applauded a group of Sinn Feiners, while the other half rose in indignant protest, there crystalized in the mind of one of its most patriotic workers the idea for the formation of a big Woman's Patriotic League.

The league, which will be organized early next week by Miss Elisabeth Marbury, is to bring the women of Fifth avenue and its exclusive neighborhoods and of the larger women's clubs to a realization of their patriotic duty. It is to force them to come out into the open, as truly patriotic Americans or side with the pacifists and pro-Germans.

Miss Marbury spoke heatedly yesterday of the Colony Club meeting, which she and other women there considered an unpatriotic exhibition. And when a French officer in his nation's uniform declared himself a Sinn Feiner there were audible protests from many present.

In Accord with Mrs. Jay.

"This exhibition is in line with those who supported Doktor Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by attending his concerts," said Miss Marbury. "I am thoroughly in accord with Mrs. William Jay, who protested all she could against the appearance of Doktor Muck. If Mrs. Jay and her sympathizers had been organized they would have been able to make a more effective protest. They would have accomplished something.

"New York needs just such an organization of women as I have in mind. It will be useful to the government and it is time everybody should know who is a patriot and who is not. Some of our women club members and women of society are merely dormant, patriotically. They need stirring up. The people of the east side have been considered long enough in this light. Let people turn their attention now to the fashionable set.

"I shall invite to this mass meeting the members of various social clubs," Miss Marbury mentioned especially the Colony Club, the Women's City Club and the Cosmopolitan Club. She added that there were other organizations that would receive an invitation. The time and place of the meeting will be announced later. The programme will present a list of prominent speakers, all of whom will be avowed and active patriots.

Will Have Big Influence.

"Then the women will be invited to join the new organization," she continued. "And when we are organized as patriots we will have some influence in such cases as the one of Doktor Muck and can protest against such meetings as yesterday's at the Colony Club, which was offered by the Art and Literary Committee.

"Too many women of wealth dismiss the question of their patriotism with the placing of a flag on their automobile or flying the colors from their house. Then they will go to a dinner where there are German guests and think nothing of it.

"This Women's Patriotic League will be formed to put a stop to such things. The members will be pure patriots, and they will not submit to any exhibition or presence of anything or any persons not patriotic. It will be the defining line between pacifists and pro-Germans and the true American women."

ONE BABY IN HOBOKEN

From EVENING GLOBE
Address New York City

Dr. Muck.

Editor Globe:—This man, be he of Swiss or other descent, is an avowed pro-German, and should be so handled.

As of old the sacrificial ram had to be found. Why not select this porcus Germanicus, too thick-skinned to Kreislerize himself, but aptly at hand and fit for the occasion?

And having so begun, let us go on and deal in like kind with the whole horde so dangerous to our country.

New York, March 15. CIVIS.

JOURNAL
ess Providence, R. I.
MAR 21 1918

Patriotism and Music

Subscribers Who Left Seats Vacant in Protesting Against Doktor Muck in New York City Used Only Democratic Means of Bringing Their Case Before the Public.

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:

Before the close of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Doktor Muck as director, kindly permit me—as one of the New York citizens who protested against Doktor Muck appearing in New York—to give a summary of the facts which his appearances in Greater New York brought out.

Subscribers who left their seats vacant numbered 600 at three performances and it must be remembered that they who protested against Dr. Muck made no hostile demonstration and used only the democratic means of bringing their case to the public. The protest was ratified officially by the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Grand Army of the Republic, Dr. W. T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, and many such organizations.

Men and women in New York who represent sturdy intelligence and the unquenchable ideals of Washington and Lincoln made known to me their disapproval of the pro-German conductor by hundreds of letters which are now in the proper bands.

Please let me now quote excerpts from a letter from an American subscriber which I believe has reason and restraint:

"I am a subscriber to the Boston Symphony concerts, having had seats in the balcony for some six or seven years—perhaps more. I had not paid much attention to the agitation about discouraging attendance while Dr. Muck conducted the concerts, as it seemed to me the Government was responsible for his acts.

"But after the concert Thursday night I made up my mind that I would not attend another Boston Symphony concert during the war. I think there is not the slightest doubt that the demonstration Thursday night was a German demonstration. It was not a demonstration in favor of an innocent, persecuted man, or in favor of good music. That was plainly to be seen in the fact that the applause was not for the music, but for Dr. Muck himself.

"The plea that Dr. Muck is a Swiss citizen is no argument at all. If he calls himself a Swiss he is a German Swiss, and even then the Germans have stated that their spies, more usually than not, are not Germans but belong to other nationalities. I do not accuse him of being a spy. * * *

"I think the time has come to show Maj. Higginson that New York city does not want his organization in New York when their concerts are used by the German element to show feeling which they are not allowed to display in any other public place here, and I believe if New York shuts them out the effect will be felt in Boston. I would not stop at Muck. I would ban the orchestra and show the whole German colony here that we value our patriotism more than a few concerts, even if they are the best concerts given in this country."

LUCIE JAY.
(Mrs. William Jay).

New York, March 20.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 17 1918

The Muck Incident.

Dr. Carl Muck, a very accomplished musician, has led the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a musical organization of the highest quality, at a Brooklyn Institute concert in the Academy of Music here, and there was not the slightest disturbance of the public peace. He had the same experience in New York.

Dr. Muck, according to Major Higginson, who has been the financial backer of the organization for years, is a man of German birth and Swiss citizenship. We are at war with the land of his birth, but not with the land of his political allegiance. The fact that he became naturalized in Switzerland, may be regarded as an indication in some measure of the conductor's lack of sympathy with the government under which he was born. Our own guess at the political view of the musician is that he is thoroughly engrossed in music, considers all governments more or less a nuisance, and preferred the Swiss to the German because it was the nearest at hand that offered him the greatest latitude of personal freedom.

The agitation against Dr. Muck began when a story was published in which it was asserted that he had refused to have his orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner" on the pretext that it was inartistic. The truth of this is denied by Major Higginson.

What interests us particularly is this. Twice since the attack upon Muck began, the Academy of Music has been crowded with Brooklynites who listened to the performances of his musicians with pleasure, and each time under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute. The directors of that great democratic cultural institution are men of superior intelligence and of unquestioned American patriotism. Their countenancing of the performances of this orchestra indicated that Americans who think, have found nothing at all inimical to the cause of our country in these concerts. Now they announce that in future they will be glad to have the Boston Orchestra here again, but under different leadership. Obviously, they rightly desire to refrain from occupying a position which any section of American opinion might hold to be unpatriotic. No one will blame them—at present, and under the existing circumstances, it is the proper course to follow. But it seems a pity that the enthusiasm devoted to preventing what intelligent American opinion considers innocuous, if not on the other hand actually profitable, should not be expended in a direction more helpful to the cause of the country at the point where it actually meets armed Germany on the field of battle. There is so much to be done in a forward moving direction. Why do we waste energy with trifles out of the main line?

m PUBLIC LEDGER
dress Philadel

BROOKLYN SPURNS

Will Not Invite Orchestra Unless Conductor Is Obtained

New York, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn institution. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Doctor Muck the orchestra might continue ss: Baltimore, Md.

AMERICAN

MUCK NOT WANTED

Brooklyn Sends Word to Boston Symphony Orchestra Backer.

New York, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra, provided Dr. Karl Muck is director. Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn Institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra might continue

EAGLE
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 18 1918

THE PASSING OF MUCK.

The Brooklyn Institute has taken the only practicable way out of a difficult situation in deciding not to engage the Boston Symphony Orchestra next year, if Dr. Muck remains its leader. It has yielded to the feeling of a considerable number of people in Brooklyn, a feeling strong enough so that it has led some twenty or thirty people to leave unoccupied seats for which they had paid as a protest against Dr. Muck's appearance.

Regardless of the question whether that feeling was well founded, it existed and the agitation grew stronger instead of wearing away as the season went on. If the action of the Institute should lead to the disappearance of the Boston Orchestra from Brooklyn we would regret the loss. No other organization has done service for the cultivation of musical taste and knowledge in this country comparable to that of Major Higginson's orchestra, and its playing is without a rival the world over. There are, however, reports of Dr. Muck's probable resignation at the end of this season and they seem to be based on knowledge of the leader's intention. In that case the summer vacation will give abundant time for the selection of a new leader and for the rehearsals necessary to give to the new man perfect control of this unrivaled musical instrument.

In case such a change is made the Institute should certainly renew its contract with the orchestra, and those cities which have this season canceled its contracts—Baltimore, Pittsburg and Detroit—should welcome its return. Major Higginson has been sorely hurt by the attitude of protestants toward his leader, but he must know that feeling like that which has been stirred up in Brooklyn and other cities is inevitable in war time and that this feeling having concentrated upon Dr. Muck a change of leaders will enable his orchestra to go on doing the work for which the whole country has honored it and him and will delight to do them honor in future, once the cause of popular irritation is removed

rom TELEGRAM
ddress: New York City.

LAST WORD ON MUCK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:

Are we going to stand to hear an entirely German music programme? If Dr. Muck thinks he is a great orchestra leader why doesn't he include in his programme Italian, French, Russian, modern as well as old pieces?

There are fine compositions by Mortucci, Scambotti, Zantonai and many others, played by the finest orchestras in the world. Persons will never appreciate them unless they hear them.

There are lots of fine compositions that can be included in programmes besides German.

AMERICAN CITIZEN.

New York, March 15, 1918.

Apparently we are "going to stand it" so far as our local and federal authorities are concerned. Occasionally a Russian, French or Italian composition is rendered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the programmes are predominantly German.

Last Thursday the programme was composed of two numbers by Germans and one by a Finn, probably in mean celebration of the fact that Germany has just swallowed Finland. It was really an all-German evening.

m STANDARD UN
dress: Brooklyn, N.
e

Brooklyn will not have as a conductor, but there would be no objection to hi back as a motorman.

ablished: London, 1881; New

n TELEGRAM
ress: New York City.
MAR

ARROGANCE VS. HYSTERIA.

Do you not think that when we know of the fiendish horrors our boys are facing now from the culture Dr. Muck represents the most ardent lovers of music could, with Herculean effort, deprive themselves of German culture, at least for the duration of the war, and put up with the great hardship of listening to Italian, French, English and American music?—A Times correspondent.

Now that the hysteria over Dr. Muck's nativity is generally past, there appears to be an intelligent realization that no question concerning an orchestra conductor's personal sympathies can turn the classics of world music into pro-German propaganda.—World editorial.

When resentment of enemy arrogance is termed hysteria it is time to look beyond a fiddler for foes.

WORLD
ess: New York City
MAR 20

Dr. Muck.

To the Editor of The World:

I cannot understand your attitude regarding this Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—you who have been foremost in exposing the enemy aliens.

Had others refused to play our national anthem simply because it was not a "classic," you not only would look upon them with suspicion but you would not tolerate them or their sentiments, at this time particularly.

I read your editorial "A Narrow Escape," and it was satire from the first to the last word on all things American. It made my blood boil with indignation that you of all papers should take such a stand.

On the same page was a letter on "The Dr. Muck Peril," and really it was written just as I should like to have written you.

There are so many in this and other cities who are Americans only as far as the American dollars go, who give no thought whatever to American ideals.

Will you be so kind as to enlighten me why this Dr. Muck is allowed to conduct these concerts anywhere in the United States except in Washington, D. C., and why is he not allowed there?

AMERIC

rom TELEGRAM
ddress: New York City.
Date

"Put None but Americans on Guard."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

Your editorial on Dr. Muck and the Boston alien enemy orchestra is good and to the point. Keep up the good work.

The passive attitude of the present city administration is easy to understand. Elected by the pro-German vote, the pro-German element must be protected and favored.

Moral:—Put none but (real) Americans on guard!

W. R.

New York, March 15, 1918.

h REPUBLICAN
ress Springfield, Mass.

The Boston symphony orchestra returned to its New England home last night without having been mobbed in Carnegie hall. The "hate" campaign engineered by a few New York society women and a fashionable minister failed of its object, which was, as Mrs Jay said, to compel the conductor to "retire permanently from public musical life." But this is only part of a larger campaign to drive foreign musicians from public life and to fill their places with their often inferior rivals who are supposedly "natives." The chauvinism of the paper called the Chronicle, which is active in the fight against foreign musicians, is more easily understood when one considers that this paper professes to be the organ of high society. In New York the Philharmonic orchestra has had to fight hostile interests. Walter Damrosch, whose name does not seem to indicate Anglo-Saxon origin, has joined the assaults on Dr Muck. The musical world has its politics and its jealousies, and it is hoped that they will not seriously damage the Boston symphony orchestra, which, thanks to Maj Higginson's generous backing and firm judgment, has been able to build up its reputation solely on its merits.

The Am

YORK HERALD
ew York City
MAR 21 1918

IN LEAGUE
D, HALF-WAY
ISM HERE

on Launched by Marbury to Demand Undivided Loyalty.

Half the women attending a lecture land given the day before yesterday the Colony Club applauded a group of on Feiners, while the other half rose in indignant protest, there crystalized in the mind of one of its most patriotic workers the idea for the formation of a big Woman's Patriotic League.

The league, which will be organized early next week by Miss Elisabeth Marbury, is to bring the women of Fifth avenue and its exclusive neighborhoods and of the larger women's clubs to a realization of their patriotic duty. It is to force them to come out into the open, as truly patriotic Americans or side with the pacifists and pro-Germans.

Miss Marbury spoke heatedly yesterday of the Colony Club meeting, which she and other women there considered an unpatriotic exhibition. And when a French officer in his nation's uniform declared himself a Sinn Feiner there were audible protests from many present.

In Accord with Mrs. Jay.

"This exhibition is in line with those who supported Doktor Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by attending his concerts," said Miss Marbury. "I am thoroughly in accord with Mrs. William Jay, who protested all she could against the appearance of Doktor Muck. If Mrs. Jay and her sympathizers had been organized they would have been able to make a more effective protest. They would have accomplished something.

"New York needs just such an organization of women as I have in mind. It will be useful to the government and it is time everybody should know who is a patriot and who is not. Some of our women club members and women of society are merely dormant, patriotically. They need stirring up. The people of the east side have been considered long enough in this light. Let people turn their attention now to the fashionable set.

"I shall invite to this mass meeting the members of various social clubs," Miss Marbury mentioned especially the Colony Club, the Women's City Club and the Cosmopolitan Club. She added that there were other organizations that would receive an invitation. The time and place of the meeting will be announced later. The programme will present a list of prominent speakers, all of whom will be avowed and active patriots.

Will Have Big Influence.

"Then the women will be invited to join the new organization," she continued. "And when we are organized as patriots we will have some influence in such cases as the one of Doktor Muck and can protest against such meetings as yesterday's at the Colony Club, which was offered by the Art and Literary Committee.

"Too many women of wealth dismiss the question of their patriotism with the placing of a flag on their automobile or flying the colors from their house. Then they will go to a dinner where there are German guests and think nothing of it.

"This Women's Patriotic League will be formed to put a stop to such things. The members will be pure patriots, and they will not submit to any exhibition or presence of anything or any persons not patriotic. It will be the defining line between pacificists and pro-Germans and the true American women."

ONE BABY IN HOBOKEN

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

Dr. Muck.

Globe:—This man, be he of ther descent, is an avowed
, and should be so handled.
d the sacrificial ram had to Why not select this porcus
, too thick-skinned to Kreiself, but aptly at hand and occasion?
ving so begun, let us go on in like kind with the whole dangerous to our country.
rk, March 15. CIVIS.

JOURNAL
ess Providence, R. I.
MAR 24 1918

Patriotism and Music

Subscribers Who Left Seats Vacant in Protesting Against Doktor Muck in New York City Used Only Democratic Means of Bringing Their Case Before the Public.

To the Editor of the Sunday Journal:

Before the close of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Doktor Muck as director, kindly permit me—as one of the New York citizens who protested against Doktor Muck appearing in New York—to give a summary of the facts which his appearances in Greater New York brought out.

Subscribers who left their seats vacant numbered 600 at three performances and it must be remembered that they who protested against Dr. Muck made no hostile demonstration and used only the democratic means of bringing their case to the public. The protest was ratified officially by the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Grand Army of the Republic, Dr. W. T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, and many such organizations.

Men and women in New York who represent sturdy intelligence and the unquenchable ideals of Washington and Lincoln made known to me their disapproval of the pro-German conductor by hundreds of letters which are now in the proper bands.

Please let me now quote excerpts from a letter from an American subscriber which I believe has reason and restraint:

"I am a subscriber to the Boston Symphony concerts, having had seats in the balcony for some six or seven years—perhaps more. I had not paid much attention to the agitation about discouraging attendance while Dr. Muck conducted the concerts, as it seemed to me the Government was responsible for his acts.

"But after the concert Thursday night I made up my mind that I would not attend another Boston Symphony concert during the war. I think there is not the slightest doubt that the demonstration Thursday night was a German demonstration. It was not a demonstration in favor of an innocent, persecuted man, or in favor of good music. That was plainly to be seen in the fact that the applause was not for the music, but for Dr. Muck himself.

"The plea that Dr. Muck is a Swiss citizen is no argument at all. If he calls himself a Swiss he is a German Swiss, and even then the Germans have stated that their spies, more usually than not, are not Germans but belong to other nationalities. I do not accuse him of being a spy. * * *

"I think the time has come to show Maj. Higginson that New York city does not want his organization in New York when their concerts are used by the German element to show feeling which they are not allowed to display in any other public place here, and I believe if New York shuts them out the effect will be felt in Boston. I would not stop at Muck. I would ban the orchestra and show the whole German colony here that we value our patriotism more than a few concerts, even if they are the best concerts given in this country."

LUCIE JAY.
(Mrs. William Jay).

New York, March 20.

From
Address Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 23 1918

Patriotism and Art.

Only a few years ago, police protection for a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert would have sounded as incongruous as a rough house game of chess or being attacked by an infuriated rabbit. Times have greatly changed though we cannot believe that Herr Muck has ever been in danger of personal violence at the refined hands of those whose savage breasts are soothed by the music of Major Higginson's orchestra. We do not think that even Mrs. William Jay under the extremest provocation would go so far as to throw a ripe tomato at him. But if art is art, war is war and we find it difficult to understand how any really loyal American with a proper appreciation of the gravity of the existing situation can do otherwise than applaud the commendable attitude of Mrs. Jay. As for those who in Manhattan and Brooklyn bestowed applause upon the Kaiser's protege which was obviously intended as a rebuke to Mrs. Jay and her sympathizers they simply proclaimed their own lukewarm patriotism, if not their out and out disloyalty to the flag. The Brooklyn Institute is to be commended for its action in refusing hereafter to give its sanction to the Boston Symphony Orchestra while conducted by an enemy alien.

A Musical Note.

AN anonymous friend submits the following nomination and wants to know how we like it:

"For the Berlin Manurechor—Muck."

It has our entire approval especially as it would remove a phony conductor from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

---

m EVENING WORLD
lress: New York City.
e MAR 26 1918

ARREST OF MUCK REPORTED SEQUEL OF PLAN TO SAIL

Symphony Conductor, Held as Enemy, Said to Have Sought Passports.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of Clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where Federal prisoners usually are sent.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given to-day the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

---

om EVENING WORLD
ddress: New York City.
ate MAR 26 1918

MUCK RESENTFUL OVER HIS ARREST; FACES INTERNMENT

Symphony Conductor Said to Have Sought Passports Recently.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated plainly that he deeply resented being locked up overnight in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while Government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among these being Mrs. John L. Gardner.

Major Henry L. Higginson, Civil War veteran and banker, who long has supported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and who had defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused today to comment on the sensational turn of affairs.

It was reported to-day that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of Clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck had been actively pro-German became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

STANDARD UNION
: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 26 1918

DR. KARL MUCK HELD AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is detained here today as an enemy alien, despite his claim that he is a Swiss citizen. He was arrested last night at his home in the Back Bay district.

Dr. Muck and his orchestra aroused criticism by their refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts.

When Dr. Muck conducted a concert at the Academy of Music, following the storm of criticism created by his refusal to play the national anthem in other cities, he played "The Star Spangled Banner," but gave it in a version of his own which aroused criticism by those who thought he had further insulted the feelings of patriotic citizens.

---

om EAGLE
ldress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
te MAR 26 191

DR. KARL MUCK MAY BE INTERNED FOR DURATION OF WAR

Kept in Detention Room at Federal Building, Boston, While Case Is Discussed.

IS ANGRY OVER HIS ARREST

Boston, March 26—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building today, while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while Government officals would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among these being Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of John J. Mitchell, United States marshal.

Major Henry L. Higginson, Civil War veteran and banker, who long has supported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and who had defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused today to comment on the sensational turn of affairs. At his home Major Higginson conferred with members of the orchestra and discussed the question of assigning another conductor for the performance this afternoon and to-night. Friends of the organization suggested to Federal authorities the propriety of permitting Dr. Muck to officiate, but this was refused bluntly.

Washington, March 26—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a German in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father when the son was 6 or 8 years old, went to the Canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss Government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland and also to keep his son from being taken into the German Army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the Cantons and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for anyone to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

---

n EVENING GLOBE
ress New York City
e 26 191

DR. MUCK WILL BE SENT TO JAIL

Noted Orchestra Conductor to Be Held There Pending Orders From Washington.

INTERNMENT IS LOOKED FOR

Government Agents Making Arrangements on the Ground That He Is Enemy Alien.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner Salutes.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among them Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of United States Marshal Mitchell.

Major Henry L. Higginson, civil war veteran and banker, who long has supported the orchestra and who had defended Dr. Muck heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused to-day to comment on the sensational turn of affairs. At his home Major Higginson conferred with members of the orchestra on the question of assigning another conductor for the performance this afternoon and to-night. Friends of the organization suggested

(Continued on Second Page.)

DR. KARL MUC ARRESTED AS ALIEN ENEMY

Taken Into Custody at His Boston Home by Federal Officers.

Boston, March 26.—After a night in a Boston police station, Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken to-day before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officers for questioning. Dr. Muck was taken into custody last night at his home here by Department of Justice agents as enemy alien but no statement was forthcoming as to the grounds for this action.

It was reported that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck. Pending orders disposing of his case, it is expected Dr. Muck will be committed to the county jail at East Cambridge, where Federal prisoners customarily are sent.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all winter and was to conduct last night Bach's "Passion, according to St. Matthew," with orchestra, chorus of 400, boy choir of 80 and soloist, a most stupendous production for which he had restored the original score at the expense of much labor.

BORN IN BAVARIA.

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859 before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence he is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, Federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest last night, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the Federal Government.

From

Address

Date MAR 3 1918

Patriotism and Art.

Only a few years ago, police protection for a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert would have sounded as incongruous as a rough house game of chess or being attacked by an infuriated rabbit. Times have greatly changed though we cannot believe that Herr Muck has ever been in danger of personal violence at the refined hands of those whose savage breasts are soothed by the music of Major Higginson's orchestra. We do not think that even Mrs. William Jay under the extremest provocation would go so far as to throw a ripe tomato at him. But if art is art, war is war and we find it difficult to understand how any really loyal American with a proper appreciation of the gravity of the existing situation can do otherwise than applaud the commendable attitude of Mrs. Jay. As for those who in Manhattan and Brooklyn bestowed applause upon the Kaiser's protege which was obviously intended as a rebuke to Mrs. Jay and her sympathizers they simply proclaimed their own lukewarm patriotism, if not their out and out disloyalty to the flag. The Brooklyn Institute is to be commended for its action in refusing hereafter to give its sanction to the Boston Symphony Orchestra while conducted by an enemy alien.

A Musical Note.

AN anonymous friend submits the following nomination and wants to know how we like it:

"For the Berlin Manurechor—Muck."

It has our entire approval especially as it would remove a phony conductor from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

n EVENING WORLD

lress: New York City.

e

ARREST OF MUCK REPORTED SEQUEL OF PLAN TO SAIL

Symphony Conductor, Held as Enemy, Said to Have Sought Passports.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of Clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where Federal prisoners usually are sent.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given to-day the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

om EVENING WORLD

ddress: New York City.

ate

MUCK RESENTFUL OVER HIS ARREST; FACES INTERNMENT

Symphony Conductor Said to Have Sought Passports Recently.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated plainly that he deeply resented being locked up overnight in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while Government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among these being Mrs. John L. Gardner.

Major Henry L. Higginson, Civil War veteran and banker, who long has supported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and who had defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused today to comment on the sensational turn of affairs.

It was reported to-day that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of Clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck had been actively pro-German became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

STANDARD UNION

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. KARL MUCK HELD AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is detained here today as an enemy alien, despite his claim that he is a Swiss citizen. He was arrested last night at his home in the Back Bay district.

Dr. Muck and his orchestra aroused criticism by their refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts.

When Dr. Muck conducted a concert at the Academy of Music, following the storm of criticism created by his refusal to play the national anthem in other cities, he played "The Star Spangled Banner," but gave it in a version of his own which aroused criticism by those who thought he had further insulted the feelings of patriotic citizens.

om EAGLE

ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

te MAR 6 191

DR. KARL MUCK MAY BE INTERNED FOR DURATION OF WAR

Kept in Detention Room at Federal Building, Boston, While Case Is Discussed.

IS ANGRY OVER HIS ARREST

Boston, March 26—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building today, while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while Government officals would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among these being Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of John J. Mitchell, United States marshal.

Major Henry L. Higginson, Civil War veteran and banker, who long has supported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and who had defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused today to comment on the sensational turn of affairs. At his home Major Higginson conferred with members of the orchestra and discussed the question of assigning another conductor for the performance this afternoon and to-night. Friends of the organization suggested to Federal authorities the propriety of permitting Dr. Muck to officiate, but this was refused bluntly.

Washington, March 26—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a German in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father when the son was 6 or 8 years old, went to the Canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss Government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland and also to keep his son from being taken into the German Army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the Cantons and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for anyone to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

h EVENING GLOBE

ress New York City

e

DR. MUCK WILL BE SENT TO JAIL

Noted Orchestra Conductor to Be Held There Pending Orders From Washington.

INTERNMENT IS LOOKED FOR

Government Agents Making Arrangements on the Ground That He Is Enemy Alien.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner Salutes.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among them Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of United States Marshal Mitchell.

Major Henry L. Higginson, civil war veteran and banker, who long has supported the orchestra and who had defended Dr. Muck heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused to-day to comment on the sensational turn of affairs. At his home Major Higginson conferred with members of the orchestra on the question of assigning another conductor for the performance this afternoon and to-night. Friends of the organization suggested

(Continued on Second Page.)

DR. KARL MUC ARRESTED AS ALIEN ENEMY

Taken Into Custody at His Boston Home by Federal Officers.

Boston, March 26.—After a night in a Boston police station, Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken to-day before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officers for questioning. Dr. Muck was taken into custody last night at his home here by Department of Justice agents as enemy alien but no statement was forthcoming as to the grounds for this action.

It was reported that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck. Pending orders disposing of his case, it is expected Dr. Muck will be committed to the county jail at East Cambridge, where Federal prisoners customarily are sent.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all winter and was to conduct last night Bach's "Passion, according to St. Matthew," with orchestra, chorus of 400, boy choir of 80 and soloist, a most stupendous production for which he had restored the original score at the expense of much labor.

BORN IN BAVARIA.

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859 before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence he is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, Federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest last night, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the Federal Government.

From

Address

Date

Patriotism and Art.

Only a few years ago, police protection for a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert would have sounded as incongruous as a rough house game of chess or being attacked by an infuriated rabbit. Times have greatly changed though we cannot believe that Herr Muck has ever been in danger of personal violence at the refined hands of those whose savage breasts are soothed by the music of Major Higginson's orchestra. We do not think that even Mrs. William Jay under the extremest provocation would go so far as to throw a ripe tomato at him. But if art is art, war is war and we find it difficult to understand how any really loyal American with a proper appreciation of the gravity of the existing situation can do otherwise than applaud the commendable attitude of Mrs. Jay. As for those who in Manhattan and Brooklyn bestowed applause upon the Kaiser's protege which was obviously intended as a rebuke to Mrs. Jay and her sympathizers they simply proclaimed their own lukewarm patriotism, if not their out and out disloyalty to the flag. The Brooklyn Institute is to be commended for its action in refusing hereafter to give its sanction to the Boston Symphony Orchestra while conducted by an enemy alien.

A Musical Note.

AN anonymous friend submits the following nomination and wants to know how we like it:

"For the Berlin Manurechor—Muck."

It has our entire approval especially as it would remove a phony conductor from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

ARREST OF MUCK REPORTED SEQUEL OF PLAN TO SAIL

Symphony Conductor, Held as Enemy, Said to Have Sought Passports.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas L. Boynton and

New York City.

MUCK RESENTFUL OVER HIS ARREST; FACES INTERNMENT

Symphony Conductor Said to Have Sought Passports Recently.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated plainly that he deeply resented being locked up overnight in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while Government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among these being Mrs. John L. Gardner.

Major Henry L. Higginson, Civil War veteran and banker, who long has supported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and who had defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused today to comment on the sensational turn of affairs.

It was reported to-day that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of Clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 26 191

DR. KARL MUCK MAY BE INTERNED FOR DURATION OF WAR

Kept in Detention Room at Federal Building, Boston, While Case Is Discussed.

IS ANGRY OVER HIS ARREST

Boston, March 26—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the Federal Building today, while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay Police Station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while Government officals would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge Jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among these being Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of John J. Mitchell, United States marshal.

Major Henry L. Higginson, Civil War veteran and banker, who long has supported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and who had defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused today to comment on the sensational turn of affairs. At his home Major Higginson conferred with members of the orchestra and discussed the question of assigning another conductor for the performance this afternoon and tonight. Friends of the organization suggested to Federal authorities the propriety of permitting Dr. Muck to officiate, but this was refused bluntly.

Washington, March 26—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time where it is to federal authorities the propriety of permitting Dr. Muck to officiate, but this was refused, bluntly.

DR. MUCK WILL BE SENT TO JAIL

Noted Orchestra Conductor to Be Held There Pending Orders From Washington.

(Continued from First Page.)

Claims Swiss Citizenship.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck had been actively pro-German became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play the "Star-Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

View of Diplomat.

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion for some time in the diplomatic corps here, where it is generally understood that, while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps to-day, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons, and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

Mrs. Jay Tenders Resignation.

Mrs. William Jay of 850 Park avenue, who led the campaign against Dr. Muck when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was last in this city, admitted to-day that she had resigned as a director of the Philharmonic Society more than three weeks ago. Mrs. Jay declined to say for what reason she had resigned, but added that she would continue to remain a member of the society and would take an interest in it from the musical point of view.

"Did your resignation have anything to do with Josef Stransky's attitude on the war?" Mrs. Jay was asked.

"I will say nothing about my reasons for resigning," was the reply. "The only statement that I will make is that I resigned from the directorate three weeks ago."

Mr. Stransky, the conductor of the Philharmonic, was born in Bohemia.

Why shouldn't we sing the praises of our new Spring shirts?

All fast color! All sizes from 13½ to 20! And six different sleeve Variety, too! Even in staples, Whites for ex

TRIBUNE

Providence, R. I.

MAR 26 1918

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 26 1918

Dr. Muck Waits Arraignment

Wife Calls Arrest "Preposterous" as Boston Symphony Director Is Held in Cell—Major Higginson Silent.

Special Despatch to THE EVENING SUN.

BOSTON, March 26.—After questioning by Assistant United States Attorney Dewey, Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in his cell at Station 16, Back Bay, awaiting arraignment as an enemy alien.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed. She refused to believe the officials could bring any charge against her husband.

At the home of Major Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the Symphony Orchestra, a member of the household said Major Higginson, who is suffering from a slight illness, would make no statement.

United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton directed the arrest of the musician last night. Dr. Muck was taken by the police as he was leaving his automobile at his home.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and Department of Justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30 o'clock. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at the theatre or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest. He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

No Bail Allowed.

At the station house he was put into a cell. No bail is obtainable in such cases. The police in charge of the station granted him no favors.

Dr. Muck was to conduct to-night's Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orchestra, a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of eighty have been taking part in the rehearsals.

Lieut. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the Department of Justice.

Dr. Muck, "loaned" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1906 and again in 1912, has been the storm centre for months of a tempestuous controversy between a faction of the public which wanted him treated as an enemy, and another faction which rallied vigorously to his support.

The fury of the controversy burst into its fullest glow late last October when it was reported he refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert of the orchestra in Providence after patriotic organizations of the city had requested it.

The next day Thomas Hewick, Providence special agent of the Department of Justice, filed a report on the matter to Washington.

The 20th Symphony programme, which will be played next Friday afternoon, April 5, and Saturday evening, April 6, with Ernst Schmidt as conducter, will present no soloist, but the three works to be played are of unusual attractiveness and interest. As a tribute to the memory of Claude Debussy, the opening number of the second part of the programme will be his Nocturne, entitled "Nuages." The first number will be Dvorak's Symphony "From the New World," which has not been heard here in several years, while the closing number will be Gustave Charpentier's charming suite, "Impressions of Italy."

The seventh Cambridge Symphony concert of the season will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, April 4. Miss Alice Allen, pianist, will be the soloist. Mr. Schmidt will conduct. The programme comprises Mozart's Symphony in B-flat major, Chopin's Second Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in F-minor and Wallace's Symphonic Poem "Villon."

3/Post 3/31

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

MUCK QUIZZED BY AUTHORITIES

Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Spends Night in Cell After Arrest at Home.

HAD ASKED FOR PASSPORTS

Claimed Swiss Citizenship—Taken in Custody Under Alien Enemy Proclamation.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Major Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where federal prisoners usually are sent.

Claims Swiss Citizenship.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the symphony orchestra was to have given to-day the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

View of Diplomat.

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion for some time in the diplomatic corps here, where it is generally understood that, while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps to-day, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons, and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

From EVENING JOURNAL
Address: New York.
Date MAR 26 1918

MUCK TO BE INTERNED AS ENEMY

Toleration of "German Spirit" in U. S. Ended—Society Woman Ties to See Him in Jail.

By International News Service.

Washington, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., Department of Justice officials announced this afternoon. Muck is now in Middlesex Jail at Boston. It is not known when he will be taken to the fort.

An attempt was made to prove that Muck was a naturalized citizen of Switzerland, but officials point out that that even if he was such a citizen it would not prevent his being interned as a dangerous enemy alien under the President's proclamation directed against all citizens born in Germany.

The arrest of Dr. Muck is simply a continuation of the policy of the Government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or the number of their friends, officials of the Department of Justice announced to-day. Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for months.

The evidence against him will not be revealed.

Dr. Muck held anti-American sentiments, the proof on file here in Washington shows. It is considered very likely here that other members of his orchestra also will be arrested in the immediate future.

NO FURTHER TEMPORIZING.

There is to be no further temporizing with the "German spirit in the United States." There are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances in many localities.

Many arrests are being made, but under the policy of the Department no announcement of this action is made. These aliens and their sympathizers simply are taken into custody on Presidential warrants and sent to detention camps.

This action is absolutely necessary say officials who know all of the facts, if wholesale lynchings throughout the country are to be prevented.

MUCK HELD INCOMMUNICADO.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck underwent extensive questioning at the Federal Building to-day following his arrest on the charge of being an alien enemy. He was examined by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants Daniel Shea and Judge Dewey.

No formal charge was made and at the conclusion of the hearing, Dr. Muck was placed in custody of United States Marshal John J. Mitchel and remanded to the East Cambridge Jail.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, Back Bay society leader and patroness of art, called at the Federal Building during the examination of the musical director. She was unable to talk with Dr. Muck. She waved her hand at him.

It was stated that the performance of Bachs Passion According to St. Matthew will be held to-night at Symphony Hall as scheduled, with Ernst Schmidt as director in place of Dr. Muck.

Dr. Muck arrived at the Federal Building in his own automobile, accompanied by Manager Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in charge of two agents of the Department of Justice. After circling the building four times in an effort to shake off photographers, the conductor alighted and was taken upstairs and placed in the "bad prisoners' pen."

A short time later Deputy United States Marshal John Backus escorted him to a seat in the court room, where Dr. Muck remained, smoking cigarettes, until the examination began.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 26 1918

INTERN MUCK? SAY ARREST IS IMPORTANT

Recent Investigations Have Developed Facts.

SPENDS NIGHT IN A CELL

Director Had Asked for Passports to Europe.

Boston, March 26.—The arrest here of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held today as an anemy alien, is one of the most important since the entrance of the United States into the war, Federal officials declared today.

It was further intimated that from the information which recently developed from Federal investigations of Muck's activities, the former leader of the Kaiser's Royal Orchestra, will be interned for the period of the war.

The action, taken by the Federal authorities, is the climax of a storm of criticism against the musician. The last blow he received was when the directors of the Brooklyn Academy of Music stated a little over a week ago that the orchestra could not play in Brooklyn again, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton.

Dr. Muck spent the night at Station 16 after he had submitted quietly to arrest shortly after 11 o'clock last night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned a little after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judge Dewey, Assistant District Attorney of alien matters for Massachusetts; and, although he was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the Federal criminal code.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all winter and was to conduct tomorrow evening Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," with orchestra, a chorus of 400, a boy choir of eighty, and a soloist—a most ambitious production, for which he has restored the original score at the cost of much labor.

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the Federal Building for hours waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known this evening that only today his representative called at the Federal Building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Dr. Muck had been detained on a trivial charge, and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck said at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband.

The agitation against Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started in Providence, R. I., on October 30, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert given by the orchestra. The Rhode Island and Council of Defense the following day adopted resolutions condemning him "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck has maintained silence regarding this incident from the beginning, but Major Henry Lee Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, has repeatedly asserted that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play the anthem, but that he (Major Higginson) on that occasion refused to change the program to include the anthem.

A demand for the internment of Dr. Muck was made a few days later by the American Defense Society and other organizations on the ground that he was a dangerous alien enemy. Dr. Muck's answer was that he was a Swiss citizen.

When Dr. Muck conducted the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn, on March 5, the management of the orchestra made public a document purporting to be a certificate of citizenship, given him by the town of Nudehelm, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after his twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, according to this document, settled there and became naturalized when Karl Muck was 6 years old. There was a strong agitation against him and a numerously signed petition asking that the authorities refuse to grant a license for the concert.

He was formerly the conductor of the Royal Orchestra in Berlin, but accepted an offer of [illegible] to come to this country [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 26 1918

KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Orchestra Leader Who Slighted American Anthem Taken to Jail

Boston, March 26.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city last night, was taken to the East Cambridge jail today pending orders from Washington.

The Boston Advertiser of March 18 says:

"Doctor Muck was born in Bavaria at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German Empire, but was actively and avowedly hostile to Prussia, and to the formation of a German empire dominated by Prussia. Largely on account of this feeling, the father of Doctor Muck emigrated from Bavaria to Switzerland when the musician was a child four years of age.

"Reared in Switzerland from his infancy, Doctor Muck became, on his own choice, a Swiss Citizen, and when he came to this country, as well as when he went to Germany, he traveled as a citizen of Switzerland, with a passport issued by the Government of Switzerland.

"Being a Swiss citizen, and Switzerland and the United States being at peace and upon terms of amity, it is impossible, of course, that Doctor Muck can be an alien enemy any more than a resident Hollander can be an alien enemy."

Washington, March 26.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck in Boston is the culmination of universal protests against his conduct since he aroused indignation last fall by refusing to play the national anthem in Providence, R. I. As arrests in cases of such prominence invariably are directed by the Department of Justice from Washington, his arrest in Boston was taken to indicate specific direction to the local authorities.

At the time that Professor Muck refused to play the national anthem in Providence Department of Justice officials said they did not regard such an act as conclusive evidence of disloyalty. They accepted the theory advanced by his friends at the time that his action might have been dictated entirely by artistic or temperamental objections to including such a number in a concert program.

That he has been under observation was admitted by oiffcials here, but the policy is not to disclose the immediate causes for detention of enemy aliens.

STAR
Baltimore, Md.

TO DETAIN MUCK TILL END OF WAR

Government to Round Up All Dangerous Aliens Regardless of Social Position.

WON'T REVEAL EVIDENCE

Washington, March 26.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as an alien enemy, is simply a continuation of the policy of the government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or number of their friends, officials of the Department of Justice [illegible] Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for months by agents of the department. The evidence against him will not be revealed. But officials said that they felt confident that he will be detained for the period of the war. It was expected that Dr. Muck would make a fight through his attorneys in Boston on the ground that he is a Swiss subject. Expecting this action, Justice agents today added significantly that this would hardly help him. It is entirely possible to deport the musical director as an undesirable alien if he proves his Swiss citizenship, which is not considered likely, officials said today.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., Department of Justice officials announced this afternoon. Muck is now confined in Middlesex Jail, at Boston, and it is not known when he will be taken to the detention camp at Fort Oglethorpe.

There is to be no further temporizing with the "German spirit in the United States." There are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances in many localities. As a result the agents of the Department of Justice and the other bureaus of government which have been assigned to check espionage and anti-American agitation are working overtime. Many arrests are being made, but under the policy of the department no announcement of this action is made. These aliens and their sympathizers simply are taken into custody on presidential warrants and sent to the detention camps.

This action is absolutely n[illegible]

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 26 1918

Dr. Muck Waits Arraignment

Wife Calls Arrest "Preposterous" as Boston Symphony Director Is Held in Cell—Major Higginson Silent.

Special Despatch to THE EVENING SUN.

BOSTON, March 26.—After questioning by Assistant United States Attorney Dewey, Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in his cell at Station 16, Back Bay, awaiting arraignment as an enemy alien.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed. She refused to believe the officials could bring any charge against her husband.

At the home of Major Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the Symphony Orchestra, a member of the household said Major Higginson, who is suffering from a slight illness, would make no statement.

United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton directed the arrest of the musician last night. Dr. Muck was taken by the police as he was leaving his automobile at his home.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and Department of Justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30 o'clock. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at the theatre or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest. He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

No Bail Allowed.

At the station house he was put into a cell. No bail is obtainable in such cases. The police in charge of the station granted him no favors.

Dr. Muck was to conduct to-night's Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orchestra, a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of eighty have been taking part in the rehearsals.

Lieut. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the Department of Justice.

Dd. Muck, "loaned" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1906 and again in 1912, has been the storm centre for months of a tempestuous controversy between a faction of the public which wanted him treated as an enemy, and another faction which rallied vigorously to his support.

The fury of the controversy burst into its fullest glow late last October when it was reported he refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert of the orchestra in Providence after patriotic organizations of the city had requested it.

The next day Thomas Hewick, Providence special agent of the Department of Justice, filed a report on the matter to Washington.

The 20th Symphony programme, which will be played next Friday afternoon, April 5, and Saturday evening, April 6, with Ernst Schmidt as conductor, will present no soloist, but the three works to be played are of unusual attractiveness and interest. As a tribute to the memory of Claude Debussy, the opening number of the second part of the programme will be his Nocturne, entitled "Nuages." The first number will be Dvorak's Symphony "From the New World," which has not been heard here in several years, while the closing number will be Gustave Charpentier's charming suite, "Impressions of Italy."

The seventh Cambridge Symphony concert of the season will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, April 4. Miss Alice Allen, pianist, will be the soloist. Mr. Schmidt will conduct. The programme comprises Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major, Chopin's Second Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in F-minor and Wallace's Symphonic Poem "Villon."

3/Post 3/31

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

MUCK QUIZZED BY AUTHORITIES

Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Spends Night in Cell After Arrest at Home.

HAD ASKED FOR PASSPORTS

Claimed Swiss Citizenship—Taken in Custody Under Alien Enemy Proclamation.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Major Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where federal prisoners usually are sent.

Claims Swiss Citizenship.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the symphony orchestra was to have given to-day the first performance of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

View of Diplomat.

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion for some time in the diplomatic corps here, where it is generally understood that, while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps to-day, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons, and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

From EVENING JOURNAL
Address: New York.
Date MAR 26 1918

MUCK TO BE INTERNED AS ENEMY

Toleration of "German Spirit" in U. S. Ended—Society Woman Ties to See Him in Jail.

By International News Service.

Washington, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., Department of Justice officials announced this afternoon. Muck is now in Middlesex Jail at Boston. It is not known when he will be taken to the fort.

An attempt was made to prove that Muck was a naturalized citizen of Switzerland, but officials point out that that even if he was such a citizen it would not prevent his being interned as a dangerous enemy alien under the President's proclamation directed against all citizens born in Germany.

The arrest of Dr. Muck is simply a continuation of the policy of the Government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or the number of their friends, officials of the Department of Justice announced to-day. Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for months.

The evidence against him will not be revealed.

Dr. Muck held anti-American sentiments, the proof on file here in Washington shows. It is considered very likely here that other members of his orchestra also will be arrested in the immediate future.

NO FURTHER TEMPORIZING.

There is to be no further temporizing with the "German spirit in the United States." There are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances in many localities.

Many arrests are being made, but under the policy of the Department no announcement of this action is made. These aliens and their sympathizers simply are taken into custody on Presidential warrants and sent to detention camps.

This action is absolutely necessary say officials who know all of the facts, if wholesale lynchings throughout the country are to be prevented.

MUCK HELD INCOMMUNICADO.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck underwent extensive questioning at the Federal Building to-day following his arrest on the charge of being an alien enemy. He was examined by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants Daniel Shea and Judge Dewey.

No formal charge was made and at the conclusion of the hearing, Dr. Muck was placed in custody of United States Marshal John J. Mitchel and remanded to the East Cambridge Jail.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, Back Bay society leader and patroness of art called at the Federal Building during the examination of the musical director. She was unable to talk with Dr. Muck. She waved her hand at him.

It was stated that the performance of Bachs Passion According to St. Matthew will be held to-night at Symphony Hall as scheduled, with Ernst Schmidt as director in place of Dr. Muck.

Dr. Muck arrived at the Federal Building in his own automobile, accompanied by Manager Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in charge of two agents of the Department of Justice. After circling the building four times in an effort to shake off photographers, the conductor alighted and was taken upstairs and placed in the "bad prisoners' pen."

A short time later Deputy United States Marshal John Backus escorted him to a seat in the court room, where Dr. Muck remained, smoking cigarettes, until the examination began.

TIMES
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 26 1918

INTERN MUCK? SAY ARREST IS IMPORTANT

Recent Investigations Have Developed Facts.

SPENDS NIGHT IN A CELL

Director Had Asked for Passports to Europe.

Boston, March 26.—The arrest here of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held today as an anemy alien, is one of the most important since the entrance of the United States into the war, Federal officials declared today.

It was further intimated that from the information which recently developed from Federal investigations of Muck's activities, the former leader of the Kaiser's Royal Orchestra, will be interned for the period of the war.

The action, taken by the Federal authorities, is the climax of a storm of criticism against the musician. The last blow he received was when the directors of the Brooklyn Academy of Music stated a little over a week ago that the orchestra could not play in Brooklyn again, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton.

Dr. Muck spent the night at Station 16 after he had submitted quietly to arrest shortly after 11 o'clock last night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned a little after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judge Dewey, Assistant District Attorney of alien matters for Massachusetts; and, although he was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the Federal criminal code.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all winter and was to conduct tomorrow evening Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," with orchestra, a chorus of 400, a boy choir of eighty, and a soloist—a most ambitious production, for which he has restored the original score at the cost of much labor.

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the Federal Building for hours waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known this evening that only today his representative called at the Federal Building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Dr. Muck had been detained on a trivial charge and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck said at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband.

The agitation against Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started in Providence, R. I., on October 30, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert given by the orchestra. The Rhode Island Council of Defense the following day adopted resolutions condemning him "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck has maintained silence regarding this incident from the beginning, but Major Henry Lee Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, has repeatedly asserted that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play the anthem, but that he (Major Higginson) on that occasion refused to change the program to include the anthem.

A demand for the internment of Dr. Muck was made a few days later by the American Defense Society and other organizations on the ground that he was a dangerous alien enemy. Dr. Muck's answer was that he was a Swiss citizen.

When Dr. Muck conducted the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn, on March 5, the management of the orchestra made public a document purporting to be a certificate of citizenship, given him by the town of Nudeheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after his twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, according to this document, settled there and became naturalized when Karl Muck was 8 years old. There was a strong agitation against him and a numerously signed petition asking that the authorities refuse to grant a license for the concert.

Dr. Muck was formerly the conductor of the Kaiser's Royal Orchestra in Berlin, and in 1912 accepted an offer of [illegible] to come to this country [illegible] Boston Symphony Or-

PUBLIC LEDGER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 26 1918

KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Orchestra Leader Who Slighted American Anthem Taken to Jail

Boston, March 26.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city last night, was taken to the East Cambridge jail today pending orders from Washington.

The Boston Advertiser of March 18 says:

"Doctor Muck was born in Bavaria at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German Empire, but was actively and avowedly hostile to Prussia, and to the formation of a German empire dominated by Prussia. Largely on account of this feeling, the father of Doctor Muck emigrated from Bavaria to Switzerland when the musician was a child four years of age.

"Reared in Switzerland from his infancy, Doctor Muck became, on his own choice, a Swiss Citizen, and when he came to this country, as well as when he went to Germany, he traveled as a citizen of Switzerland, with a passport issued by the Government of Switzerland.

"Being a Swiss citizen, and Switzerland and the United States being at peace and upon terms of amity, it is impossible, of course, that Doctor Muck can be an alien enemy any more than a resident Hollander can be an alien enemy."

Washington, March 26.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck in Boston is the culmination of universal protests against his conduct since he aroused indignation last fall by refusing to play the national anthem in Providence, R. I. As arrests in cases of such prominence invariably are directed by the Department of Justice from Washington, his arrest in Boston was taken to indicate specific direction to the local authorities.

At the time that Professor Muck refused to play the national anthem in Providence Department of Justice officials said they did not regard such an act as conclusive evidence of disloyalty. They accepted the theory advanced by his friends at the time that his action might have been dictated entirely by artistic or temperamental objections to including such a number in a concert program.

That he has been under observation was admitted by officials here, but the policy is not to disclose the immediate reason for detention of enemy aliens.

STAR
Address: Baltimore, Md.

TO DETAIN MUCK TILL END OF WAR

Government to Round Up All Dangerous Aliens Regardless of Social Position.

WON'T REVEAL EVIDENCE

Washington, March 26.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as an alien enemy, is simply a continuation of the policy of the government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or number of their friends, officials of the Department of Justice announced today. Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for months by agents of the department. The evidence against him will not be revealed. But officials said that they felt confident that he will be detained for the period of the war. It was expected that Dr. Muck would make a fight through his attorneys in Boston on the ground that he is a Swiss subject. Expecting this action, Justice agents today added significantly that this would hardly help him. It is entirely possible to deport the musical director as an undesirable alien if he proves his Swiss citizenship, which is not considered likely, officials said today.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., Department of Justice officials announced this afternoon. Muck is now confined in Middlesex Jail, at Boston, and it is not known when he will be taken to the detention camp at Fort Oglethorpe.

There is to be no further temporizing with the "German spirit in the United States." There are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances in many localities. As a result the agents of the Department of Justice and the other bureaus of government which have been assigned to check espionage and anti-American agitation are working overtime. Many arrests are being made, but under the policy of the department no announcement of this action is made. These aliens and their sympathizers simply are taken into custody on presidential warrants and sent to the detention camps.

This action is absolutely n[illegible]

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 26 1918

Dr. Muck Waits Arraignment

Wife Calls Arrest "Preposterous" as Boston Symphony Director Is Held in Cell—Major Higginson Silent.

Special Despatch to THE EVENING SUN.

BOSTON, March 26.—After questioning by Assistant United States Attorney Dewey, Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in his cell at Station 16, Back Bay, awaiting arraignment as an enemy alien.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed. She refused to believe the officials could bring any charge against her husband.

At the home of Major Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the Symphony Orchestra, a member of the household said Major Higginson, who is suffering from a slight illness, would make no statement.

United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton directed the arrest of the musician last night. Dr. Muck was taken by the police as he was leaving his automobile at his home.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and Department of Justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30 o'clock. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at the theatre or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest. He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

No Bail Allowed.

At the station house he was put into a cell. No bail is obtainable in such cases. The police in charge of the station granted him no favors.

Dr. Muck was to conduct to-night's Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orchestra, a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of eighty have been taking part in the rehearsals.

Lieut. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the Department of Justice.

Dr. Muck, "loaned" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1906 and again in 1912, has been the storm centre for months of a tempestuous controversy between a faction of the public which wanted him treated as an enemy, and another faction which rallied vigorously to his support.

The fury of the controversy burst into its fullest glow late last October when it was reported he refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert of the orchestra in Providence after patriotic organizations of the city had requested it.

The next day Thomas Hewick, Providence special agent of the Department of Justice, filed a report on the matter to Washington.

The 20th Symphony programme, which will be played next Friday afternoon, April 5, and Saturday evening, April 6, with Ernst Schmidt as conductor, will present no soloist, but the three works to be played are of unusual attractiveness and interest. As a tribute to the memory of Claude Debussy, the opening number of the second part of the programme will be his Nocturne, entitled "Nuages." The first number will be Dvorak's Symphony "From the New World," which has not been heard here in several years, while the closing number will be Gustave Charpentier's charming suite, "Impressions of Italy."

The seventh Cambridge Symphony concert of the season will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, April 4. Miss Alice Allen, pianist, will be the soloist. Mr. Schmidt will conduct. The programme comprises Mozart's Symphony in B-flat major, Chopin's Second Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in F-minor and Wallace's Symphonic Poem "Villon."

3/Post 3/31

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

MUCK QUIZZED BY AUTHORITIES

Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Spends Night in Cell After Arrest at Home.

SAID ASKED FOR PASSPORTS

Claimed Swiss Citizenship—Taken in Custody Under Alien Enemy Proclamation.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Major Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where federal prisoners usually are sent.

Claims Swiss Citizenship.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the symphony orchestra was to have given to-day the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

View of Diplomat.

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion for some time in the diplomatic corps here, where it is generally understood that, while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps to-day, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons, and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

From EVENING JOURNAL
Address: New York.
Date MAR 26 1918

MUCK TO BE INTERNED AS ENEMY

Toleration of "German Spirit" in U. S. Ended—Society Woman Ties to See Him in Jail.

By International News Service.

Washington, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., Department of Justice officials announced this afternoon. Muck is now in Middlesex Jail at Boston. It is not known when he will be taken to the fort.

An attempt was made to prove that Muck was a naturalized citizen of Switzerland, but officials point out that even if he was such a citizen it would not prevent his being interned as a dangerous enemy alien under the President's proclamation directed against all citizens born in Germany.

The arrest of Dr. Muck is simply a continuation of the policy of the Government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or the number of their friends, officials of the Department of Justice announced to-day. Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for months.

The evidence against him will not be revealed.

Dr. Muck held anti-American sentiments, the proof on file here in Washington shows. It is considered very likely here that other members of his orchestra also will be arrested in the immediate future.

NO FURTHER TEMPORIZING.

There is to be no further temporizing with the "German spirit in the United States." There are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances in many localities.

Many arrests are being made, but under the policy of the Department no announcement of this action is made. These aliens and their sympathizers simply are taken into custody on Presidential warrants and sent to detention camps.

This action is absolutely necessary say officials who know all of the facts, if wholesale lynchings throughout the country are to be prevented.

MUCK HELD INCOMMUNICADO.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck underwent extensive questioning at the Federal Building to-day following his arrest on the charge of being an alien enemy. He was examined by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants Daniel Shea and Judge Dewey.

No formal charge was made and at the conclusion of the hearing, Dr. Muck was placed in custody of United States Marshal John J. Mitchel and remanded to the East Cambridge Jail.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, Back Bay society leader and patroness of art, called at the Federal Building during the examination of the musical director. She was unable to talk with Dr. Muck. She waved her hand at him.

It was stated that the performance of Bachs Passion According to St. Matthew will be held to-night at Symphony Hall as scheduled, with Ernst Schmidt as director in place of Dr. Muck.

Dr. Muck arrived at the Federal Building in his own automobile, accompanied by Manager Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in charge of two agents of the Department of Justice. After circling the building four times in an effort to shake off photographers, the conductor alighted and was taken upstairs and placed in the "bad prisoners' pen."

A short time later Deputy United States Marshal John Backus escorted him to a seat in the court room, where Dr. Muck remained, smoking cigarettes, until the examination began.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 26 1918

INTERN MUCK? SAY ARREST IS IMPORTANT

Recent Investigations Have Developed Facts.

SPENDS NIGHT IN A CELL

Director Had Asked for Passports to Europe.

Boston, March 26.—The arrest here of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held today as an anemy alien, is one of the most important since the entrance of the United States into the war, Federal officials declared today.

It was further intimated that from the information which recently developed from Federal investigations of Muck's activities, the former leader of the Kaiser's Royal Orchestra, will be interned for the period of the war.

The action, taken by the Federal authorities, is the climax of a storm of criticism against the musician. The last blow he received was when the directors of the Brooklyn Academy of Music stated a little over a week ago that the orchestra could not play in Brooklyn again, with Dr. Muck wielding the baton.

Dr. Muck spent the night at Station 16 after he had submitted quietly to arrest shortly after 11 o'clock last night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned a little after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judge Dewey, Assistant District Attorney of alien matters for Massachusetts; and, although he was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the Federal criminal code.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all winter and was to conduct tomorrow evening Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," with orchestra, a chorus of 400, a boy choir of eighty, and a soloist—a most ambitious production, for which he has restored the original score at the cost of much labor.

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the Federal Building for hours waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known this evening that only today his representative called at the Federal Building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Dr. Muck had been detained on a trivial charge, and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck said at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband.

The agitation against Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started in Providence, R. I., on October 30, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert given by the orchestra. The Rhode Island Council of Defense the following day adopted resolutions condemning him "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck has maintained silence regarding this incident from the beginning, but Major Henry Lee Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, has repeatedly asserted that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play the anthem, but that he (Major Higginson) on that occasion refused to change the program to include the anthem.

A demand for the internment of Dr. Muck was made a few days later by the American Defense Society and other organizations on the ground that he was a dangerous alien enemy. Dr. Muck's answer was that he was a Swiss citizen.

When Dr. Muck conducted the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn, on March 5, the management of the orchestra made public a document purporting to be a certificate of citizenship, given him by the town of Nudeheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, [illegible] soon after his twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, according to this document, settled there and [illegible] naturalized when Karl Muck [illegible] years old. There was a strong [illegible] against him and a numerously signed petition asking that the [illegible] refuse to grant a license [illegible]

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 26 1918

KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Orchestra Leader Who Slighted American Anthem Taken to Jail

Boston, March 26.

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city last night, was taken to the East Cambridge jail today pending orders from Washington.

The Boston Advertiser of March 18 says:

"Doctor Muck was born in Bavaria at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German Empire, but was actively and avowedly hostile to Prussia, and to the formation of a German empire dominated by Prussia. Largely on account of this feeling, the father of Doctor Muck emigrated from Bavaria to Switzerland when the musician was a child four years of age.

"Reared in Switzerland from his infancy, Doctor Muck became, on his own choice, a Swiss Citizen, and when he came to this country, as well as when he went to Germany, he traveled as a citizen of Switzerland, with a passport issued by the Government of Switzerland.

"Being a Swiss citizen, and Switzerland and the United States being at peace and upon terms of amity, it is impossible, of course, that Doctor Muck can be an alien enemy any more than a resident Hollander can be an alien enemy."

Washington, March 26.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck in Boston is the culmination of universal protests against his conduct since he aroused indignation last fall by refusing to play the national anthem in Providence, R. I. As arrests in cases of such prominence invariably are directed by the Department of Justice from Washington, his arrest in Boston was taken to indicate specific direction to the local authorities.

At the time that Professor Muck refused to play the national anthem in Providence Department of Justice officials said they did not regard such an act as conclusive evidence of disloyalty. They accepted the theory advanced by his friends at the time that his action might have been dictated entirely by artistic or temperamental objections to including such a number in a concert program.

That he has been under observation was admitted by officials here, but the policy is not to disclose the immediate causes for detention of enemy aliens.

STAR
Baltimore, Md.

TO DETAIN MUCK TILL END OF WAR

Government to Round Up All Dangerous Aliens Regardless of Social Position.

WON'T REVEAL EVIDENCE

Washington, March 26.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as an alien enemy, is simply a continuation of the policy of the government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or number of their friends, officials of the Department of Justice [illegible] Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for months by agents of the department. The evidence against him will not be revealed. But officials said that they felt confident that he will be detained for the period of the war. It was expected that Dr. Muck would make a fight through his attorneys in Boston on the ground that he is a Swiss subject. Expecting this action, Justice agents today added significantly that this would hardly help him. It is entirely possible to deport the musical director as an undesirable alien if he proves his Swiss citizenship, which is not considered likely, officials said today.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., Department of Justice officials announced this afternoon. Muck is now confined in Middlesex Jail, at Boston, and it is not known when he will be taken to the detention camp at Fort Oglethorpe.

There is to be no further temporizing with the "German spirit in the United States." There are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances in many localities. As a result the agents of the Department of Justice and the other bureaus of government which have been assigned to check espionage and anti-American agitation are working overtime. Many arrests are being made, but under the policy of the department no announcement of this action is made. These aliens and their sympathizers simply are taken into custody on presidential warrants and sent to the detention camps.

This action is absolutely n[illegible]

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.
MAR 1918

ARREST OF DR. MUCK MOST IMPORTANT YET

Officials Say Seizure Of Musician Is Biggest Catch Since U. S. Entered The War.

BAIL HAS BEEN DENIED TO ORCHESTRA DIRECTOR

Prisoner Likely To Be Interned In This Country Until Peace Comes.

Boston, March 26.—The arrest here of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held as an enemy alien, is one of the most important since the entrance of the United States into the war, Federal officials said today.

It was further intimated that from the information which recently developed from Federal investigations of Muck's activities, the former leader of the Kaiser's royal orchestra will be interned for the period of the war.

Bail for Dr. Muck has been refused.

Famous Musician In Cell

DR. KARL MUCK

rchestra, who is under arrest in that city

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR

KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ALIEN ENEMY

Orchestra Leader Who Slighted U. S. Anthem in Boston Cell

DETAILS KEPT SECRET

Boston, March 25.

DR. KARL MUCK, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late tonight. He was lodged at a police station for the night and it was announced that, pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail tomorrow.

The Boston Advertiser of March 18 says:

"Doctor Muck was born in Bavaria at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German Empire, but was actively and avowedly hostile to Prussia, and to the formation of a German empire dominated by Prussia. Largely on account of this feeling, the father of Doctor Muck emigrated from Bavaria to Switzerland when the musician was a child four years of age.

"Reared in Switzerland from his infancy, Doctor Muck became, on his own choice, a Swiss Citizen, and when he came to this country, as well as when he went to Germany, he traveled as a citizen of Switzerland, with a passport issued by the Government of Switzerland.

"Being a Swiss citizen, and Switzerland and the United States being at peace and upon terms of amity, it is impossible, of course, that Doctor Muck can be an alien enemy any more than a resident Hollander can be an alien enemy."

Public Ledger Bureau

Washington, March 25.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck in Boston is the culmination of universal protests against his conduct since he aroused indignation last fall by refusing to play the national anthem in Providence, R. I. As arrests in cases of such prominence invariably are directed by the Department of Justice from Washington, his arrest in Boston was taken to indicate specific direction to the local authorities.

At the time that Professor Muck refused to play the national anthem in Providence Department of Justice officials said they did not regard such an act as conclusive evidence of disloyalty. They accepted the theory advanced by his friends at the time that his action might have been dictated entirely by artistic or temperamental objections to [illegible] such a number in a concert

DOCTOR MUCK

rom EVENING JOURNAL
ddress: New York.
ate
AR 26 1918

DR. MUCK HELD AS ALIEN ENEMY

Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Arrested in Boston on Federal Orders.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is under arrest here to-day charged with being an alien enemy. His arrest came as a complete surprise to Back Bay residence. Federal agents took him into custody at his residence in the Back Bay district early to-day. He was lodged at a police station, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge Jail to-day.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention was made by the Federal officials. Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since the country entered the war, at first because of failuhe to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey, of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck for his return from a social gathering, and took him into custody as soon as he appeared. It was announced that he would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for an examination to-day. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

From EVENI
Address: Washington, D. C
Date MAR 26 1
EVENING WORLD
ress: New York City.
MAR 26 1918

DR. MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ALIEN ENEMY

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Quietly Lodged at Police Station.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence, in the Back Bay district of this city, late last night. He was lodged at a police station for the night.

Taken Before District Attorney.

He was taken today before District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the symphony orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the federal building. At the office of United States Marshal Mitchell the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room while awaiting examination by District Attorney Boynton and his assistants.

At the office of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Maj. Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Maj. Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

No Statement by Officials.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the orchestral director was made by the federal officials. Dr. Muck and the symphony orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts.

Criticised as Alleged Pro-German.

Later the management announced that the national anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticism of Dr. Muck and other orchestra members for alleged pro-German sympathies continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management asserting that the doctor was of Swiss birth.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest.
aited several hours at the home Muck, awaiting his return from l gathering, and took him into as soon as he appeared. He t permitted to obtain bail.
gent of the district attorney's who was asked whether any evidence of pro-German activ- been found, replied that he t at liberty to say, adding that ck had been under surveillance ths.

Lent to Orchestra by Kaiser.

uck was lent to the Boston ny Orchestra by Emperor Wil- 1912 and again in 1916. Under lership the orchestra achieved ide fame, but in several cities engagements have been canceled because of opposition to his appearance as leader.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was made so quietly that none of his close friends had an opportunity to see him before he was whisked away in an automobile to the police station. Arriving there, he was conducted to the cellroom in the basement and locked up. All callers who sought an interview were told that by orders from the Department of Justice he could not be seen and that no statement would be permitted.

Maj. Higginson Is Not Informed.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra and its chief financial backer, was not informed last night of the leader's arrest. He had retired for the night when the arrest was made and members of his household declined to disturb him with the news.

Maj. Higginson has been firm in defense of Dr. Muck since complaints were first made that the orchestra had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence last fall. In a statement given out at that time Maj. Higginson insisted that Dr. Muck had never refused to play the anthem, and he added that the conductor had tendered his resignation when he learned that his leadership was likely to be an embarrassment to the organization. The resignation was not accepted.

Barred From D. C. and Baltimore.

In November last Dr. Muck and the orchestra were barred from performing in Baltimore because of alleged threats of violence. Later the Department of Justice at Washington announced that it held Dr. Muck to be a German citizen and that he would be arrested should he attempt to enter the District of Columbia.

Dr. Muck is known throughout Europe as well as in this country as a musician of the highest rank. He has been conductor a the Royal Opera House in Berlin d at the great musical festivals at Beyreuth.

Dr. Muck's itizenship.

The citizenship o r. Carl Muck has been a subject of di ssion in diplomatic corps here for some e, where it is generally understood t while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the diplomatic corps, Mr. Muck's father when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained, by purchase, papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscrip-

MUCK IS ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN AT BOSTON HOUSE

Bail for Symphony Leader Refused, He Is Held on Orders From Washington.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in a police station, Dr. Karl Muck, loaned to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1912 and again in 1916, will be taken to the East Cambridge jail to-day pending orders from Washington, it is announced.

The Boston orchestral leader, who has been the storm centre of much patriotic agitation recently, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his home in the Back Bay district late last night by Federal and police officers who had waited several hours for him to return from a social gathering.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention was made by the Federal officials to-day. Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the National Anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticism of Dr. Muck continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management that the director was of Swiss birth.

It was announced that Dr. Muck would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for a examination to-day. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office who was asked whether any special evidence of pro-German activity had been found replied that he was not at liberty to say, adding that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

TWO NAVAL FLYERS AND

EVENING SUN
Baltimore, Md.
1918

ARREST OF DR. MUCK MOST IMPORTANT YET

Officials Say Seizure Of Musician Is Biggest Catch Since U. S. Entered The War.

BAIL HAS BEEN DENIED TO ORCHESTRA DIRECTOR

Prisoner Likely To Be Interned In This Country Until Peace Comes.

Boston, March 26.—The arrest here of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held as an enemy alien, is one of the most important since the entrance of the United States into the war, Federal officials said today.

It was further intimated that from the information which recently developed from Federal investigations of Muck's activities, the former leader of the Kaiser's royal orchestra will be interned for the period of the war.

Bail for Dr. Muck has been refused.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR

KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ALIEN ENEMY

Orchestra Leader Who Slighted U. S. Anthem in Boston Cell

DETAILS KEPT SECRET

Boston, March 25.

DR. KARL MUCK, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late tonight. He was lodged at a police station for the night and it was announced that, pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail tomorrow.

The Boston Advertiser of March 18 says:

"Doctor Muck was born in Bavaria at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German Empire, but was actively and avowedly hostile to Prussia, and to the formation of a German empire dominated by Prussia. Largely on account of this feeling, the father of Doctor Muck emigrated from Bavaria to Switzerland when the musician was a child four years of age.

"Reared in Switzerland from his infancy, Doctor Muck became, on his own choice, a Swiss Citizen, and when he came to this country, as well as when he went to Germany, he traveled as a citizen of Switzerland, with a passport issued by the Government of Switzerland.

"Being a Swiss citizen, and Switzerland and the United States being at peace and upon terms of amity, it is impossible, of course, that Doctor Muck can be an alien enemy any more than a resident Hollander can be an alien enemy."

Public Ledger Bureau

Washington, March 25.—The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck in Boston is the culmination of universal protests against his conduct since he aroused indignation last fall by refusing to play the national anthem in Providence, R. I. As arrests in cases of such prominence invariably are directed by the Department of Justice from Washington, his arrest in Boston was taken to indicate specific direction to the local authorities.

At the time that Professor Muck refused to play the national anthem in Providence Department of Justice officials said they did not regard such an act as conclusive evidence of disloyalty. They accepted the theory advanced by his friends at the time that his action might have been dictated entirely by artistic or temperamental objections to [illegible] such a number in a concert [illegible] under observation.

Famous Musician In Cell

DR. KARL MUCK

[illegible] orchestra, who is under arrest in that city

DOCTOR MUCK

From EVENING JOUR
Address: New York.
Date

DR. MUCK H AS ALIE.. ENEMY

Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Arrested in Boston on Federal Orders.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is under arrest here to-day charged with being an alien enemy. His arrest came as a complete surprise to Back Bay residence. Federal agents took him into custody at his residence in the Back Bay district early to-day. He was lodged at a police station, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge Jail to-day.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention was made by the Federal officials. Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since the country entered the war, at first because of failuhe to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey, of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck for his return from a social gathering, and took him into custody as soon as he appeared. It was announced that he would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for an examination to-day. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

From EVENI
Address: Washington, D. C.
Date MAR 26 1918

DR. MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ALIEN ENEMY

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Quietly Lodged at Police Station.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence, in the Back Bay district of this city, late last night. He was lodged at a police station for the night.

Taken Before District Attorney.

He was taken today before District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the symphony orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the federal building. At the office of United States Marshal Mitchell the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room while awaiting examination by District Attorney Boynton and his assistants.

At the office of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Maj. Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Maj. Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

No Statement by Officials.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the orchestral director was made by the federal officials. Dr. Muck and the symphony orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts.

Criticised as Alleged Pro-German.

Later the management announced that the national anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticism of Dr. Muck and other orchestra members for alleged pro-German sympathies continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management asserting that the doctor was of Swiss birth.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck, awaiting his return from a social gathering, and took him into custody as soon as he appeared. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the district attorney's office, who was asked whether any special evidence of pro-German activity had been found, replied that he was not at liberty to say, adding that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

Much Lent to Orchestra by Kaiser.

Dr. Muck was lent to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Emperor William in 1912 and again in 1916. Under his leadership the orchestra achieved world-wide fame, but in several cities recently engagements have been canceled because of opposition to his appearance as leader.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was made so quietly that none of his close friends had an opportunity to see him before he was whisked away in an automobile to the police station. Arriving there, he was conducted to the cellroom in the basement and locked up. All callers who sought an interview were told that by orders from the Department of Justice he could not be seen and that no statement would be permitted.

Maj. Higginson Is Not Informed.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra and its chief financial backer, was not informed last night of the leader's arrest. He had retired for the night when the arrest was made and members of his household declined to disturb him with the news.

Maj. Higginson has been firm in defense of Dr. Muck since complaints were first made that the orchestra had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Providence last fall. In a statement given out at that time Maj. Higginson insisted that Dr. Muck had never refused to play the anthem, and he added that the conductor had tendered his resignation when he learned that his leadership was likely to be an embarrassment to the organization. The resignation was not accepted.

Barred From D. C. and Baltimore.

In November last Dr. Muck and the orchestra were barred from performing in Baltimore because of alleged threats of violence. Later the Department of Justice at Washington announced that it held Dr. Muck to be a German citizen and that he would be arrested should he attempt to enter the District of Columbia.

Dr. Muck is known throughout Europe as well as in this country as a musician of the highest rank. He has been conductor at the Royal Opera House in Berlin and at the great musical festivals at Beyreuth.

Dr. Muck's Citizenship.

The citizenship of Dr. Carl Muck has been a subject of discussion in diplomatic corps here for some time, where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the diplomatic corps, Mr. Muck's father when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained, by purchase, papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscrip-

ING
New York City.
MAR 26 1918

MUCK IS ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN AT BOSTON HOUSE

Bail for Symphony Leader Refused, He Is Held on Orders From Washington.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in a police station, Dr. Karl Muck, loaned to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1912 and again in 1916, will be taken to the East Cambridge jail to-day pending orders from Washington, it is announced.

DR. KARL MUCK
© by CARO.

The Boston orchestral leader, who has been the storm centre of much patriotic agitation recently, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his home in the Back Bay district late last night by Federal and police officers who had waited several hours for him to return from a social gathering.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention was made by the Federal officials to-day. Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the National Anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticism of Dr. Muck continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management that the director was of Swiss birth.

It was announced that Dr. Muck would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for an examination to-day. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office who was asked whether any special evidence of pro-German activity had been found replied that he was not at liberty to say, adding that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

TWO NAVAL FLYERS AND

POST

New York City

MAR 26 1918

DR. MUCK QUESTIONED AFTER NIGHT AT JAIL

Taken Before Federal Officials at Boston

ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN

Government Seeks Light on Alleged Pro-German Activities of Orchestra Conductor—Said to Have Applied for Passport—To Be Locked Up Pending Disposition of Case.

BOSTON, March 26 (by A. P.).—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in detention at the Federal Building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay police station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for, while Government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the

EVENING TELEGRAM

Philadelphia, Pa.

MAR 26 1918

DR. MUCK IS QUIZZED AFTER NIGHT IN JAIL

Boston Orchestra Conductor Questioned as to Alleged Pro-German Activities.

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities. Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by the agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where Federal prisoners usually are sent.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the Federal Building. At the office of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room while awaiting examination by United States District Attorney Boynton and his assistants, Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria, in 1859, and according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about 8 years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin, before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November after the orchestra, at a concert in Providence, refused to play The Star-Spangled Banner. Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition, which in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the symphony orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's "Passion," according to St. Matthew, in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make a statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Major Higginson they admitted that Dr. Muck wou ent later in the day to the East bridge jail, and held there pending o from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends w to the Federal Building to see him, amo these being Mrs. John L. Gardner, wl waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of John J. Mitchell, United States Marshal.

(Continued on Page O

DR. MUCK QUESTIONED AFTER NIGHT AT JAIL

(Continued from Page One.)

SAID TO HAVE APPLIED FOR PASSPORT.

During the forenoon Dr. Karl Muck was taken to-day before the United States District Attorney, Thomas J. Boynton, and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities. It was reported that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and, according to a statement by the Assistant United States District Attorney, Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused, it is said, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled becaue of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew" in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Major Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

DIPLOMATIC CORPS' VIEW OF MUCK'S CITIZENSHIP.

WASHINGTON, March 26 (by A. P.).—The citizenship of Dr. Carl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the Diplomatic Corps here for some time, where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the Corps to-day, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was about eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss Government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons, and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers, without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens

JOURNAL

Providence, R. I.

MAR 26 1918

22

Dr. Karl Muck, Boston Symphony Leader, Arrested as Enemy Alien

Taken Into Custody at Home in Boston and Locked Up Pending Orders from Washington

Federal Officials Refuse to Make Statement as to Immediate Cause of Detention of Famous Orchestra Director-Musician Under Surveillance for Months. Loaned to American Organization by Emperor William.—Providence Journal's File on Dr. Muck Handed to Department of Justice Last Week Shows His Pro-German Activities

Boston, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late to-night. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge Jail to-morrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the famous orchestra director was made by the Federal officials to-night.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck awaiting his return from a social gathering and took him into custody as soon as he appeared. It was announced that he would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for an examination to-morrow. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office, who was asked whether any special evidence of pro-German activity had been found, replied that he was not at liberty to say, adding that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

Dr. Muck was loaned to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Emperor William in 1912 and again in 1916. Under his leadership the orchestra achieved world-wide fame, but in several cities recently engagements have been cancelled because of opposition to his appearance as leader.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was made so quietly that none of his close friends had an opportunity to see him before he was whisked away in an automobile to the police station. Arriving there, he was conducted to the cell room in the basement and locked up. All callers who sought an interview were told that by orders from the Department of Justice he could not be seen and that no statement would be permitted.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra and its chief financial backer, was not informed to-night of the leader's arrest. He had retired for the night when the arrest was made, and members of his household declined to disturb him with the news.

In November last, Dr. Muck and the orchestra were barred from performing in Baltimore because of alleged threats of violence. Later the Department of Justice at Washington announced that it held Dr. Muck to be a German citizen and that he would be arrested should he attempt to enter the District of Columbia.

The arrest of Dr. Muck as an "enemy alien" must mean that his alleged Swiss citizenship papers are a fraud, which was the charge made by the Providence Journal on March 15 after Maj. Henry L. Higginson and Manager Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had publicly declared that Muck had been a Swiss citizen since his boyhood.

Last week the Journal handed to the Department of Justice its entire file on Dr. Muck, including, among other things, proofs of his constant financial support of the Fatherland and other German sheets and some communications dealing with the subject of his alleged Swiss citizenship papers.

Dr. Muck's studied insolence toward his American audiences since the beginning of the war and his close personal affiliations with the ringleaders of the German propagandist elements in Boston and New York, with many other facts concerning his activities, have been the basis for the Journal's constant demand that he be treated as a dangerous enemy alien.

Dr. Muck's loyalty was first publicly questioned after his refusal to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Infantry Hall in this city on Oct. 30, 1917. As a result, the anthem was not played, although telegrams requesting that it be played were sent to the management of the orchestra, in Boston, the day before the concert.

Not only did Dr. Muck's manager refuse to accede to the request, but several of those who signed the telegrams were refused admittance to the hall, although there were vacant seats. Other concerts scheduled by the orchestra in this city were later abandoned.

Those who signed the telegrams requesting that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played were Mrs. Emma Winslow Childs, Mrs. Harold J. Gross, Mrs. George E. Mathews, Miss Mary S. Winsor, Miss Virginia Boyd Anderson, Mrs. George Hail, Mrs. James E. McConnell, Dr. Jules Jordan and Thomas H. West, Jr.

Mrs. McConnell was President of the Chaminade Club and Mrs. Harold J. Gross represented the Monday Morning Club. The other women who sent telegrams were members of one of these two musical societies. Dr. Jules Jordan, director of the Arion Club, is well known in Providence musical circles, and Thomas H. West, Jr., was State director of the Liberty Loan campaign.

Tom Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice in Providence, reported the occurrence to Washington the next day and Dr. Muck's acts have been closely watched by agents of the department since that time.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

MAR 26 1918

CAMBRIDGE JAIL FOR KARL MUCK

Boston Symphony Conductor Likely to Be Interned During the War.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the federal building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he refused to discuss the causes leading to his arrest, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay police station.

There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges, they admitted Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal building to see him, among them being Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of John J. Mitchell, United States marshal.

Major Henry L. Higginson, civil war veteran and banker, who long has upported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused to-day to comment on the sensational turn of affairs. At his home Major Higginson conferred with members of the orchestra and discussed the question of assigning another conductor for the performances this afternoon and to-night.

Friends of the organization suggested to federal authorities the propriety of permitting Dr. Muck to officiate, but this was refused, bluntly.

Navy Patrol Boat Lost.

Washington, March 26.—A naval patrol vessel, the Admiral, ran on the rocks off Scituate, Mass., last night and is a total loss, the Navy department to-day was advised. All officers and crew were saved and considerable small material was taken off.

POST
New York City
MAR 26 1918

DR. MUCK QUESTIONED AFTER NIGHT AT JAIL

Taken Before Federal Officials at Boston

ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN

Government Seeks Light on Alleged Pro-German Activities of Orchestra Conductor—Said to Have Applied for Passport—To Be Locked Up Pending Disposition of Case.

BOSTON, March 26 (by A. P.).—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in detention at the Federal Building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he declined to discuss the causes leading to his arrest last night, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay police station. There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for, while Government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges on which he was arrested, they admitted that Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal Building to see him, among these being Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musi-

(Continued on Page 2)

MAR 26 1918

DR. MUCK IS QUIZZED AFTER NIGHT IN JAIL

Boston Orchestra Conductor Questioned as to Alleged Pro-German Activities.

By Associated Press.

BOSTON, March 26.—After a night in the Back Bay police station Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken today before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities. Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by the agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where Federal prisoners usually are sent.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the Federal Building. At the office of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room while awaiting examination by United States District Attorney Boynton and his assistants, Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria, in 1859, and according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about 8 years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin, before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November after the orchestra, at a concert in Providence, refused to play The Star-Spangled Banner. Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition, which in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the symphony orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's "Passion," according to St. Matthew, in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make a statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Major Higginson had cian's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of John J. Mitchell, United States Marshal.

DR. MUCK QUESTIONED AFTER NIGHT AT JAIL

(Continued from Page One.)

SAID TO HAVE APPLIED FOR PASSPORT.

During the forenoon Dr. Karl Muck was taken to-day before the United States District Attorney, Thomas J. Boynton, and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities. It was reported that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and, according to a statement by the Assistant United States District Attorney, Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused, it is said, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled becaue of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew" in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck. It was said that Major Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

DIPLOMATIC CORPS' VIEW OF MUCK'S CITIZENSHIP.

WASHINGTON, March 26 (by A. P.).—The citizenship of Dr. Carl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the Diplomatic Corps here for some time, where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the Corps to-day, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was about eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss Government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons, and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers, without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

R. I.
1918

Dr. Karl Muck, Boston Symphony Leader, Arrested as Enemy Alien

Taken Into Custody at Home in Boston and Locked Up Pending Orders from Washington

Federal Officials Refuse to Make Statement as to Immediate Cause of Detention of Famous Orchestra Director-Musician Under Surveillance for Months. Loaned to American Organization by Emperor William.—Providence Journal's File on Dr. Muck Handed to Department of Justice Last Week Shows His Pro-German Activities

Boston, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late to-night. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge Jail to-morrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the famous orchestra director was made by the Federal officials to-night.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck awaiting his return from a social gathering and took him into custody as soon as he appeared. It was announced that he would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for an examination to-morrow. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office, who was asked whether any special evidence of pro-German activity had been found, replied that he was not at liberty to say, adding that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

Dr. Muck was loaned to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Emperor William in 1912 and again in 1916. Under his leadership the orchestra achieved world-wide fame, but in several cities recently engagements have been cancelled because of opposition to his appearance as leader.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was made so quietly that none of his close friends had an opportunity to see him before he was whisked away in an automobile to the police station. Arriving there, he was conducted to the cell room in the basement and locked up. All callers who sought an interview were told that by orders from the Department of Justice he could not be seen and that no statement would be permitted.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra and its chief financial backer, was not informed to-night of the leader's arrest. He had retired for the night when the arrest was made, and members of his household declined to disturb him with the news.

In November last, Dr. Muck and the orchestra were barred from performing in Baltimore because of alleged threats of violence. Later the Department of Justice at Washington announced that it held Dr. Muck to be a German citizen and that he would be arrested should he attempt to enter the District of Columbia.

The arrest of Dr. Muck as an "enemy alien" must mean that his alleged Swiss citizenship papers are a fraud, which was the charge made by the Providence Journal on March 15 after Maj. Henry L. Higginson and Manager Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had publicly declared that Muck had been a Swiss citizen since his boyhood.

Last week the Journal handed to the Department of Justice its entire file on Dr. Muck, including, among other things, proofs of his constant financial support of the Fatherland and other German sheets and some communications dealing with the subject of his alleged Swiss citizenship papers.

Dr. Muck's studied insolence toward his American audiences since the beginning of the war and his close personal affiliations with the ringleaders of the German propagandist elements in Boston and New York, with many other facts concerning his activities, have been the basis for the Journal's constant demand that he be treated as a dangerous enemy alien.

Dr. Muck's loyalty was first publicly questioned after his refusal to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in playing the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert in Infantry Hall in this city on Oct. 30, 1917. As a result, the anthem was not played, although telegrams requesting that it be played were sent to the management of the orchestra, in Boston, the day before the concert.

Not only did Dr. Muck's manager refuse to accede to the request, but several of those who signed the telegrams were refused admittance to the hall, although there were vacant seats. Other concerts scheduled by the orchestra in this city were later abandoned.

Those who signed the telegrams requesting that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played were Mrs. Emma Winslow Childs, Mrs. Harold J. Gross, Mrs. George E. Mathews, Miss Mary S. Winsor, Miss Virginia Boyd Anderson, Mrs. George Hall, Mrs. James E. McConnell, Dr. Jules Jordan and Thomas H. West, Jr.

Mrs. McConnell was President of the Chaminade Club and Mrs. Harold J. Gross represented the Monday Morning Club. The other women who sent telegrams were members of one of these two musical societies. Dr. Jules Jordan, director of the Arion Club, is well known in Providence musical circles, and Thomas H. West, Jr., was State director of the Liberty Loan campaign.

Tom Howick, special agent of the Department of Justice in Providence, reported the occurrence to Washington the next day and Dr. Muck's acts have been closely watched by agents of the department since that time.

EVENING MAIL
New York City
MAR 26 1918

CAMBRIDGE JAIL FOR KARL MUCK

Boston Symphony Conductor Likely to Be Interned During the War.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who first came to this country in 1906 on special leave granted by Emperor William, sat for many hours in the detention room at the federal building to-day while arrangements were being made by agents of the Department of Justice to have him locked up, probably for the duration of the war, as an enemy alien.

Although he refused to discuss the causes leading to his arrest, Dr. Muck's manner indicated rather plainly that he deeply resented being locked up over night in a cell at the Back Bay police station.

There was no prospect of his immediate release, however, for while government officials would not reveal the specific nature of the charges, they admitted Dr. Muck would be sent later in the day to the East Cambridge jail, and held there pending orders from Washington.

Several of the conductor's friends went to the Federal building to see him, among them being Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting as she passed the door of the detention room. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, who has been vehement in denying charges relating to the musician's pro-German utterances and activities, visited the police station and went with the prisoner to the office of John J. Mitchell, United States marshal.

Major Henry L. Higginson, civil war veteran and banker, who long has upported the organization of which Dr. Muck was the conductor, and defended him heretofore when public indignation was aroused in many cities, refused to-day to comment on the sensational turn of affairs. At his home Major Higginson conferred with members of the orchestra and discussed the question of assigning another conductor for the performances this afternoon and to-night.

Friends of the organization suggested to federal authorities the propriety of permitting Dr. Muck to officiate, but this was refused, bluntly.

Navy Patrol Boat Lost.

Washington, March 26.—A naval patrol vessel, the Admiral, ran on the rocks off Scituate, Mass., last night and is a total loss, the Navy department to-day was advised. All officers and crew were saved and considerable small material was taken off.

SUN

New York City.

DR. MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Symphony Leader Is Seized at His Boston Home and Bail Denied.

LONG FRIEND OF KAISER

Under Surveillance for Months, Says Government Agent After Seizure.

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late to-night.

He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail to-morrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the orchestra director was made by the Federal officials to-night.

Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the national anthem would be a feature of every concert and this plan was carried out.

Criticisms of Dr. Muck and other orchestra members as of pro-German sympathies continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management asserting that the director was of Swiss birth.

Not Permitted to Give Bail.

Representatives of Thomas J. Boynton, United States District Attorney, and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck for his return from a social gathering. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office said Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

Ever since last autumn Dr. Muck, intimate friend of the German Emperor and conductor of the Royal Opera at Berlin, who is on leave by grace of the Kaiser to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this country, has been the storm centre about whom has been waged denunciation and demands that he be driven out of the country or interned because of his alleged enmity for America and profound championship of the cause of Germany in the war.

The climax in the demand for his suppression was reached in New York two weeks ago when, just before the date set for the appearance of him and his orchestra at Carnegie Hall, Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Supreme Court Justice Ingraham led an organized fight to have the concert prevented. They appealed first to Dr. Muck and Major Higginson, but they refused to cancel the concert. The proprietors of Carnegie Hall announced they were unable to do anything because of the terms of the contract under which the hall was leased for the orchestra's appearance there.

Recalls New York Ovation.

Then the city authorities were appealed to, but they declined to intervene and the request of the protestants that the concert permit be revoked was denied. Dr. Muck and his orchestra appeared at Carnegie, played "The Star Spangled Banner" and received an ovation. The house was filled, and the next night the Brooklyn Academy of Music was filled when the orchestra gave a concert there with "The Star Spangled Banner" on the programme. But the next day the managers of the Academy announced that the doctor and his orchestra would not be booked for next season and that he could not return there for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck is a Bavarian. He is personally acquainted with the Kaiser and was born in Wurzburg in 1859. His father was a musician and Dr. Muck has been appearing in public since he was 11 years old. He was conductor of Neumann's opera company in Berlin in 1891, and in 1892 became principal conductor of the Royal Opera in the German capital. He stayed in that post until 1906, when he first came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He also had appeared at Petrograd, Moscow, Copenhagen, Madrid, Paris and London at various times.

EVENING SUN

New York City

MAR 26 1918

Dr. Muck in Cell as Enemy

Wife Calls Arrest "Preposterous" as Boston Symphony Director Is Held Without Bail—Major Higginson Silent.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and "loaned" to that organization by the German Emperor, sat in a cell here to-day as an alien enemy. He was not permitted bail.

Federal authorities under whose orders the former director of the Royal Opera at Berlin was arrested, refused to make any comment.

Mrs. Muck characterized her husband's arrest as "preposterous," saying she was confident of his release. Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, was ill at his home and would make no statement.

Dr. Karl Muck, intimate friend of the Kaiser and leader of the Royal Opera of Berlin, has been the storm-centre of a word war that has raged against him since last fall. He first became a target last October in Providence, R. I., when he refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," asserting it was not "artistic." From that time until only two weeks ago in New York he has been the subject of protests from some of the leading figures in the social and financial world, who wanted him interned.

On his appearance in this city two weeks ago with the Boston Symphony Orchestra there arose a storm of disapproval, led by drs. William Jay, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Supreme Court Justice Ingraham. They appealed to the directors of Carnegie Hall, where the concert was held, not to allow Dr. Muck to play; also to Major Henry L. Higginson of Boston, sponsor for the orchestra, but the Bavarian appeared. There were extra police on hand, but they were not needed, and the big audience applauded vigorously.

The same situation was repeated the next night in Brooklyn, but after that concert it was announced by the Brooklyn Academy of Music managers, where the concert was held, that Dr. Muck hereafter would be barred from the hall and that the concert, with the orchestra, would not be renewed until after the war.

Dr. Muck claims to have been born in Switzerland, and made his first public appearance on the concert stage at the age of 11. His father was a musician. Dr. Muck became conductor of Neumann's Opera Company in Berlin in 1891, and in 1892 became principal conductor of the Royal Opera in the German capital. He stayed at that post until 1906, when he first came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Continued from First Page.

Since coming here Dr. Muck has conducted in the principal cities of the country. Before America's entrance into the war he worked widely for the German cause. After he became the centre of a controversy over his alleged slur at "The Star Spangled Banner" he remained silent. For several weeks after the alleged occurrence he is said to have refused to lead the orchestra unless the National Anthem was left out of the programme, but Major Higginson finally prevailed upon him to resume. Since that time Major Higginson has defended Dr. Muck, and was in New York two weeks ago when subscribers to the concerts at Carnegie Hall were protesting.

Dr. Muck was in this country with the permission of the Kaiser, who, besides being the patron of the Royal Opera at Berlin, is a personal friend of the orchestra leader.

TELEGRAM

New York City.

MAR 26 1918

QUIZ DR. MUCK, HELD AS ENEMY ALIEN, ON PROPAGANDA IN U. S.

Federal Officials Seek Information on Which to Intern Director of Boston Symphony Orchestra—May Be Kept in Jail.

BOSTON, Tuesday.—After a night in the Back Bay police station, Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home, No. 50 Fenway street, by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case, it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where federal prisoners usually are sent.

Born in Bavaria.

Dr. Muck, although asserting that he is a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and according to a statement by the Assistant United States District Attorney, Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country, by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Had Prepared Concert.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given to-day the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

It was permitted to be known that the federal agents believe they have evidence of insidious propaganda by Dr. Muck. It is further revealed that the onetime musical director of the Kaiser recently sought passports for himself and wife to leave the country.

Three Department of Justice men and two detectives from the Boston police department made the arrest. They waited about the house all evening, for the doktor was out, but as soon as he returned they entered the house and took him prisoner. When they left the house they had with them a bag containing some of Doktor Muck's effects. What these effects consist of was not given out.

It was further stated that about six months ago the Department of Justice received word that Dr. Muck was participating as a propagandist in the most insidious manner through personal friends. Suspicion also was aroused when Dr. Muck's secretary called some time ago at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court and requested Attorney Dewey to give him blank applications for passports for the doctor and his wife, as they were going abroad.

MANY TOWNS BAR THE ALIEN DIRECTOR

Despite the insistent demands that Doktor Karl Muck sever his relations with Boston Symphony Orchestra, Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and guarantor of that organization, refused to part with his Herr Direktor, and even defended him. Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg, Springfield, Mass., and other cities had closed their gates against him and the twenty-two German musicians in his orchestra, but Major Higginson continued to book the orchestra wherever any city would hear it.

Many loyal American subscribers to the New York concerts protested from the first against Doktor Muck. When Providence decided he could not play there without playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and he was quoted as saying "to hell with your flag," and "your anthem is not fit for any artistic programme," numerous patriotic subscribers to the New York series, led by Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Caroline Wright and Justice Ingraham, protested to Major Higginson. They were defied and they and many other patriotic persons who had paid for their seats refused to attend the concerts.

Certain persons in New York interested in barring Doktor Muck and his twenty-two German musicians from spreading what they termed an insidious propaganda, are known to have taken the matter up with the Department of Justice officials in an effort to have the leader interned as a dangerous enemy alien. Before Doktor Muck left New York government agents were investigating his activities.

DRY GOODS, &C.

New York City.

MAR 26 1918

Dr. Muck Put in Jail as an Enemy Alien

BOSTON, March 25.

DR. KARL MUCK, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city, late to-night. He was lodged at a police station for the night. It was announced that pending orders from Washington he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail.

Dr. Muck recently gave two concerts in New York City, and one in Brooklyn, despite an organized fight made against his appearance. Dr. Muck was given an ovation at each of the concerts.

WORLD

New York City

MAR 26 1918

DR. KARL MUCK ARRESTED IN BOSTON AS ENEMY ALIEN

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late to-night. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge Jail to-morrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention was made by the Federal officials to-night. Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the National Anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticism of Dr. Muck continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management that the director was of Swiss birth.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck awaiting his return from a social gathering, and took him into custody as soon as he appeared. It was announced that he would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for an examination to-morrow. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office who was asked whether any special evidence of pro-German activity had been found replied that he was not at liberty to say, adding that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

Dr. Muck was loaned to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Emperor William in 1912 and again in 1916.

The arrest of Dr Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, on the charge of being an "alien enemy," has led to disclosure of the fact that Dr Muck's resignation had previously been accepted by Maj Higginson. In December, when it was decided by the department of justice that the "alien enemies" who were members of the orchestra would not be permitted to play in the District of Columbia, Dr Muck tendered his resignation. Nothing was done about this until the 6th of the present month, when Maj Higginson notified him that the resignation would be accepted as of May 4—the date of the last concert. Maj Higginson was exceedingly desirous of keeping faith with the thousands of people who bought tickets to the concerts with the understanding that they were to hear a certain orchestra and a certain conductor. There can be no question of the courage, magnanimity and fine sense of justice with which Maj Higginson has borne himself in all the issues relating to the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor. Why Maj Higginson saw fit early in the present month to accept Dr Muck's resignation is not known. It is rumored that the lawyer who has represented the orchestra's interests for Maj Higginson is to defend Dr Muck in the case which the United States has brought against him. In New York the newspapers are speculating on Dr Muck's successor. But the fear is growing that there may be no successor.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

New York City

MAR 31 1918

HIGGINSON ACCEPTS MUCK'S RESIGNATION

Sponsor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Notifies Conductor It Will Take Effect at End of Season.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, March 30.

The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson it was learned to-day.

The resignation was originally offered by Dr. Muck at the time of "The Star Spangled Banner" controversy which took place several weeks ago. Only to-day did it become known that Major Higginson notified Dr. Muck that the resignation was accepted, to take effect May 4, the date on which the present concert season ends. Dr. Muck is in jail at East Cambridge as an enemy alien.

Another important arrest is expected, following the arrest of Dr. Karl Oskar Bertling, as an enemy alien. He is at the East Cambridge jail, where Dr. Muck is held also. Thus far the authorities have been unwilling to admit there is any connection between the two arrests, and the third one expected to follow soon.

SUN

New York City.

DR. MUCK ARRESTED AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Symphony Leader Is Seized at His Boston Home and Bail Denied.

LONG FRIEND OF KAISER

Under Surveillance for Months, Says Government Agent After Seizure.

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late to-night.

He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail to-morrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the orchestra director was made by the Federal officials to-night.

Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the national anthem would be a feature of every concert and this plan was carried out.

Criticisms of Dr. Muck and other orchestra members as of pro-German sympathies continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management asserting that the director was of Swiss birth.

Not Permitted to Give Bail.

Representatives of Thomas J. Boynton, United States District Attorney, and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck for his return from a social gathering. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office said Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

Ever since last autumn Dr. Muck, intimate friend of the German Emperor and conductor of the Royal Opera at Berlin, who is on leave by grace of the Kaiser to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this country, has been the storm centre about whom has been waged denunciation and demands that he be driven out of the country or interned because of his alleged enmity for America and profound championship of the cause of Germany in the war.

The climax in the demand for his suppression was reached in New York two weeks ago when, just before the date set for the appearance of him and his orchestra at Carnegie Hall, Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Supreme Court Justice Ingraham led an organized fight to have the concert prevented. They appealed first to Dr. Muck and Major Higginson, but they refused to cancel the concert. The proprietors of Carnegie Hall announced they were unable to do anything because of the terms of the contract under which the hall was leased for the orchestra's appearance there.

Recalls New York Ovation.

Then the city authorities were appealed to, but they declined to intervene and the request of the protestants that the concert permit be revoked was denied. Dr. Muck and his orchestra appeared at Carnegie, played "The Star Spangled Banner" and received an ovation. The house was filled, and the next night the Brooklyn Academy of Music was filled when the orchestra gave a concert there with "The Star Spangled Banner" on the programme. But the next day the managers of the Academy announced that the doctor and his orchestra would not be booked for next season and that he could not return there for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck is a Bavarian. He is personally acquainted with the Kaiser and was born in Wurzburg in 1859. His father was a musician and Dr. Muck has been appearing in public since he was 11 years old. He was conductor of Neumann's opera company in Berlin in 1891, and in 1892 became principal conductor of the Royal Opera in the German capital. He stayed in that post until 1906, when he first came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He also had appeared at Petrograd, Moscow, Copenhagen, Madrid, Paris and London at various times.

EVENING SUN

New York City

MAR 26 1918

Dr. Muck in Cell as Enemy

Wife Calls Arrest "Preposterous" as Boston Symphony Director Is Held Without Bail—Major Higginson Silent.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and "loaned" to that organization by the German Emperor, sat in a cell here to-day as an alien enemy. He was not permitted bail.

Federal authorities under whose orders the former director of the Royal Opera at Berlin was arrested, refused to make any comment.

Mrs. Muck characterized her husband's arrest as "preposterous," saying she was confident of his release. Major Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, was ill at his home and would make no statement.

Dr. Karl Muck, intimate friend of the Kaiser and leader of the Royal Opera of Berlin, has been the storm-centre of a word war that has raged against him since last fall. He first became a target last October in Providence, R. I., when he refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," asserting it was not "artistic." From that time until only two weeks ago in New York he has been the subject of protests from some of the leading figures in the social and financial world, who wanted him interned.

On his appearance in this city two weeks ago with the Boston Symphony Orchestra there arose a storm of disapproval, led by drs. William Jay, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Supreme Court Justice Ingraham. They appealed to the directors of Carnegie Hall, where the concert was held, not to allow Dr. Muck to play; also to Major Henry L. Higginson of Boston, sponsor for the orchestra, but the Bavarian appeared. There were extra police on hand, but they were not needed, and the big audience applauded vigorously.

The same situation was repeated the next night in Brooklyn, but after that concert it was announced by the Brooklyn Academy of Music managers, where the concert was held, that Dr. Muck hereafter would be barred from the hall and that the concert, with the orchestra, would not be renewed until after the war.

Dr. Muck claims to have been born in Switzerland, and made his first public appearance on the concert stage at the age of 11. His father was a musician. Dr. Muck became conductor of Neumann's Opera Company in Berlin in 1891, and in 1892 became principal conductor of the Royal Opera in the German capital. He stayed at that post until 1906, when he first came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Continued from First Page.

Since coming here Dr. Muck has conducted in the principal cities of the country. Before America's entrance into the war he worked widely for the German cause. After he became the centre of a controversy over his alleged slur at "The Star Spangled Banner" he remained silent. For several weeks after the alleged occurrence he is said to have refused to lead the orchestra unless the National Anthem was left out of the programme, but Major Higginson finally prevailed upon him to resume. Since that time Major Higginson has defended Dr. Muck, and was in New York two weeks ago when subscribers to the concerts at Carnegie Hall were protesting.

Dr. Muck was in this country with the permission of the Kaiser, who besides being the patron of the Royal Opera at Berlin, is a personal friend of the orchestra leader.

TELEGRAM

New York City.

Dr. Muck Put in Jail as an Enemy Alien

BOSTON, March 25.

DR. KARL MUCK, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city, late to-night. He was lodged at a police station for the night. It was announced that pending orders from Washington he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail.

Dr. Muck recently gave two concerts in New York City, and one in Brooklyn, despite an organized fight made against his appearance. Dr. Muck was given an ovation at each of the concerts.

QUIZ DR. MUCK, HELD AS ENEMY ALIEN, ON PROPAGANDA IN U. S.

Federal Officials Seek Information on Which to Intern Director of Boston Symphony Orchestra—May Be Kept in Jail.

BOSTON, Tuesday.—After a night in the Back Bay police station, Dr. Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home, No. 50 Fenway street, by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Pending orders disposing of his case, it was expected that he would be committed to the East Cambridge jail, where federal prisoners usually are sent.

Born in Bavaria.

Dr. Muck, although asserting that he is a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859, and according to a statement by the Assistant United States District Attorney, Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country, by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November, after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

Had Prepared Concert.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given to-day the first performance of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

It was permitted to be known that the federal agents believe they have evidence of insidious propaganda by Dr. Muck. It is further revealed that the onetime musical director of the Kaiser recently sought passports for himself and wife to leave the country.

Three Department of Justice men and two detectives from the Boston police department made the arrest. They waited about the house all evening, for the doktor was out, but as soon as he returned they entered the house and took him prisoner. When they left the house they had with them a bag containing some of Doktor Muck's effects. What these effects consist of was not given out.

It was further stated that about six months ago the Department of Justice received word that Dr. Muck was participating as a propagandist in the most insidious manner through personal friends. Suspicion also was aroused when Dr. Muck's secretary called some time ago at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court and requested Attorney Dewey to give him blank applications for passports for the doctor and his wife, as they were going abroad.

gates against him and the twenty-two German musicians in his orchestra, but Major Higginson continued to book the orchestra wherever any city would hear it.

Many loyal American subscribers to the New York concerts protested from the first against Doktor Muck. When Providence decided he could not play there without playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and he was quoted as saying "to hell with your flag," and "your anthem is not fit for any artistic programme," numerous patriotic subscribers to the New York series, led by Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Caroline Wright and Justice Ingraham, protested to Major Higginson. They were defied and they and many other patriotic persons who had paid for their seats refused to attend the concerts.

Certain persons in New York interested in barring Doktor Muck and his twenty-two German musicians from spreading what they termed an insidious propaganda, are known to have taken the matter up with the Department of Justice officials in an effort to have the leader interned as a dangerous enemy alien. Before Doktor Muck left New York government agents were investigating his activities.

MANY TOWNS BAR THE ALIEN DIRECTOR

Despite the insistent demands that Doktor Karl Muck sever his relations with Boston Symphony Orchestra, Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and guarantor of that organization, refused to part with his Herr Direktor, and even defended him. Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg, Springfield, Mass., and other cities had closed their

DRY GOODS, &C.

New York City.

MAR 26 1918

The arrest of Dr Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, on the charge of being an "alien enemy," has led to disclosure of the fact that Dr Muck's resignation had previously been accepted by Maj Higginson. In December, when it was decided by the department of justice that the "alien enemies" who were members of the orchestra would not be permitted to play in the District of Columbia, Dr Muck tendered his resignation. Nothing was done about this until the 6th of the present month, when Maj Higginson notified him that the resignation would be accepted as of May 4—the date of the last concert. Maj Higginson was exceedingly desirous of keeping faith with the thousands of people who bought tickets to the concerts with the understanding that they were to hear a certain orchestra and a certain conductor. There can be no question of the courage, magnanimity and fine sense of justice with which Maj Higginson has borne himself in all the issues relating to the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor. Why Maj Higginson saw fit early in the present month to accept Dr Muck's resignation is not known. It is rumored that the lawyer who has represented the orchestra's interests for Maj Higginson is to defend Dr Muck in the case which the United States has brought against him. In New York the newspapers are speculating on Dr Muck's successor. But the fear is growing that there may be no successor.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

New York City

HIGGINSON ACCEPTS MUCK'S RESIGNATION

Sponsor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Notifies Conductor It Will Take Effect at End of Season.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, March 30.

The resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson it was learned to-day.

The resignation was originally offered by Dr. Muck at the time of "The Star Spangled Banner" controversy which took place several weeks ago. Only to-day did it become known that Major Higginson notified Dr. Muck that the resignation was accepted, to take effect May 4, the date on which the present concert season ends. Dr. Muck is in jail at East Cambridge as an enemy alien.

Another important arrest is expected, following the arrest of Dr. Karl Oskar Bertling, as an enemy alien. He is at the East Cambridge jail, where Dr. Muck is held also. Thus far the authorities have been unwilling to admit there is any connection between the two arrests, and the third one expected to follow soon.

WORLD

New York City

MAR 26 1918

DR. KARL MUCK ARRESTED IN BOSTON AS ENEMY ALIEN

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late to-night. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge Jail to-morrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention was made by the Federal officials to-night. Dr. Muck and the Symphony Orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the National Anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticism of Dr. Muck continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management that the director was of Swiss birth.

Representatives of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and of Special Agent Judd Dewey of the Department of Justice, as well as of the city police, took part in the arrest. They waited several hours at the home of Dr. Muck awaiting his return from a social gathering, and took him into custody as soon as he appeared. It was announced that he would probably be taken before the United States Commissioner for an examination to-morrow. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the District Attorney's office who was asked whether any special evidence of pro-German activity had been found replied that he was not at liberty to say, adding that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

Dr. Muck was loaned to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Emperor William in 1912 and again in 1916.

MES

New York City

MAR 26 1918

ARREST KARL MUCK AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Federal Authorities in Boston May Prefer Charges Under the Criminal Code.

CLAIMED SWISS CITIZENSHIP

Conductor Spends Night in a Cell—Asked for Passports to Europe Yesterday.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested just before midnight tonight by agents of the Department of Justice and Boston policemen, under the President's allan enemy proclamation, and taken to Station 16, where he spent the night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned a little after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judge Dewey, Assistant District Attorney of alien matters for Massacusetts; and, although he was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the Federal criminal code.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all Winter and was to conduct tomorrow evening Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," with orchestra, a chorus of 400, a boy choir of eighty, and a soloist—a most ambitious production, for which he has restored the original score at the cost of much labor.

Dr. Muck, while claiming to be a citizen of the Swiss Republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, as given here, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that document. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, Federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the Federal Government.

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the Federal Building for hours waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known this evening that only today his representative called at the Federal Building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Dr. Muck had been detained on a trivial charge and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck said to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband

Refusal to Play National Anthem

The agitation against Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started in Providence, R. I., on Oct. 30, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert given by the orchestra. The Rhode Island Council of Defense the following day adopted resolutions condemning him "for his deliberately insulting attitude in refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck has maintained silence regarding this incident from the beginning, but Major Henry Lee Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, has repeatedly asserted that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play the anthem, but that (Major Higginson) on that occasion refused to change the program to include the anthem.

A demand for the internment of D

Muck was made a few days later by the American Defense Society and other organizations on the ground that he was a dangerous alien enemy. Dr. Muck's answer was that he was a Swiss citizen.

When Dr. Muck conducted in this city under police guard on March 14, the management of the orchestra made public a document purporting to be a certificate of citizenship, given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after his twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, according to this document, settled there and became naturalized when Karl Muck was 6 years old.

The certificate was as follows:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1858, be (is) our citizen and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim on the 4th day of March, 1881.

The President.
KLEMENS ZUERCHER.
In the name of the Town Council.
C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

Chancellory of the Canton of Am. Zug.

By the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

In his statement made in this city defending Dr. Muck, Major Higginson said:

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities, and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later, I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and on Dec. 7 received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra."

Dr. Muck was formerly the conductor of the Kaiser's Royal Orchestra in Berlin, and in 1913 accepted an offer of $28,000 a year to come to this country and lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

DR MUCK ARRESTEI

Boston Symphony Leader Charged With Being Enemy Alien

Dr Karl Muck, leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back bay district of Boston late last night. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail to-day.

DR KARL MUCK

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra

REPUBLICAN

ess Springfield, Mass.

In so far as the published criticisms of Dr Muck have had any basis, it has been the knowledge that he was in sympathy with the German cause in the war. The animosity that he has excited has contained elements only indirectly related to the war, such as professional jealousy, covetousness of the "fat" jobs held by foreign musicians, etc. A few weeks ago it was said on what appeared to be excellent authority that the department of justice had no reason to suspect Dr Muck of any activity inimical to the intersets of this country. Now has come his sensational arrest—presumably the outcome of charges lately preferred. Many will share the desire for information indicated by the Boston Traveler when it says: "Perhaps the public will be permitted to know in due season on what the government bases the serious action it has taken against one whose attitude in the great war has been vouched for by one of Boston's distinguished and most patriotic citizens."

1884

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

MAR 26 1918

DOKTOR MUCK IS SEIZED AT BOSTON AS ENEMY ALIEN

Government Keeps Secret Reason for Arrest—His Effects Confiscated.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Monday.—Doktor Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested under the President's proclamation at his home here, No. 50 Fenway, about half-past eleven o'clock to-night and locked up for the night. He is charged with being an alien enemy and is held without bail.

Three Department of Justice men and two detectives from the Boston police force made the arrest. They waited about the house all evening, for the doktor was out, but as soon as he returned they entered the house and took him prisoner.

When they left the house they had with them a bag containing some of Doktor Muck's effects. What these effects consist of was not given out.

The utmost secrecy surrounds the arrest of the doktor over whose activities the entire country has been aroused. The men who made the arrest refused to discuss the matter at all and the local police say they are unable to make any statement, as it is a government case. Doktor Muck probably will be arraigned before federal authorities in the morning.

When asked how Dr. Muck could be arrested when he is a Swiss citizen, Judge Dewey, Assistant United States Attorney, said that he comes under the head of an enemy alien because has was born in Germany and his sympathies are known to be German.

It was further stated that about six months ago the Department of Justice received word that Dr. Muck was participating as a propagandist in the most insidious manner through personal friends. Suspicion also was aroused when Dr. Muck's secretary called some time ago at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court and also requested Attorney Dewey to give him blank applications for passports for the doctor and his wife, as they were going abroad.

MUCK AND HIS ALIENS BITTERLY FOUGHT HERE

Despite the insistent demands that Doktor Kark Muck sever his relations with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and guarantor of that organization, refused to part with his Herr Direktor, and even defended him. Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg, Springfield, Mass., and other cities had raised their gates against him and the twenty-two German musicians in his orchestra, but Major Higginson continued to book the orchestra wherever any city would hear it.

Many loyal American subscribers to the New York concerts protested from the first against Doktor Muck. When Providence decided he could not play there without playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and he was quoted as saying "to hell with your flag," and "your anthem is not fit for any artistic programme," numerous patriotic subscribers to the New York series, led by Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Caroline Wright and Justice Ingraham, protested to Major Higginson. They were defied and they and many other patriotic persons who had paid for their seats re-

m EVENING STAR

dress: Washington, D. C.

te

SCHMIDT SUCCEEDS MUCK IN BOSTON SYMPHONY

Orchestra's Management Accepts Resignation of Offending Leader.

BOSTON, Mass., March 30.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced tonight that the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted. Dr. Muck was arrested by federal officers last Monday night under the enemy allien act and is at present confined in the jail at East Cambridge.

It is understood that the resignation, wihch was offered last January, when Dr. Muck was under a fire of criticism for alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts, will be effective at the close of the orchestra's regular season, May 4, when his contract expires. At present Ernest Schmidt, the assistant conductor, is leading the orchestra.

Dr. Muck made his first appearance with the orchestra in 1906. His work created such a favorable impression that special permission was secured from Emperor William of Germany in 1912 to have him undertake the leadership of the organization for four years. At the end of this period his leave of absence from Berlin was again extended.

rom POST

ddress: Washington, D. C.

ate MAR 26 19

CONTINUED ON FOURTH PAGE

MUCK ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN

Orchestra Leader Watched for Months, It Is Said.

Boston, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late tonight. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that, pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail tomorrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the orchestral director was made by the Federal officials tonight. Dr. Muck and the symphony orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the national anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticisms of Dr. Muck and other orchestra members as of pro-German sympathies continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management asserting that the doctor was of Swiss birth.

Representatives of the United States District Attorney and of the Department of Justice took part in the arrest. They waited several hours until Dr. Muck returned from a social gathering. It was announced that he probably would be taken before the United States commissioner for an examination tomorrow. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the district attorney's office said that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

PUBLIC LEDGER

Philadelphia, Pa.

MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK CONFINED IN JAIL AT BOSTON

Held With "Bootleggers" and Slackers While Another Leads Orchestra

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been committed to the East Cambridge jail while Ernest Schmidt, accused by [illegible] strong pro-Germans, led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him, and that a seizure of his correspondence and papers was made.

It was reported at the Federal Building that Government agents found papers that would cause other arrests and that one of those implicated was one of the best-known persons in Boston.

Muck was held all day at the Federal Building in "the pen" with several "bootleggers" and draft evaders. He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Federal attorneys. Probably he will be arraigned on a charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Doctor Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said. Doctor Muck did not register as an enemy alien.

New York, March 27.—Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, says that Doctor Muck's claim that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that no representations had been made to him by Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that unless the conductor sought the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter. If he was asked to intervene, the minister added, he would proceed as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Frem Bulletin

Address

Date

DR. MUCK JAILED; FEDERAL AGENTS EXAMINE PAPERS

Investigating Officers Decline to Say Whether Charges of Specific Acts Against the United States Will be Brought in Court Against Prisoner.

[By the Associated Press.]

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge Jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a quantity of documents and letters seized at his home. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case had been received. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, said in New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

KNEW GOVERNMENT'S ORDER

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and other Justice Department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Dr. Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Continued on Page 2 Col. 1.

Continued from Page 1.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was 8 years of age did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed, Federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

A representative of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. In the absence of Dr. Muck, the opening performance here yesterday was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail, Dr. Muck several times remarked to the two deputy marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert

Capital Awaits Report.

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice to-day, and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

MES
New York City
MAR 26 1918

ARREST KARL MUCK AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Federal Authorities in Boston May Prefer Charges Under the Criminal Code.

CLAIMED SWISS CITIZENSHIP

Conductor Spends Night in a Cell—Asked for Passports to Europe Yesterday.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested just before midnight tonight by agents of the Department of Justice and Boston policemen, under the President's alian enemy proclamation, and taken to Station 16, where he spent the night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned a little after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judge Dewey, Assistant District Attorney of alien matters for Massacusetts; and, although he was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the Federal criminal code.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all Winter and was to conduct tomorrow evening Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," with orchestra, a chorus of 400, a boy choir of eighty, and a soloist—a most ambitious production, for which he has restored the original score at the cost of much labor.

Dr. Muck, while claiming to be a citizen of the Swiss Republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, as given here, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that document. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, Federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the Federal Government.

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the Federal Building for hours waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known this evening that only today his representative called at the Federal Building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Dr. Muck had been detained on a trivial charge and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck said to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband.

Refusal to Play National Anthem

The agitation against Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started in Providence, R. I., on Oct. 30, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert given by the orchestra. The Rhode Island Council of Defense the following day adopted resolutions condemning him "for his deliberately insulting attitude in refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck has maintained silence regarding this incident from the beginning, but Major Henry Lee Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, has repeatedly asserted that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play the anthem, but that (Major Higginson) on that occasion refused to change the program to include the anthem.

A demand for the internment of Dr. Muck was made a few days later by the American Defense Society and other organizations on the ground that he was a dangerous alien enemy. Dr. Muck's answer was that he was a Swiss citizen.

When Dr. Muck conducted in this city under police guard on March 14, the management of the orchestra made public a document purporting to be a certificate of citizenship, given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after his twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, according to this document, settled there and became naturalized when Karl Muck was 6 years old.

The certificate was as follows:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1858, be (is) our citizen and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim on the 4th day of March, 1881.

The President.
KLEMENS ZUERCHER.
In the name of the Town Council.
C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

Chancellory of the Canton of Am. Zug.

By the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

In his statement made in this city defending Dr. Muck, Major Higginson said:

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities, and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later, I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and on Dec. 7 received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra."

Dr. Muck was formerly the conductor of the Kaiser's Royal Orchestra in Berlin, and in 1912 accepted an offer of $28,000 a year to come to this country and lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.

DR MUCK ARRESTEI

Boston Symphony Leader Charged With Being Enemy Alien

Dr Karl Muck, leader of the Boston symphony orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back bay district of Boston late last night. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail to-day.

DR KARL MUCK
Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra

REPUBLICAN
ess Springfield, Ma

In so far as the published cri ...ms of Dr Muck have had any basis, it has been the knowledge that he was in sympathy with the German cause in the war. The animosity that he has excited has contained elements only indirectly related to the war, such as professional jealousy, covetousness of the "fat" jobs held by foreign musicians, etc. A few weeks ago it was said on what appeared to be excellent authority that the department of justice had no reason to suspect Dr Muck of any activity inimical to the intersets of this country. Now has come his sensational arrest—presumably the outcome of charges lately preferred. Many will share the desire for information indicated by the Boston Traveler when it says: "Perhaps the public will be permitted to know in due season on what the government bases the serious action it has taken against one whose attitude in the great war has been vouched for by one of Boston's distinguished and most patriotic citizens."

1884

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 26 1918

DOKTOR MUCK IS SEIZED AT BOSTON AS ENEMY ALIEN

Government Keeps Secret Reason for Arrest—His Effects Confiscated.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Monday.—Doktor Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested under the President's proclamation at his home here, No. 50 Fenway, about half-past eleven o'clock to-night and locked up for the night. He is charged with being an alien enemy and is held without bail.

Three Department of Justice men and two detectives from the Boston police force made the arrest. They waited about the house all evening, for the doktor was out, but as soon as he returned they entered the house and took him prisoner. When they left the house they had with them a bag containing some of Doktor Muck's effects. What these effects consist of was not given out.

The utmost secrecy surrounds the arrest of the doktor over whose activities the entire country has been aroused. The men who made the arrest refused to discuss the matter at all and the local police say they are unable to make any statement, as it is a government case. Doktor Muck probably will be arraigned before federal authorities in the morning.

When asked how Dr. Muck could be arrested when he is a Swiss citizen, Judge Dewey, Assistant United States Attorney, said that he comes under the head of an enemy alien because has was born in Germany and his sympathies are known to be German.

It was further stated that about six months ago the Department of Justice received word that Dr. Muck was participating as a propagandist in the most insidious manner through personal friends. Suspicion also was aroused when Dr. Muck's secretary called some time ago at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court and also requested Attorney Dewey to give him blank applications for passports for the doctor and his wife, as they were going abroad.

MUCK AND HIS ALIENS BITTERLY FOUGHT HERE

Despite the insistent demands that Doktor Kark Muck sever his relations with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and guarantor of that organization, refused to part with his Herr Direkter, and even defended him. Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg, Springfield, Mass., and other cities had raised their gates against him and the twenty-two German musicians in his orchestra, but Major Higginson continued to book the orchestra wherever any city would hear it.

Many loyal American subscribers to the New York concerts protested from the first against Doktor Muck. When Providence decided he could not play there without playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and he was quoted as saying "to hell with your flag," and "your anthem is not fit for any artistic programme," numerous patriotic subscribers to the New York series, led by Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Caroline Wright and Justice Ingraham, protested to Major Higginson. They were defied and they and many other patriotic persons who had paid for their seats refused to attend the concerts.

German Butcher

SCHMIDT SUCCEEDS MUCK IN BOSTON SYMPHONY

Orchestra's Management Accepts Resignation of Offending Leader.

BOSTON, Mass., March 30.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced to night that the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted. Dr. Muck was arrested by federal officers last Monday night under the enemy allien act and is at present confined in the jail at East Cambridge.

It is understood that the resignation, wihch was offered last January, when Dr. Muck was under a fire of criticism for alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts, will be effective at the close of the orchestra's regular season, May 4, when his contract expires. At present Ernest Schmidt, the assistant conductor, is leading the orchestra.

Dr. Muck made his first appearance with the orchestra in 1906. His work created such a favorable impression that special permission was secured from Emperor William of Germany in 1912 to have him undertake the leadership of the organization for four years. At the end of this period his leave of absence from Berlin was again extended.

rom POST
ddress: Washington, D. C.
ate MAR 26 19

CONTINUED ON FOURTH PAGE.

MUCK ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN

Orchestra Leader Watched for Months, It Is Said.

Boston, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late tonight. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that, pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail tomorrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the orchestral director was made by the Federal officials tonight. Dr. Muck and the symphony orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the national anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticisms of Dr. Muck and other orchestra members as of pro-German sympathies continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management asserting that the doctor was of Swiss birth.

Representatives of the United States District Attorney and of the Department of Justice took part in the arrest. They waited several hours until Dr. Muck returned from a social gathering. It was announced that he probably would be taken before the United States commissioner for an examination tomorrow. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the district attorney's office said that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK CONFINED IN JAIL AT BOSTON

Held With "Bootleggers" and Slackers While Another Leads Orchestra

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been committed to the East Cambridge jail while Ernest Schmidt, alleged to be a strong pro-German, led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him, and that a seizure of his correspondence and papers was made.

It was reported at the Federal Building that Government agents found papers that would cause other arrests and that one of those implicated was one of the best-known persons in Boston.

Muck was held all day at the Federal Building in "the pen" with several "bootleggers" and draft evaders. He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Federal attorneys. Probably he will be arraigned on a charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Doctor Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said. Doctor Muck did not register as an enemy alien.

New York, March 27.—Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, says that Doctor Muck's claim that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that no representations had been made to him by Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that unless the conductor sought the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter. If he was asked to intervene, the minister added, he would proceed as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Bulletin
Frem
Address
Date

DR. MUCK JAILED; FEDERAL AGENTS EXAMINE PAPERS

Investigating Officers Decline to Say Whether Charges of Specific Acts Against the United States Will be Brought in Court Against Prisoner.

[By the Associated Press.]

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge Jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a quantity of documents and letters seized at his home. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case had been received. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, said in New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

KNEW GOVERNMENT'S ORDER

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and other Justice Department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Dr. Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Continued on Page 2 Col. 1.

Continued from Page 1.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was 8 years of age did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed, Federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

A representative of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. In the absence of Dr. Muck, the opening performance here yesterday was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail, Dr. Muck several times remarked to the two deputy marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

Capital Awaits Report.

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice to-day, and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

MES
New York City
MAR 26 1918

ARREST KARL MUCK AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Federal Authorities in Boston May Prefer Charges Under the Criminal Code.

CLAIMED SWISS CITIZENSHIP

Conductor Spends Night in a Cell—Asked for Passports to Europe Yesterday.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested just before midnight tonight by agents of the Department of Justice and Boston policemen, under the President's alian enemy proclamation, and taken to Station 16, where he spent the night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned a little after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judge Dewey, Assistant District Attorney of alien matters for Massacusetts; and, although be was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the Federal criminal code.

Dr. Muck had been preparing all Winter and was to conduct tomorrow evening Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," with orchestra, a chorus of 400, a boy choir of eighty, and a soloist—a most ambitious production, for which he has restored the original score at the cost of much labor.

Dr. Muck, while claiming to be a citizen of the Swiss Republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, as given here, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that document. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, Federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the Federal Government.

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the Federal Building for hours waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known this evening that only today his representative called at the Federal Building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Dr. Muck had been detained on a trivial charge, and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck said to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband

Refusal to Play National Anthem.

The agitation against Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, started in Providence, R. I., on Oct. 30, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert given by the orchestra. The Rhode Island Council of Defense the following day adopted resolutions condemning him "for his deliberately insulting attitude" in refusing to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Muck has maintained silence regarding this incident from the beginning, but Major Henry Lee Higginson, the founder of the orchestra, has repeatedly asserted that Dr. Muck did not refuse to play the anthem, but that he (Major Higginson) on that occasion refused to change the program to include the anthem.

A demand for the internment of Dr. Muck was made a few days later by the American Defense Society and other organizations on the ground that he was a dangerous alien enemy. Dr. Muck's answer was that he was a Swiss citizen.

When Dr. Muck conducted in this city under police guard on March 14, the management of the orchestra made public a document purporting to be a certificate of citizenship, given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after his twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, according to this document, settled there and became naturalized when Karl Muck was 6 years old.

The certificate was as follows:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1858, be (is) our citizen and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim on the 4th day of March, 1881.

The President.
KLEMENS ZUERCHER.
In the name of the Town Council.
C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

Chancellory of the Canton of Am. Zug.

By the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

In his statement made in this city defending Dr. Muck, Major Higginson said:

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities, and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later, I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and on Dec. 7 received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra."

Dr. Muck was formerly the conductor of the Kaiser's Royal Orchestra in Berlin, and in 1913 accepted an offer of $28,000 a year to come to this country and lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.

MUCK ARRESTEI

n Symphony Leader Charged With Being Enemy Alien

Karl Muck, leader of the Bos- ymphony orchestra, was taken custody as an enemy alien at

DR KARL MUCK
Boston Symphony Orchestra

nce in the Back bay district late last night. He was a police station for the d it was announced that rders from Washington, he aken to the East Cambridge

REPUBLICAN
ess Springfield, Ma

In so far as the published cri ms of Dr Muck have had any basis, it has been the knowledge that he was in sympathy with the German cause in the war. The animosity that he has excited has contained elements only indirectly related to the war, such as professional jealousy, covetousness of the "fat" jobs held by foreign musicians, etc. A few weeks ago it was said on what appeared to be excellent authority that the department of justice had no reason to suspect Dr Muck of any activity inimical to the intersets of this country. Now has come his sensational arrest—presumably the outcome of charges lately preferred. Many will share the desire for information indicated by the Boston Traveler when it says: "Perhaps the public will be permitted to know in due season on what the government bases the serious action it has taken against one whose attitude in the great war has been vouched for by one of Boston's distinguished and most patriotic citizens."

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 30 1918

DOKTOR MUCK IS SEIZED AT BOSTON AS ENEMY ALIEN

Government Keeps Secret Reason for Arrest—His Effects Confiscated.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Monday.—Doktor Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested under the President's proclamation at his home here, No. 50 Fenway, about half-past eleven o'clock to-night and locked up for the night. He is charged with being an alien enemy and is held without bail.

Three Department of Justice men and two detectives from the Boston police force made the arrest. They waited about the house all evening, for the doktor was out, but as soon as he returned they entered the house and took him prisoner. When they left the house they had with them a bag containing some of Doktor Muck's effects. What these effects consist of was not given out.

The utmost secrecy surrounds the arrest of the doktor over whose activities the entire country has been aroused. The men who made the arrest refused to discuss the matter at all and the local police say they are unable to make any statement, as it is a government case. Doktor Muck probably will be arraigned before federal authorities in the morning.

When asked how Dr. Muck could be arrested when he is a Swiss citizen, Judge Dewey, Assistant United States Attorney, said that he comes under the head of an enemy alien because has was born in Germany and his sympathies are known to be German.

It was further stated that about six months ago the Department of Justice received word that Dr. Muck was participating as a propagandist in the most insidious manner through personal friends. Suspicion also was aroused when Dr. Muck's secretary called some time ago at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court and also requested Attorney Dewey to give him blank applications for passports for the doctor and his wife, as they were going abroad.

MUCK AND HIS ALIENS BITTERLY FOUGHT HERE

Despite the insistent demands that Doktor Kark Muck sever his relations with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and guarantor of that organization, refused to part with his Herr Direktor, and even defended him. Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg, Springfield, Mass., and other cities had raised their gates against him and the twenty-two German musicians in his orchestra, but Major Higginson continued to book the orchestra wherever any city would hear it.

Many loyal American subscribers to the New York concerts protested from the first against Doktor Muck. When Providence decided he could not play there without playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and he was quoted as saying "to hell with your flag," and "your anthem is not fit for any artistic programme," numerous patriotic subscribers to the New York series, led by Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Caroline Wright and Justice Ingraham, protested to Major Higginson. They were defied and they and many other patriotic persons who had paid for their seats refused to attend the concerts.

m EVENING STAR
dress: Washington, D. C.
te

SCHMIDT SUCCEEDS MUCK IN BOSTON SYMPHONY

Orchestra's Management Accepts Resignation of Offending Leader.

BOSTON, Mass., March 30.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced tonight that the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted. Dr. Muck was arrested by federal officers last Monday night under the enemy allien act and is at present confined in the jail at East Cambridge.

It is understood that the resignation, wihch was offered last January, when Dr. Muck was under a fire of criticism for alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts, will be effective at the close of the orchestra's regular season, May 4, when his contract expires. At present Ernest Schmidt, the assistant conductor, is leading the orchestra.

Dr. Muck made his first appearance with the orchestra in 1906. His work created such a favorable impression that special permission was secured from Emperor William of Germany in 1912 to have him undertake the leadership of the organization for four years. At the end of this period his leave of absence from Berlin was again extended.

rom POST
ddress: Washington, D. C.
ate MAR 26 19

CONTINUED ON FOURTH PAGE.

MUCK ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN

Orchestra Leader Watched for Months, It Is Said.

Boston, March 25.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody as an enemy alien at his residence in the Back Bay district of this city late tonight. He was lodged at a police station for the night, and it was announced that, pending orders from Washington, he would be taken to the East Cambridge jail tomorrow.

No statement as to the immediate cause of the detention of the orchestral director was made by the Federal officials tonight. Dr. Muck and the symphony orchestra have been under criticism since this country entered the war, at first because of failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts. Later the management announced that the national anthem would be a feature of every concert, and this plan was carried out. Criticisms of Dr. Muck and other orchestra members as of pro-German sympathies continued, however, notwithstanding statements from the management asserting that the doctor was of Swiss birth.

Representatives of the United States District Attorney and of the Department of Justice took part in the arrest. They waited several hours until Dr. Muck returned from a social gathering. It was announced that he probably would be taken before the United States commissioner for an examination tomorrow. He was not permitted to obtain bail.

An agent of the district attorney's office said that Dr. Muck had been under surveillance for months.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK CONFINED IN JAIL AT BOSTON

Held With "Bootleggers" and Slackers While Another Leads Orchestra

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, friend of Count Von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been committed to the East Cambridge jail while Ernest Schmidt, accused by him as a strong pro-German, led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him, and that a seizure of his correspondence and papers was made.

It was reported at the Federal Building that Government agents found papers that would cause other arrests and that one of those implicated was one of the best-known persons in Boston.

Muck was held all day at the Federal Building in "the pen" with several "bootleggers" and draft evaders. He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Federal attorneys. Probably he will be arraigned on a charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Doctor Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said. Doctor Muck did not register as an enemy alien.

New York, March 27.—Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, says that Doctor Muck's claim that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that no representations had been made to him by Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that unless the conductor sought the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter. If he was asked to intervene, the minister added, he would proceed as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Bulletin
Frem
Address
Date

DR. MUCK JAILED; FEDERAL AGENTS EXAMINE PAPERS

Investigating Officers Decline to Say Whether Charges of Specific Acts Against the United States Will be Brought in Court Against Prisoner.

[By the Associated Press.]

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge Jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a quantity of documents and letters seized at his home. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case had been received. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, said in New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

KNEW GOVERNMENT'S ORDER

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and other Justice Department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Dr. Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Continued on Page 2 Col. 1.

Continued from Page 1.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was 8 years of age did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed, Federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

A representative of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. In the absence of Dr. Muck, the opening performance here yesterday was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail, Dr. Muck several times remarked to the two deputy marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

Capital Awaits Report.

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice to-day, and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

EVENING SUN

Address NEW YORK CITY.

Date MAR 27 1918

THE MUCK-RAKERS MUCKED

THOSE amiable ladies and gentlemen who imagine that they are aiding their country by making war on art were foiled in their attempts to rake Dr. Karl Muck, the leader of the Boston Symphony Concerts. With very few exceptions the New York press eloquently demanded that no discrimination be made against any artist on account of his art. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck as leader, as the New York World sarcastically remarks, played in Carnegie Hall and nothing happened. Not a single national disaster was reported in this morning's newspapers.

"First on the programme came Brahms' symphony in F major. As Dr. Muck raised his baton 100,000,000 people with bated breath waited for the first note. Not a munitions plant from Connecticut to California blew up. Then followed Sibelius's fantasia of "Pohjola's Daughter" and his "Night Ride and Sunrise." The suspense was nerve-racking. When the orchestra stopped playing, nowhere was the horizon lighted by the dull-red glare from a ship-yard in flames. The concert closed with the prelude from "Tristan and Isolde." When the end came and the audience rose to go, no word had come over the wires about the destruction of the Brooklyn Navy Yard or the capture of Fort Wadsworth by hostile forces armed with fiddles and trombones.

"It was a fearful fiasco on Dr. Muck's part. After all the elaborate preparations, the Boston Symphony Orchestra furnished the ticket-holders with nothing more sensational than a concert of the usual excellence. Just the same, the country had a terribly narrow escape from something. About thirty subscribers turned in their tickets and several wrote letters to the newspapers."

We should make our war upon armies, exclaims the New York American, not upon artists. We must say, Mr. Hearst's great liberal publication remarks, that we have no great sympathy at any time with any outcry against great artists because those artists happen to be of foreign lineage.

"It seems to us that to make verbal war and to invoke ostracism upon such artists as Kreisler and Frieda Hempel and Schumann-Heink and others who are of German or Austrian lineage is carrying patriotic feeling to an absurd limit of intolerance.

"But while there is room for two minds in regard to that matter, there is no room for two minds in regard to Dr. Muck.

"The opposition to Dr. Muck is based on the specific charges which we have recited, and since the evidence shows that these charges are based upon assumed facts, which are NOT facts, the charges necessarily fall to the ground of their own weight.

"The patriotism that will finally win this war is not that sort of patriotism which goes about seeking occasion to create suspicion and ill-feeling at home, and which manifests itself in berating and in stirring up feeling against aliens who are resident in the country and who behave themselves properly and carefully under the circumstances.

"The patriotism which will win the war is the patriotism which gives all that it has and lends all of its thoughts and all its energies to fighting, not an artist here and there, but the armed legions which, under the Kaiser's direction and command, confront our troops and the troops of the Allies on the blood-stained soil of France and Italy.

"It is the patriotism that DOES, and not the patriotism that TALKS, that will accomplish the terrific task of beating Germany. And, to tell the truth, the patriotism THAT DOES, appeals to the good sense of the great body of the American people, and the patriotism THAT TALKS does not.

"Let Dr. Muck direct his orchestra in peace. He will give us good music and patriotic music. It certainly would puzzle any sensible man to discover how that can comfort or aid the Kaiser."

From EVENING GLOBE

Address New York City

A SUCCESSOR TO MUCK.

Artistically the definitive removal of Dr. Karl Muck from music in America is a very considerable loss, but it should not prove the means of some other enemy of this country and our allies stepping into the shoes left empty by the doctor, nor should it result in the disbanding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Muck is a great conductor, but his presence is not essential to the well-being of the world's greatest orchestra—an orchestra which in the midst of a world war preserves a tradition of orchestral playing that may have disappeared elsewhere, and whose utter extinction would, unlike the removal of Dr. Muck, be an irreparable loss. Several eminent conductors whose sympathies in the world war are unquestionably with this country and our allies flash into the mind at once. The Globe has already pointed to Arturo Toscanini, Sir Henry Wood, Eugène Ysaye, and Pierre Monteux as men who are heart and soul with America in her fight for democracy, and whose musical attainments fit them to preside with the requisite ability over the destinies of such an orchestra as that of Boston.

From TELEGRAM

Address: New York City.

Date

Dr. Karl Muck Arrested as an Enemy Alien.—Headline. At last! Some day, perhaps when the coast is being attacked and Prussian airships are dropping bombs on our hospitals, we'll wonder why we never thought to stop the activities of the alien German-American Alliance and its native aiders and abettors. 18

SUN

New York City.

MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK QUIZZED, THEN SENT TO JAIL

No Decision in His Case Is Reached, Despite Long Examination.

CHARGES KEPT SECRET

Will Be Held as Prisoner Until Second Grilling, Due in Day or Two.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged tonight in a cell in the East Cambridge jail after he had been questions at length by officials of the Department of Justice.

It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

For six hours the orchestral conductor was the centre of interest at the Federal Building. From mid-forenoon, when he was brought from the Back Bay police station, where he passed the night, until late in the afternoon, when he was taken to jail, hundreds of persons, including many women, walked to and fro in the corridors outside the office of the United States Marshal hoping to catch a glimpse of the distinguished prisoner.

It was not deemed necessary to keep Dr. Muck in the prisoner's cage in the Marshal's office prior to the examination, although when he first arrived the iron door of the cage clanked behind him. It was opened after a short time, however, and he was allowed to pack about the detention room. While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed a certain nervousness. In less than three hours he smoked several packages of cigarettes.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Assistant District Attorney Dewey gave orders that Dr. Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck. Husband and wife greeted each other affectionately and chatted together briefly. Mrs. Muck impressed those who saw her as confident her husband would soon be released. She accompanied him to the elevator before his departure for the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and others who talked with the prisoner said he was fully acquainted with the Presidential act under which he was held. Dr. Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Federal agents said the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was 8 years old did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed Federal agents said he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other paper seized at Dr. Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected before he is again questioned by the Department of Justice officials.

A representative of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail.

The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. In the absence of Dr. Muck the opening performance here to-day was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail Dr. Muck several times remarked that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

All you need to know about China for Easter-

EVENING STAR

Washington, D. C.

DR. MUCK PUT IN JAIL CELL.

Officials Question Him on Alien Attitude, But Make No Announcement.

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody Monday night as an enemy alien, was lodged last night in a cell in the East Cambridge jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice.

It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

POST

Washington, D. C.

DR. MUCK STILL HELD IN JAIL

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight, after being examined by officials of the Department of Justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

New York, March 26.—Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct.

The Minister added that unless Dr. Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter, but that if he was asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Dr. Muck, director of the Boston symphony orchestra, whose conduct of concerts has been hailed as an insult to the music-loving people throughout the East, is expected to be interned for the period of the war at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. Some decision is expected to be announced today from the Department of Justice, which is awaiting a report from the local Federal authorities in Boston telling of Muck's arrest.

POST

New York City

EXAMINING MUCK'S PAPERS.

Federal Officials Still Hold Orchestra Conductor in Jail.

BOSTON, March 27 (by A. P.).—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge Jail, while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized at his home here. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case have been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated, and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention, on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that, if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the Legation, he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

WASHINGTON AWAITS REPORT.

WASHINGTON, March 27 (by A. P.).—Whether Dr. Muck shall be interned will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston.

NEWS

Baltimore, Md.

STOCKHAM DISAPPOINTED

U. S. Marshal Longed For Pleasure Of Arresting Dr. Muck.

United States Marshal Stockham was a disappointed man yesterday when he read in the morning papers that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had been arrested in Boston and is held as an alien enemy.

Marshal Stockham's disappointment was due to the fact that he had hoped to have the pleasure of arresting Dr. Muck. He had planned to put that desire into execution if the Herr Director had set foot on Maryland soil. Dr. Muck and his orchestra passed through Maryland on trains, but neither the leader nor the men of the organization alighted in Maryland.

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 27 1918

DR. KARL MUCK STILL IN JAIL

Decision in Internment Not Yet Reached.

FEDERAL OFFICIALS MUM

Symphony Orchestra Leader's Case Up to Washington.

Boston, March 27.—Pending further examination of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by the Federal authorities within a day or two, no decision as to the final disposition of his case will be announced. Even the specific reasons for his detention have not been made public.

The musician is occupying a cell in the East Cambridge jail. Before his long examination in the Federal Building yesterday, Dr. Muck said:

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life."

Assistant District Attorney Dewey gaves orders that Dr. Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck. Husband and wife greeted each other affectionately and chatted together briefly. Mrs. Muck impressed those who saw her as confident her husband would soon be released. She accompanied him to the elevator before his departure for the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and others who talked with the prisoner said he was fully acquainted with the Presidential act under which he was held. Dr. Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Federal agents said the government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was 8 years old did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed Federal agents said he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other papers siezed at Dr. Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected before he is again questioned by the Department of Justice officials.

A representative of Major Henry L. Higginston, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail.

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Marx, who was arrested as an alien enemy at Boston yesterday, will be interned for the period of the war will depend upon the contents of a report received at the Department of Justice today from Federal officials in the Massachusetts capital. The repore was placed before Assistant Attorney General O'Brien, in charge of violations of war measures, who said tonight he had not had an opportunity to examine the document and would make no announcement on the case.

HERALD

Washington, D. C.

MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK'S RESIDENCE RAIDED BY U. S. MEN

Alleged Alien Enemy Has Home Searched by Secret Service.

Boston, March 26.—Federal agents raided Dr. Karl Muck's home in Fenway this afternoon. It was rumored they gained possession of papers which will lead to more arrests and more serious charges against the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the authorities were silent, neither willing to deny nor confirm this report.

Dr. Muck, who was arrested yesterday by agents of the Department of Justice, is still confined in the East Cambridge jail. The charge against him is still "enemy alien."

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey declared tonight that the case was still under investigation and that the orchestra director would be held in jail until orders were received from Washington.

The orchestra, under the direction of Ernest Schmidt, another strong pro-German who formerly conducted an orchestra in Germany, played to a large audience here again tonight.

From ENQUIRER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date MAR 27 1918

ALLEGE MUCK GAVE MONEY TO GERMANS

Orchestra Leader Said to Have Used Cash Earned Here for Enemies

Another German Conducts Symphony Concert After Doctor Is Sent to Jail

BOSTON, Mass., March 26.—Department of Justice officials, who have been investigating enemy aliens, said today they regarded the detention of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by Federal officers one of the most important since America entered the war.

From other sources it was learned that this view may have a significance that cannot be gone into until official action is taken.

It is understood that during the very time that a great wave of sympathy for the Berlin director swept throughout the country Dr. Muck was zealous and active in seditious talk. That he had been sending money to Germany with careful regularity, money that he received from American people and money that went not to non-combatants, but money that was used in the war of frightfulness against the Allies. That Dr. Muck has constantly expressed a fine contempt for the American "rabble," has privately criticised and belittled the American Nation as a whole, the administration and America's conduct of the war.

May Be Interned

The information developed in the Dr Muck case will be turned over to authorities at Washington. Officials here believe there is no doubt that Dr. Muck will at least be interned for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck was taken to the Federal building this morning by plain clothes men and special agents of the Department of Justice. Upon his arrival he was placed in the cage in the office of the United States marshal and the gate was locked. He objected strenuously to this, as he was the only prisoner in the enclosure. Other prisoners who had been taken into custody on various charges sat outside the cage.

After a short time Deputy United States Marshal Backus unlocked the cage door and told Dr. Muck that he could sit outside, which he did, taking a seat in the enclosure near other prisoners. He took a box of cigarettes from his pocket and started smoking. He asked for a newspaper, which he proceeded to read. He did not appear to be perturbed over the situation. While he was seated in the Marshal's room several persons called with requests to be allowed to speak with Dr. Muck, and the requests were granted in a few instances.

Manager C. A. Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was among the first to arrive, and it is understood that he was especially anxious to have Dr. Muck released from custody for the purpose of leading the symphony orchestra at this afternoon's and evening's concerts. The request was not granted and it was subsequently arranged that Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor of the symphony orchestra, would conduct in his place. Dr. Muck was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight.

It is understood that the investigation by the Federal authorities of Dr. Muck's affairs is being carried along as rapidly as possible.

Born in Bavaria

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been canceled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass meetings of protest.

There may be nothing further for some days that will cause Dr. Muck to be taken from the East Cambridge jail to the Federal Building. Officials are extremely reticent regarding the reasons for the arrest, but several salient features of the Muck case stand out strongly and which are absolutely authentic.

MUCK IS A BAVARIAN DESPITE SWISS PAPERS

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time, where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Bavarian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss Government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian Army when he arrived at the age of conscription.

The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

Swiss Citizen, Says Envoy

NEW YORK, March 26.—Hans Sulser, the Swiss Minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The Minister said that up to the present no representation had been made to him by Dr. Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston and that so far as he knew, none had been sent to the legation at Washington. The Minister added that unless Dr. Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss Legation, he would take no action in the matter.

RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

MUCK, BEHIND BARS, NO LONGER WIELDS BATON

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Consigned to East Cambridge Jail Cell.

HELD AS ENEMY ALIEN

Was to Have Directed First Production of Bach's "Passion," Newly Restored, Yesterday.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight after being examined by officials of the Department of Justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

After a night in the Back Bay police station, Dr. Muck was taken before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro German activities. Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria, in 1859, and according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about 8 years old.

Here by Leave of Kaiser.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin, before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November after the orchestra, at a concert in Providence, refused to play "The Star-Spangled-Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been canceled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass-meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership, the Symphony Orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's "Passion, according to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck.

It was said that Major Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the Federal Building. At the office of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room, while awaiting examination by United States District Attorney Boynton and his assistants, Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey. Officials declined to make a statement regarding the arrest.

Hold Hun Union Leader.

St. Louis, March 26.—Fred Gus Schmidt, national organizer for the Butchers' and Meat Cutters' Union, was held for the Federal authorities here today on a charge of pro-German activities in fomenting labor difficulties in food-producing establishments in different cities. The specific charge was being in the barred zone without an enemy alien permit.

Soldier Threatened in Chicago.

Chicago, March 26.—A United States soldier in uniform was issued and threatened with violence at a political meeting in the Fifteenth ward last night, called by the Women's Civic League in the interest of Oscar H. Olsen, candidate for Alderman, who is being supported by Republicans and many Democrats. The ward is now represented by William E. Rodriguez, a Socialist, who is a candidate for reelection.

Today loyal citizens were stirred to anger when they learned of the attack, and threatened to hold open-air meetings at every street corner in the ward before the election next Tuesday.

Last night's meeting was said to have been packed by Socialists. The crowd heckled Olsen when he spoke, and when the soldier appeared on the platform and urged those present to vote for a man who would stand back of the American soldier the crowd shouted, "Down with the army," "We won't fight for this country!" "Lynch him!"

Spectators started toward the platform as if to assault the speaker. The meeting was in an uproar and the police were called. No arrests were made.

More than 50 persons were arrested last night for celebrating the German offensive. Early in the evening police were attracted to one house by strains of "Die Wacht am Rhein," and as a result of arrests made there Federal and civic authorities combined in a drive throughout the German settlement, where it was found that a general celebration was being held. German flags were displayed in many places, and in many houses groups were found raising their voices in German songs. Bonfires also were lit in some parts of the city was too great an event not to be celebrated."

Bathe Socialists in Red Ink.

Jackson, Mich., March 26.—"Take exception to statements made in a public address by Harvey Heddon, who says he is a Socialist, a number of masked men in automobiles kidnaped Heddon and his son here last night, and, after taking them to the outskirts of the city, applied a coating of red ink to their heads and faces. Heddon was warned to keep away from Jackson.

AMERICAN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

DR. KARL MUCK IS PUT IN JAIL

Action Taken After Federal Agents Questioned Him.

HAD ASKED FOR PASSPORTS

CLAIM TO SWISS CITIZENSHIP DISCREDITED.

Federal Officials Claim the Right to Hold Him as an Alien Enemy Under the President's Proclamation — How He Came to Be a Swiss, Though Born in Bavaria. Father Took Out Naturalization Papers to Save Him From Service in the Prussian Army.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight after being examined by officials of the Department of Justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

Charles A. Ells, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the Federal building. At the office of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room while awaiting examination by United States District Attorney Boynton and his assistants. It was reported that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about 8 years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck for many years conducted at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play The Star-spangled Banner. Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass-meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's Passion, according to St. Matthew, in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

Washington, March 26.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that it is said to obtan the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered, in many cases by the cantons and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

New York City.
MAR

NEW ARREST IN DR. MUCK CASE EXPECTED SOON

Activities of Close Friend of Orchestra Conductor Being Investigated by Government Agents—No Appeal Yet Made Against Detention.

BOSTON, Wednesday.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge Jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined letters and documents seized at his home here.

Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case has been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention, on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests.

Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, declared at New York that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the Legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

CITIZEN
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

1918

EVENING TELEGRAM
Philadelphia, Pa.

EXPECT ARRESTS IN MUCK CASE

Federal Agents Seize His Papers at Home.

BOSTON, Mass., March 27.—Federal agents have raided Dr. Karl Muck's home in the Fenway. It was rumored they gained possession of papers which will lead to more arrests and more serious charges against the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the authorities were silent, neither willing to deny nor confirm this report.

Dr. Muck, who was arrested yesterday by agents of the Department of Justice, is still confined in the East Cambridge jail. The charge against him is still "enemy alien."

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey declared the case was still under investigation and the orchestra director would be held in jail until orders were received from Washington.

The orchestra, under the direction of Ernest Schmidt, another strong pro-German, who formerly conducted an orchestra in Germany, played to a large audience here again to-night. There was no demonstration.

EVENING GLOBE
ess New York City

MUCK IN JAIL; A CLOSE FRIEND IS INVESTIGATED

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized at his home here. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case has been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

PUBLIC LEDGER
rom Philadelphia, Pa.
Address
Date

Francis Scott Key wrote the "Star Spangled Banner" while in jail, and we wonder what Doctor Muck will evolve now that he has the chance.

DR. MUCK'S DOCUMENTS UNDER OFFICIAL SCRUTINY

Boston Orchestra Conductor Spends Day in Jail While Investigation Goes On.

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custody as an enemy alien, spent today in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized at his home here. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case has been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protest his interests.

May Decide to Intern Muck.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Depatment of Justice today and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

om SUN
ldress: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK'S ARREST.

The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, can scarcely be regarded as a piece of spite-work or of patriotic sentimentalism. Even if the Secret Service people have no conclusive evidence against him, there is little doubt that Dr. Muck is in complete sympathy with the Kaiser's program of forcible Kultur, and that he would rejoice greatly to play a symphony in honor of its success. Thousands of our German citizens have proved their loyalty since the war by giving their sons and their money to the cause of liberty, but there are others who are still Prussian to the core and from whose hearts the "damned spot" left by murderous autocracy can never be washed out.

Dr. Muck will make better music to American ears from the inside of an internment camp than from the stage of a concert hall. When he played "The Star-Spangled Banner" under duress it was a safe guess that he was playing in his mind "The Watch On the Rhine." Many other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra would be in a more congenial atmosphere if they were in France furnishing martial music for the German brigands who are now laying waste again the devastated fields of Picardy.

From ENQUIRER
Address Philadelp
Date

ALLEGE MUCK GA MONEY TO GERMA

Orchestra Leader Said to Have Used Cash Earned Here for Enemies

Another German Conducts Symphony Concert After Doctor Is Sent to Jail

BOSTON, Mass., March 26.—Department of Justice officials, who have been investigating enemy aliens, said today they regarded the detention of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by Federal officers one of the most important since America entered the war.

From other sources it was learned that this view may have a significance that cannot be gone into until official action is taken.

It is understood that during the very time that a great wave of sympathy for the Berlin director swept throughout the country Dr. Muck was zealous and active in seditious talk. That he had been sending money to Germany with careful regularity, money that he received from American people and money that went not to non-combatants, but money that was used in the war of frightfulness against the Allies. That Dr. Muck has constantly expressed a fine contempt for the American "rabble," has privately criticised and belittled the American Nation as a whole, the administration and America's conduct of the war.

May Be Interned

The information developed in the Dr. Muck case will be turned over to authorities at Washington. Officials here believe there is no doubt that Dr. Muck will at least be interned for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck was taken to the Federal building this morning by plain clothes men and special agents of the Department of Justice. Upon his arrival he was placed in the cage in the office of the United States marshal and the gate was locked. He objected strenuously to this, as he was the only prisoner in the enclosure. Other prisoners who had been taken into custody on various charges sat outside the cage.

After a short time Deputy United States Marshal Backus unlocked the cage door and told Dr. Muck that he could sit outside, which he did, taking a seat in the enclosure near other prisoners. He took a box of cigarettes from his pocket and started smoking. He asked for a newspaper, which he proceeded to read. He did not appear to be perturbed over the situation. While he was seated in the Marshal's room several persons called with requests to be allowed to speak with Dr. Muck, and the requests were granted in a few instances.

Manager C. A. Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was among the first to arrive, and it is understood that he was especially anxious to have Dr. Muck released from custody for the purpose of leading the symphony orchestra at this afternoon's and evening's concerts. The request was not granted and it was subsequently arranged that Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor of the symphony orchestra, would conduct in his place. Dr. Muck was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight.

It is understood that the investigation by the Federal authorities of Dr. Muck's affairs is being carried along as rapidly as possible.

Born in Bavaria

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about eight years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William Particularly at Easter which is most men can stand for it.

We're in business to make men look better than they are, and Perry's is the salvation of the man who doesn't mind being massed, but objects to being missed.

On the Boardwalk everybody likes to look 'em over, but nobody likes to be overlooked.

...y's Will Stage You Right for the Boardwalk!

...th Page, 4th Col.

...t we have already ... retreating on a ... both sides of the ... has set in in the tre-

RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

MUCK, BEHIND BARS, NO LONGER WIELDS BATON

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Consigned to East Cambridge Jail Cell.

HELD AS ENEMY ALIEN

Was to Have Directed First Production of Bach's "Passion," Newly Restored, Yesterday.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight after being examined by officials of the Department of Justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

After a night in the Back Bay police station, Dr. Muck was taken before United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and other Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro German activities. Dr. Muck was arrested at his home last night by agents of the Department of Justice as an enemy alien, but no statement was forthcoming as to the specific grounds for this action. It was reported, however, that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria, in 1859, and according to a statement by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about 8 years old.

Here by Leave of Kaiser.

Charges that Dr. Muck, for many years conductor at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin, before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November after the orchestra, at a concert in Providence, refused to play "The Star-Spangled-Banner." Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been canceled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass-meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership, the Symphony Orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's "Passion, according to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Dr. Muck.

It was said that Major Higginson had conferred at his home with members of the orchestra regarding changes in arrangements made necessary by Dr. Muck's arrest.

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the Federal Building. At the office of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room, while awaiting examination by United States District Attorney Boynton and his assistants, Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey. Officials declined to make a statement regarding the arrest.

Hold Hun Union Leader.

St. Louis, March 26.—Fred Gus Schmidt, national organizer for the Butchers' and Meat Cutters' Union, was held for the Federal authorities here today on a charge of pro-German activities in fomenting labor difficulties in food-producing establishments in different cities. The specific charge was being in the barred zone without an enemy alien permit.

Soldier Threatened in Chicago.

Chicago, March 26.—A United States soldier in uniform was issued and threatened with violence at a political meeting in the Fifteenth ward last night, called by the Women's Civic League in the interest of Oscar H. Olsen, candidate for Alderman, who is being supported by Republicans and many Democrats. The ward is now represented by William E. Rodriguez, a Socialist, who is a candidate for re-election.

Today loyal citizens were stirred to anger when they learned of the attack, and threatened to hold open-air meetings at every street corner in the ward before the election next Tuesday.

Last night's meeting was said to have been packed by Socialists. The crowd heckled Olsen when he spoke, and when the soldier appeared on the platform and urged those present to vote for a man who would stand back of the American soldier the crowd shouted, "Down with the army," "We won't fight for this country!" "Lynch him!"

Spectators started toward the platform as if to assault the speaker. The meeting was in an uproar and the police were called. No arrests were made.

More than 50 persons were arrested last night for celebrating the German offensive. Early in the evening police were attracted to one house by strains of "Die Wacht am Rhein," and as a result of arrests made there Federal and civic authorities combined in a drive throughout the German settlement, where it was found that a general celebration was being held. German flags were displayed in many places, and in many houses groups were found raising their voices in German songs. Bonfires also were lit in some parts of the city.

was too great an event not to be celebrated."

Bathe Socialists in Red Ink.

Jackson, Mich., March 26.—"Taking exception to statements made in a public address by Harvey Heddon, who says he is a Socialist, a number of masked men in automobiles kidnaped Heddon and his son here last night, and, after taking them to the outskirts of the city, applied a coating of red ink to their heads and faces. Heddon was warned to keep away from Jackson.

...AID O'NEIL

AMERICAN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

DR. KARL MUCK IS PUT IN JAIL

Action Taken After Federal Agents Questioned Him.

HAD ASKED FOR PASSPORTS

CLAIM TO SWISS CITIZENSHIP DISCREDITED.

Federal Officials Claim the Right to Hold Him as an Alien Enemy Under the President's Proclamation — How He Came to Be a Swiss, Though Born in Bavaria. Father Took Out Naturalization Papers to Save Him From Service in the Prussian Army.

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight after being examined by officials of the Department of Justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

Charles A. Ells, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck when officers took him to the Federal building. At the office of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell the prisoner was permitted to sit outside the cage in the detention room while awaiting examination by United States District Attorney Boynton and his assistants. It was reported that Dr. Muck's secretary a few days ago applied at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck.

Dr. Muck, although claiming to be a Swiss citizen, was born in Bavaria in 1859 and, according to a statement by assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, this made it possible to hold him as an enemy under the President's proclamation. His father went to Switzerland and was naturalized when Dr. Muck was about 8 years old.

Charges that Dr. Muck for many years conducted at the Imperial Opera House at Berlin before he came to this country by leave of Emperor William, had been actively pro-German, became widespread last November after the orchestra at a concert in Providence refused to play The Star-spangled Banner. Since that time engagements of the orchestra in several cities have been cancelled because of popular opposition that in some cases was expressed in mass-meetings of protest.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given today the first performance of Bach's Passion, according to St. Matthew, in preparation of which the conductor at great labor had restored the original score.

Washington, March 26.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time where it is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father when the son was six or eight years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that it is said to obtan the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered, in many cases by the cantons and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for any one to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

York City.

...EW ARREST IN DR. MUCK CASE EXPECTED SOON

Activities of Close Friend of Orchestra Conductor Being Investigated by Government Agents—No Appeal Yet Made Against Detention.

BOSTON, Wednesday.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge Jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined letters and documents seized at his home here.

Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case has been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention, on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests.

Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, declared at New York that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the Legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

CITIZEN
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

1918

EVENING TELEGRAM
Philadelphia, Pa.

EXPECT ARRESTS IN MUCK CASE

Federal Agents Seize His Papers at Home.

BOSTON, Mass., March 27.—Federal agents have raided Dr. Karl Muck's home in the Fenway. It was rumored they gained possession of papers which will lead to more arrests and more serious charges against the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the authorities were silent, neither willing to deny nor confirm this report.

Dr. Muck, who was arrested yesterday by agents of the Department of Justice, is still confined in the East Cambridge jail. The charge against him is still "enemy alien."

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey declared the case was still under investigation and the orchestra director would be held in jail until orders were received from Washington.

The orchestra, under the direction of Ernest Schmidt, another strong pro-German, who formerly conducted an orchestra in Germany, played to a large audience here again to-night. There was no demonstration.

EVENING GLOBE
ess New York City

MUCK IN JAIL; A CLOSE FRIEND IS INVESTIGATED

BOSTON, March 27. — Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized at his home here. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case has been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention, on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

BLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa. 18
Date

Francis Scott Key wrote the "Star Spangled Banner" while in jail, and we wonder what Doctor Muck will evolve now that he has the chance.

DR. MUCK'S DOCUMENTS UNDER OFFICIAL SCRUTINY

Boston Orchestra Conductor Spends Day in Jail While Investigation Goes On.

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custody as an enemy alien, spent today in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized at his home here. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case has been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protest his interests.

May Decide to Intern Muck.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Depatment of Justice today and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

om SUN
ldress: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK'S ARREST.

The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, can scarcely be regarded as a piece of spite-work or of patriotic sentimentalism. Even if the Secret Service people have no conclusive evidence against him, there is little doubt that Dr. Muck is in complete sympathy with the Kaiser's program of forcible Kultur, and that he would rejoice greatly to play a symphony in honor of its success. Thousands of our German citizens have proved their loyalty since the war by giving their sons and their money to the cause of liberty, but there are others who are still Prussian to the core and from whose hearts the "damned spot" left by murderous autocracy can never be washed out.

Dr. Muck will make better music to American ears from the inside of an internment camp than from the stage of a concert hall. When he played "The Star-Spangled Banner" under duress it was a safe guess that he was playing in his mind "The Watch On the Rhine." Many other members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra would be in a more congenial atmosphere if they were in France furnishing martial music for the German brigands who are now laying waste again the devastated fields of Picardy.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

U. S. AGENTS EXAMINE MUCK AND JAIL HIM 'INDEFINITELY'

Arrested as Enemy Alien, Boston Orchestra Leader Is Quizzed; No Decision Is Reached

BOSTON, Mass., March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conducor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight after being examined by officials of the department of justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Doctor Muck.

For six hours the orchestral conductor was the center of interest at the federal building.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said, when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey gave orders that Doctor Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck.

Mr. Dewey and other justice department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Doctor Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, altho of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

After the examination of the musician was completed, federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

MUCK A SWISS CITIZEN, SAYS NATION'S MINISTER

NEW YORK, March 26.—Hans Sulser, the Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that up to the present no representations had been made to him by Doctor Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that so far as he knew none had been sent to the legation at Washington.

German Submarine Is Interned

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The German submarine U-48, which entered the harbor at Ferrol, Spain, on the afternoon of March 23, will be interned and the crew sent to the interior of Spain, the state department was informed today by the American embassy at Madrid.

AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md.

CALLS DR. MUCK TRAITOR AND SP

EX-GOV. WARFIELD DELIGHTE WITH HIS ARREST.

WE SHOULD FEEL PROUD

Former State Executive Says Nothing Could Have Pleased Him More Than to Hear of Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Being Taken Into Custody—Hopes He Will Be Interned and Later Sent Back to Germany.

"Nothing could have pleased me more," said former Governor Edwin Warfield yesterday when asked what he thought of Dr. Karl Muck being taken into custody by the Boston authorities as an alien enemy. "I am glad the eyes of the government have been opened," continued the ex-governor, "and that the people have come to realize what I believed when I started the movement against his appearance in this city several months ago.

"I knew that he was a spy and a friend of the Kaiser, and if it hadn't have been for the Baltimore people the traitor would still have been running at large. Baltimoreans should feel proud that they refused to allow the music director to come to this city. They should rejoice in the fact that he has gotten what he deserves.

"Muck, through his associations, had an opportunity to preach German propaganda and he took advantage of it. He has done more harm by spreading German propaganda in this country than any one other man. He should have been arrested long ago. Are the American people going to stand for insults to their flag? If we can't get anyone but an alien enemy to lead our bands we'll do without music altogether."

The former governor said that while he had no idea what would be done with Muck, he hoped to see him interned and after the war sent back to his Fatherland with instructions never to place his feet on American soil again.

It was through the efforts of ex-Governor Warfield that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its director, Dr. Karl Muck, were barred from conducting their scheduled concert in Baltimore. It was to have taken pace on Wednesday, November 7, ast. When Baltimore learned that Dr. Muck had refused to play The Star-spangled Banner in Providence, R. I., just a short time before the orchestra's scheduled appearance in this city, steps were immediately taken to prevent the concert here. Former Governor Warfield headed the anti-uck movement and a protest mass-meeting was arranged to be held in the Lyric on November 6. The meeting was held and presided over by the ex-governor. The house was jammed to its capacity and proved to be one of the most enthusiastic and patriotic demonstrations ever held in Baltimore.

The day previous, however, the Grand Jury notified the Police Board that it would be unwise and dangerous to allow Dr. Muck to come here and, in turn, the police officials issued an order refusing to permit the concert to take place. Since that time Muck has appeared in a number [illegible] being made to stop [illegible]

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date
Esta

MUCK SENT TO JAIL WHILE INQUIRY IS ON

Boston Symphony Conductor Locked in East Cambridge Cell After Long Questioning.

TO BE HELD INDEFINITELY

Father's Residence in Switzerland Not Regarded as Removing Him from Enemy Alien Class.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged tonight in a cell in the East Cambridge Jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice. It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

For six hours Dr. Muck was the center of interest at the Federal Building. From mid-forenoon, when he was brought from the Back Bay Police Station, where he spent the night, until late in the afternoon when he was taken to jail, hundreds of persons, including many women, walked to and fro in the corridors outside the office of the United States Marshal hoping to catch a glimpse of the prisoner. Among these was Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting.

It was not deemed necessary to keep Dr. Muck in the prisoner's cage in the Marshal's office prior to the examination, although when he first arrived the iron door of the cage clanked behind him. It was opened after a short time, however, and he was allowed to pace about the detention room. While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed a certain nervousness, for in less than three hours he had smoked several packages of cigarettes.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said, when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Judd Dewey, Assistant District Attorney, gave orders that Dr. Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck. Husband and wife greeted each other affectionately and they chatted together briefly. Mrs. Muck impressed those who saw her as very confident that her husband soon would be released from custody. She accompanied him to the elevator before his departure from the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Letters and other papers seized at Dr. Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again questioned by the officials.

A representative of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew." In the absence of Dr. Muck the opening performance here today was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail, Dr. Muck several times remarked to the Deputy Marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK TO GO TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Director of Symphony Orchestra of Boston Will Be Interned, Department of Justice Announces.

PLANNED TO SAIL, IT IS SAID

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., March 26.

Announcement was made by the Department of Justice this afternoon that Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. Dr. Muck was taken into custody last night at his Boston residence and was taken before Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Dr. Muck has not been allowed to come to Washington for concerts for several months. At first the prohibition applied only to German and Austrian alien enemies in his orchestra. An attempt was made to show that he was a Swiss subject, but Federal officials were satisfied that he was born in Germany, that he had never changed his allegiance, and several months ago it was announced that if he should try to come to Washington he would be arrested as an alien enemy, all of whom are barred from entering the District of Columbia.

According to reports made public today, Dr. Muck planned to sail for foreign shores some days ago, his secretary having allegedly applied for blank application blanks for passports for the Symphony conductor and his wife.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given to-day in Boston the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor, at great labor, had restored the original score.

Symphony Plays Bach.

BOSTON, March 26.—While a large audience listened to the Boston Symphony Orchestra play Bach's "Passion" in Symphony Hall to-night and heartily applauded, the orchestra's conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, attempted to sleep on a small cot in the Middlesex County Jail at East

(Continued From Page 1.)

Cambridge. Ernest Schmidt took the Kaiser's own leader's place.

Dr. Muck was taken to jail late this afternoon. Just before he left the United States Marshal's office he was met by Mrs. Muck, who informed him that agents of the Department of Justice had ransacked the Muck home in Brookline and seized hundreds of letters and private papers.

There are about forty Germans in the orchestra, nineteen of which have become citizens. Although it is evident that the members of the orchestra are much disturbed over the arrest of their leader, they would not discuss the case.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

Doctor Muck Where He Ought to B

UNDER arrest and facing internmen Dr. Karl Muck, the "Kaiserliche un Koenigliche" director of the Royal Prus sian Opera—and incidentally loaned as d rector to Mr. Higinson, the Maecenas wh supports the Boston Symphony Orches tra without troubling that cultured cit to help him out—is just where he ough to be. He is also where the PUBLIC LEDGER urged he should be three month ago. No one who was familiar with th real facts about Doctor Muck's career i America had any doubt about it that he is was and has been one of the most pestiferous alien enemies who has ever been within our gates. His conception of hi position here has been that of his fellow professors and his fellow officials in th Government service in Berlin. He has been an active supporter of the worst periodicals devoted to a pro-German propaganda in this country. And, like the other German pastors and professors and artists who wear the livery of heaven to serve the devil in, he has been a bitter opponent of the country, where, through the hypnotic suggestion of his association with an organization with a long and honorable history, he has been estimated far beyond his artistic merits, while he has returned the courtesies received with the cool and insolent martinet disdain of the typical Prussian royal official.

Those who may be disposed to be sentimental over a possible "loss to art" should save their tears. For one thing, the audiences, supposedly Americans, that could sit and applaud a conductor who cynically and openly revealed his contempt for the anthem he conducted and the audience that listened to it need something else besides the ministrations of art. They need the stimulus of a national ideal and something more than the titillations of a helot in music, who, himself possessing a robust sense of nationality, looks upon those he serves over here as parasitic and esthetic epicenes. Those who are familiar with the state of orchestral music in this country know also that it is in a healthy condition that neither needs the services of a Muck nor the millions of a Higginson to keep it going. Now that Muck has been rounded up, it is about time that the Department of Justice stopped fooling with secret enemies of the country in high places, who have gone scot-free too long. It is an outrage that any section should feel forced to local violence, tar and feathers and threats of lynch law to control persons and a situation for which there has been ample warning for a period of three years or more. The days of pussyfooting and mollycoddling ought to be over for good and all. Stop sedition and alien spying at the source.

EVENING JOURNAL
dress: New York.
MAR 27 1918

RAID ON MUCK'S HOME REVEALS PAPERS

Leader of Symphony Orchestra Still Held in Boston Jail as Alien Enemy.

Boston, March 27.—Federal agents have raided Dr. Karl Muck's home in the Fenway. It was rumored they gained possession of papers which will lead to more arrests and more serious charges against the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the authorities were silent, neither willing to deny nor confirm this report.

Dr. Muck, who was arrested yesterday by agents of the Department of Justice, is still confined in the East Cambridge jail. The charge against him is still "enemy alien."

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey declared the case was still under investigation and the orchestra director would be held in jail until orders were received from Washington.

The orchestra, under the direction of Ernest Schmidt, another strong pro-German, who formerly conducted an orchestra in Germany, played to a large audience here again to-night. There was no demonstration.

REPUBLICAN
dress Springfield, Mass.
te MAR 2

KARL MUCK IN PRISON

NO EXPLANATION IS GIVEN

HAS AIR OF NONCHALANCE

Swiss Minister Says He Has Not Been Asked to Intervene

Dr Karl Muck, conductor of the oston symphony orchestra, who was ken into custody Monday night as enemy alien, was lodged last night a cell in the East Cambridge jail ter he had been questioned at ngth by officials of the department justice.

It was announced that no decision to the final disposition of the case s reached and that Dr Muck would examined again within a few ys. The officials continued to main- n silence as to the specific reasons his detention.

For six hours the orchestral conduc- was the center of interest at the eral building. From mid-forenoon en he was brought from the Back y police station, where he spent the ht, until late in the afternoon when was taken to jail, hundreds of per- s including many women walked ough the corridors outside the of- of the United States marshal oing to catch a glimpse of the disguished prisoner. Few of them vever, were successful.

t was not deemed necessary to p Dr Muck in the prisoner's cage the marshal's office prior to the mination, although when he first ived the iron door of the cage nked behind him. It was opened er a short time however, and he s allowed to pace about the deten- n room. While apparently calm nonchalant the prisoner betrayed ertain nervousness, for in less than ee hours he had smoked several kages of cigarets.

Not Inclined to Pose

This is the biggest predicament I e ever been in in my life," he said en asked by newspaper photog- hers to pose for a picture. "I not inclined to pose for a picture. m not inclined to pose for anyng."

ssistant District Attorney Judd wey gave orders that Dr Muck was see no one, but an exception was de in the case of Charles A. Ellis, nager of the orchestra, and Mrs ck. Husband and wife greeted h other affectionately, and they tted together briefly. Mrs Muck pressed those who saw her as very fident that her husband would soon released from custody. She acnpanied him to the elevator before departure for the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and other justice department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Dr Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Federal agents said that the government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States, was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years of age did not affect the status of the son, they said.

To Be Confined Indefinitely

After the examination of the musician was completed, federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other papers seized at Dr Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again questioned by department of justice officials.

A representative of Maj Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St Matthew passion. In the absence of Dr Muck, the opening performance at Boston yesterday was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail Dr Muck several times remarked to the two deputy marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

Swiss Minister Talks

Hans Sulzer, the Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, yesterday told the Associated Press there that the claim of Dr Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that up to the present no representations had been made to him by Dr Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that, so far as he knew, none had been sent to the legation at Washington. The minister added that unless Dr Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter, but that if he was asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

U. S. AGENTS EXAMINE MUCK AND JAIL HIM 'INDEFINITELY'

Arrested as Enemy Alien, Boston Orchestra Leader Is Quizzed; No Decision Is Reached

BOSTON, Mass., March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conducor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight after being examined by officials of the department of justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Doctor Muck.

For six hours the orchestral conductor was the center of interest at the federal building.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said, when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey gave orders that Doctor Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck.

Mr. Dewey and other justice department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Doctor Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, altho of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

After the examination of the musician was completed, federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

MUCK A SWISS CITIZEN, SAYS NATION'S MINISTER

NEW YORK, March 26.—Hans Sulser, the Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that up to the present no representations had been made to him by Doctor Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that so far as he knew none had been sent to the legation at Washington.

German Submarine Is Interned

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The German submarine U-48, which entered the harbor at Ferrol, Spain, on the afternoon of March 23, will be interned and the crew sent to the interior of Spain, the state department was informed today by the American embassy at Madrid.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK TO GO TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Director of Symphony Orchestra of Boston Will Be Interned, Department of Justice Announces.

PLANNED TO SAIL, IT IS SAID

Washington Bureau, The Morning Telegraph, Washington, D. C., March 26.

Announcement was made by the Department of Justice this afternoon that Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. Dr. Muck was taken into custody last night at his Boston residence and was taken before Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Dr. Muck has not been allowed to come to Washington for concerts for several months. At first the prohibition applied only to German and Austrian alien enemies in his orchestra. An attempt was made to show that he was a Swiss subject, but Federal officials were satisfied that he was born in Germany, that he had never changed his allegiance, and several months ago it was announced that if he should try to come to Washington he would be arrested as an alien enemy, all of whom are barred from entering the District of Columbia.

According to reports made public today, Dr. Muck planned to sail for foreign shores some days ago, his secretary having allegedly applied for blank application blanks for passports for the Symphony conductor and his wife.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given to-day in Boston the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor, at great labor, had restored the original score.

Symphony Plays Bach.

BOSTON, March 26.—While a large audience listened to the Boston Symphony Orchestra play Bach's "Passion" in Symphony Hall to-night and heartily applauded, the orchestra's conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, attempted to sleep on a small cot in the Middlesex County Jail at East

(Continued From Page 1.)

Cambridge. Ernest Schmidt took the Kaiser's own leader's place.

Dr. Muck was taken to jail late this afternoon. Just before he left the United States Marshal's office he was met by Mrs. Muck, who informed him that agents of the Department of Justice had ransacked the Muck home in Brookline and seized hundreds of letters and private papers.

There are about forty Germans in the orchestra, nineteen of which have become citizens. Although it is evident that the members of the orchestra are much disturbed over the arrest of their leader, they would not discuss the case.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

Doctor Muck Where He Ought to B

UNDER arrest and facing internmen Dr. Karl Muck, the "Kaiserliche un Koenigliche" director of the Royal Prussian Opera—and incidentally loaned as director to Mr. Higinson, the Maecenas wh supports the Boston Symphony Orchestra without troubling that cultured cit to help him out—is just where he ough to be. He is also where the PUBLIC LEDGER urged he should be three month ago. No one who was familiar with th real facts about Doctor Muck's career i America had any doubt about it that he is was and has been one of the most pestiferous alien enemies who has ever been within our gates. His conception of his position here has been that of his fellow professors and his fellow officials in the Government service in Berlin. He has been an active supporter of the worst periodicals devoted to a pro-German propaganda in this country. And, like the other German pastors and professors and artists who wear the livery of heaven to serve the devil in, he has been a bitter opponent of the country, where, through the hypnotic suggestion of his association with an organization with a long and honorable history, he has been estimated far beyond his artistic merits, while he has returned the courtesies received with the cool and insolent martinet disdain of the typical Prussian royal official.

Those who may be disposed to be sentimental over a possible "loss to art" should save their tears. For one thing, the audiences, supposedly Americans, that could sit and applaud a conductor who cynically and openly revealed his contempt for the anthem he conducted and the audience that listened to it need something else besides the ministrations of art. They need the stimulus of a national ideal and something more than the titillations of a helot in music, who, himself possessing a robust sense of nationality, looks upon those he serves over here as parasitic and esthetic epicenes. Those who are familiar with the state of orchestral music in this country know also that it is in a healthy condition that neither needs the services of a Muck nor the millions of a Higginson to keep it going. Now that Muck has been rounded up, it is about time that the Department of Justice stopped fooling with secret enemies of the country in high places, who have gone scot-free too long. It is an outrage that any section should feel forced to local violence, tar and feathers and threats of lynch law to control persons and a situation for which there has been ample warning for a period of three years or more. The days of pussyfooting and mollycoddling ought to be over for good and all. Stop sedition and alien spying at the source.

om REPUBLICAN
dress Springfield, Mass.
te

KARL MUCK IN PRISON

NO EXPLANATION IS GIVEN

HAS AIR OF NONCHALANCE

Swiss Minister Says He Has Not Been Asked to Intervene

Dr Karl Muck, conductor of the oston symphony orchestra, who was ken into custody Monday night as enemy alien, was lodged last night a cell in the East Cambridge jail ter he had been questioned at ngth by officials of the department justice.

It was announced that no decision to the final disposition of the case s reached and that Dr Muck would examined again within a few ys. The officials continued to main n silence as to the specific reasons his detention.

For six hours the orchestral conduc was the center of interest at the eral building. From mid-forenoon en he was brought from the Back y police station, where he spent the ht, until late in the afternoon when was taken to jail, hundreds of per s including many women walked ough the corridors outside the of of the United States marshal ping to catch a glimpse of the disguished prisoner. Few of them vever, were successful.

t was not deemed necessary to p Dr Muck in the prisoner's cage the marshal's office prior to the mination, although when he first ived the iron door of the cage nked behind him. It was opened er a short time however, and he s allowed to pace about the deten n room. While apparently calm d nonchalant the prisoner betrayed ertain nervousness, for in less than ee hours he had smoked several kages of cigarets.

Not Inclined to Pose

This is the biggest predicament I e ever been in in my life," he said en asked by newspaper photog hers to pose for a picture. "I not inclined to pose for a picture. m not inclined to pose for anyag."

Assistant District Attorney Judd wey gave orders that Dr Muck was see no one, but an exception was de in the case of Charles A. Ellis, nager of the orchestra, and Mrs ck. Husband and wife greeted h other affectionately, and they tted together briefly. Mrs Muck pressed those who saw her as very fident that her husband would soon released from custody. She ac panied him to the elevator before departure for the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and other justice department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Dr Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Federal agents said that the government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States, was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years of age did not affect the status of the son, they said.

To Be Confined Indefinitely

After the examination of the musician was completed, federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other papers seized at Dr Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again questioned by department of justice officials.

A representative of Maj Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St Matthew passion. In the absence of Dr Muck, the opening performance at Boston yesterday was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail Dr Muck several times remarked to the two deputy marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

Swiss Minister Talks

Hans Sulzer, the Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, yesterday told the Associated Press there that the claim of Dr Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that up to the present no representations had been made to him by Dr Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that, so far as he knew, none had been sent to the legation at Washington. The minister added that unless Dr Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter, but that if he was asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md.

CALLS DR. MUCK TRAITOR AND SF

EX-GOV. WARFIELD DELIGHTI WITH HIS ARREST.

WE SHOULD FEEL PROUD

Former State Executive Says Nothing Could Have Pleased Him More Than to Hear of Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Being Taken Into Custody—Hopes He Will Be Interned and Later Sent Back to Germany.

"Nothing could have pleased me more," said former Governor Edwin Warfield yesterday when asked what he thought of Dr. Karl Muck being taken into custody by the Boston authorities as an alien enemy. "I am glad the eyes of the government have been opened," continued the ex-governor, "and that the people have come to realize what I believed when I started the movement against his appearance in this city several months ago.

"I knew that he was a spy and a friend of the Kaiser, and if it hadn't have been for the Baltimore people the traitor would still have been running at large. Baltimoreans should feel proud that they refused to allow the music director to come to this city. They should rejoice in the fact that he has gotten what he deserves.

"Muck, through his associations, had an opportunity to preach German propaganda and he took advantage of it. He has done more harm by spreading German propaganda in this country than any one other man. He should have been arrested long ago. Are the American people going to stand for insults to their flag? If we can't get anyone but an alien enemy to lead our bands we'll do without music altogether."

The former governor said that while he had no idea what would be done with Muck, he hoped to see him interned and after the war sent back to his Fatherland with instructions never to place his feet on American soil again.

It was through the efforts of ex-Governor Warfield that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its director, Dr. Karl Muck, were barred from conducting their scheduled concert in Baltimore. It was to have taken pace on Wednesday, November 7, ast. When Baltimore learned that Dr. Muck had refused to play The Star-spangled Banner in Providence, R. I., just a short time before the orchestra's scheduled appearance in this city, steps were immediately taken to prevent the concert here. Former Governor Warfield headed the anti-uck movement and a protest mass-meeting was arranged to be held in the Lyric on November 6. The meeting was held and presided over by the ex-governor. The house was jammed to its capacity and proved to be one of the most enthusiastic and patriotic demonstrations ever held in Baltimore.

The day previous, however, the Grand Jury notified the Police Board that it would be unwise and dangerous to allow Dr. Muck to come here and, in turn, the police officials issued an order refusing to permit the concert to take place. Since that time Dr. Muck has appeared in a number of cities, no effort being made to stop him, and he went about as a free man until his arrest in

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date

MUCK SENT TO JAIL WHILE INQUIRY IS ON

Boston Symphony Conductor Locked in East Cambridge Cell After Long Questioning.

TO BE HELD INDEFINITELY

Father's Residence in Switzerland Not Regarded as Removing Him from Enemy Alien Class.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged tonight in a cell in the East Cambridge Jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice. It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

For six hours Dr. Muck was the center of interest at the Federal Building. From mid-forenoon, when he was brought from the Back Bay Police Station, where he spent the night, until late in the afternoon when he was taken to jail, hundreds of persons, including many women, walked to and fro in the corridors outside the office of the United States Marshal hoping to catch a glimpse of the prisoner. Among these was Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting.

It was not deemed necessary to keep Dr. Muck in the prisoner's cage in the Marshal's office prior to the examination, although when he first arrived the iron door of the cage clanked behind him. It was opened after a short time, however, and he was allowed to pace about the detention room. While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed a certain nervousness, for in less than three hours he had smoked several packages of cigarettes.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said, when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Judd Dewey, Assistant District Attorney, gave orders that Dr. Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck. Husband and wife greeted each other affectionately and they chatted together briefly. Mrs. Muck impressed those who saw her as very confident that her husband soon would be released from custody. She accompanied him to the elevator before his departure from the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Letters and other papers seized at Dr. Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again questioned by the officials.

A representative of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew." In the absence of Dr. Muck the opening performance here today was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail, Dr. Muck several times remarked to the Deputy Marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

m EVENING JOURNAL
dress: New York.
MAR 27 1918
ate

RAID ON MUCK'S HOME REVEALS PAPERS

Leader of Symphony Orchestra Still Held in Boston Jail as Alien Enemy.

Boston, March 27.—Federal agents have raided Dr. Karl Muck's home in the Fenway. It was rumored they gained possession of papers which will lead to more arrests and more serious charges against the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the authorities were silent, neither willing to deny nor confirm this report.

Dr. Muck, who was arrested yesterday by agents of the Department of Justice, is still confined in the East Cambridge jail. The charge against him is still "enemy alien."

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey declared the case was still under investigation and the orchestra director would be held in jail until orders were received from Washington.

The orchestra, under the direction of Ernest Schmidt, another strong pro-German, who formerly conducted an orchestra in Germany, played to a large audience here again to-night. There was no demonstration.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 27 1918

U. S. AGENTS EXAMINE MUCK AND JAIL HIM 'INDEFINITELY'

Arrested as Enemy Alien, Boston Orchestra Leader Is Quizzed; No Decision Is Reached

BOSTON, Mass., March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conducor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested last night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail tonight after being examined by officials of the department of justice. No decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached today.

At the office of Major Henry L. Higginson, patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was stated by his secretary that Major Higginson would make no statement on the arrest of Doctor Muck.

For six hours the orchestral conductor was the center of interest at the federal building.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said, when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey gave orders that Doctor Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck.

Mr. Dewey and other justice department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Doctor Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, altho of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

After the examination of the musician was completed, federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

MUCK A SWISS CITIZEN, SAYS NATION'S MINISTER

NEW YORK, March 26.—Hans Sulser, the Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that up to the present no representations had been made to him by Doctor Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that so far as he knew none had been sent to the legation at Washington.

German Submarine Is Interned

WASHINGTON, March 26.—The German submarine U-48, which entered the harbor at Ferrol, Spain, on the afternoon of March 23, will be interned and the crew sent to the interior of Spain, the state department was informed today by the American embassy at Madrid.

AMERICAN
Baltimore, Md.

CALLS DR. MUCK TRAITOR AND SP

EX-GOV. WARFIELD DELIGHTE WITH HIS ARREST.

WE SHOULD FEEL PROUD

Former State Executive Says Nothing Could Have Pleased Him More Than to Hear of Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Being Taken Into Custody—Hopes He Will Be Interned and Later Sent Back to Germany.

"Nothing could have pleased me more," said former Governor Edwin Warfield yesterday when asked what he thought of Dr. Karl Muck being taken into custody by the Boston authorities as an alien enemy. "I am glad the eyes of the government have been opened," continued the ex-governor, "and that the people have come to realize what I believed when I started the movement against his appearance in this city several months ago.

"I knew that he was a spy and a friend of the Kaiser, and if it hadn't have been for the Baltimore people the traitor would still have been running at large. Baltimoreans should feel proud that they refused to allow the music director to come to this city. They should rejoice in the fact that he has gotten what he deserves.

"Muck, through his associations, had an opportunity to preach German propaganda and he took advantage of it. He has done more harm by spreading German propaganda in this country than any one other man. He should have been arrested long ago. Are the American people going to stand for insults to their flag? If we can't get anyone but an alien enemy to lead our bands we'll do without music altogether."

The former governor said that while he had no idea what would be done with Muck, he hoped to see him interned and after the war sent back to his Fatherland with instructions never to place his feet on American soil again.

It was through the efforts of ex-Governor Warfield that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its director, Dr. Karl Muck, were barred from conducting their scheduled concert in Baltimore. It was to have taken pace on Wednesday, November 7, ast. When Baltimore learned that Dr. Muck had refused to play The Star-spangled Banner in Providence, R. I., just a short time before the orchestra's scheduled appearance in this city, steps were immediately taken to prevent the concert here. Former Governor Warfield headed the anti-uck movement and a protest mass-meeting was arranged to be held in the Lyric on November 6. The meeting was held and presided over by the ex-governor. The house was jammed to its capacity and proved to be one of the most enthusiastic and patriotic demonstrations ever held in Baltimore.

The day previous, however, the Grand Jury notified the Police Board that it would be unwise and dangerous to allow Dr. Muck to come here and, in turn, the police officials issued an order refusing to permit the concert to take place. Since that time Dr. Muck has appeared in a number of cities, no effort being made to stop him, and he went about as a free man until his arrest in

TIMES
ess New York City

MUCK SENT TO JAIL WHILE INQUIRY IS ON

Boston Symphony Conductor Locked in East Cambridge Cell After Long Questioning.

TO BE HELD INDEFINITELY

Father's Residence in Switzerland Not Regarded as Removing Him from Enemy Alien Class.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged tonight in a cell in the East Cambridge Jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice. It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

For six hours Dr. Muck was the center of interest at the Federal Building. From mid-forenoon, when he was brought from the Back Bay Police Station, where he spent the night, until late in the afternoon when he was taken to jail, hundreds of persons, including many women, walked to and fro in the corridors outside the office of the United States Marshal hoping to catch a glimpse of the prisoner. Among these was Mrs. John L. Gardner, who waved her hand to him in friendly greeting.

It was not deemed necessary to keep Dr. Muck in the prisoner's cage in the Marshal's office prior to the examination, although when he first arrived the iron door of the cage clanked behind him. It was opened after a short time, however, and he was allowed to pace about the detention room. While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed a certain nervousness, for in less than three hours he had smoked several packages of cigarettes.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said, when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Judd Dewey, Assistant District Attorney, gave orders that Dr. Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck. Husband and wife greeted each other affectionately and they chatted together briefly. Mrs. Muck impressed those who saw her as very confident that her husband soon would be released from custody. She accompanied him to the elevator before his departure from the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Letters and other papers seized at Dr. Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again questioned by the officials.

A representative of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew." In the absence of Dr. Muck the opening performance here today was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail, Dr. Muck several times remarked to the Deputy Marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK TO GO TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Director of Symphony Orchestra of Boston Will Be Interned, Department of Justice Announces.

PLANNED TO SAIL, IT IS SAID

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., March 26.

Announcement was made by the Department of Justice this afternoon that Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. Dr. Muck was taken into custody last night at his Boston residence and was taken before Federal officials to be questioned regarding his alleged pro-German activities.

Dr. Muck has not been allowed to come to Washington for concerts for several months. At first the prohibition applied only to German and Austrian alien enemies in his orchestra. An attempt was made to show that he was a Swiss subject, but Federal officials were satisfied that he was born in Germany, that he had never changed his allegiance, and several months ago it was announced that if he should try to come to Washington he would be arrested as an alien enemy, all of whom are barred from entering the District of Columbia.

According to reports made public today, Dr. Muck planned to sail for foreign shores some days ago, his secretary having allegedly applied for blank application blanks for passports for the Symphony conductor and his wife.

Under Dr. Muck's leadership the Symphony Orchestra was to have given to-day in Boston the first performance of Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," in preparation of which the conductor, at great labor, had restored the original score.

Symphony Plays Bach.

BOSTON, March 26.—While a large audience listened to the Boston Symphony Orchestra play Bach's "Passion" in Symphony Hall to-night and heartily applauded, the orchestra's conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, attempted to sleep on a small cot in the Middlesex County Jail at East

(Continued From Page 1.)

Cambridge. Ernest Schmidt took the Kaiser's own leader's place.

Dr. Muck was taken to jail late this afternoon. Just before he left the United States Marshal's office he was met by Mrs. Muck, who informed him that agents of the Department of Justice had ransacked the Muck home in Brookline and seized hundreds of letters and private papers.

There are about forty Germans in the orchestra, nineteen of which have become citizens. Although it is evident that the members of the orchestra are much disturbed over the arrest of their leader, they would not discuss the case.

m PUBLIC LEDGER
dress Philadelphia, Pa.
te MAR 27 1918

Doctor Muck Where He Ought to Be

UNDER arrest and facing internment, Dr. Karl Muck, the "Kaiserliche und Koenigliche" director of the Royal Prussian Opera—and incidentally loaned as director to Mr. Higinson, the Maecenas who supports the Boston Symphony Orchestra without troubling that cultured city to help him out—is just where he ought to be. He is also where the PUBLIC LEDGER urged he should be three months ago. No one who was familiar with the real facts about Doctor Muck's career in America had any doubt about it that he is, was and has been one of the most pestiferous alien enemies who has ever been within our gates. His conception of his position here has been that of his fellow-professors and his fellow officials in the Government service in Berlin. He has been an active supporter of the worst periodicals devoted to a pro-German propaganda in this country. And, like the other German pastors and professors and artists who wear the livery of heaven to serve the devil in, he has been a bitter opponent of the country, where, through the hypnotic suggestion of his association with an organization with a long and honorable history, he has been estimated far beyond his artistic merits, while he has returned the courtesies received with the cool and insolent martinet disdain of the typical Prussian royal official.

Those who may be disposed to be sentimental over a possible "loss to art" should save their tears. For one thing, the audiences, supposedly Americans, that could sit and applaud a conductor who cynically and openly revealed his contempt for the anthem he conducted and the audience that listened to it need something else besides the ministrations of art. They need the stimulus of a national ideal and something more than the titillations of a helot in music, who, himself possessing a robust sense of nationality, looks upon those he serves over here as parasitic and esthetic epicenes. Those who are familiar with the state of orchestral music in this country know also that it is in a healthy condition that neither needs the services of a Muck nor the millions of a Higginson to keep it going. Now that Muck has been rounded up, it is about time that the Department of Justice stopped fooling with secret enemies of the country in high places, who have gone scot-free too long. It is an outrage that any section should feel forced to local violence, tar and feathers and threats of lynch law to control persons and a situation for which there has been ample warning for a period of three years or more. The days of pussyfooting and mollycoddling ought to be over for good and all. Stop sedition and alien spying at the source.

m EVENING JOURNAL
dress: New York.
MAR 27 1918
ate

RAID ON MUCK'S HOME REVEALS PAPERS

Leader of Symphony Orchestra Still Held in Boston Jail as Alien Enemy.

Boston, March 27.—Federal agents have raided Dr. Karl Muck's home in the Fenway. It was rumored they gained possession of papers which will lead to more arrests and more serious charges against the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the authorities were silent, neither willing to deny nor confirm this report.

Dr. Muck, who was arrested yesterday by agents of the Department of Justice, is still confined in the East Cambridge jail. The charge against him is still "enemy alien."

Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey declared the case was still under investigation and the orchestra director would be held in jail until orders were received from Washington.

The orchestra, under the direction of Ernest Schmidt, another strong pro-German, who formerly conducted an orchestra in Germany, played to a large audience here again to-night. There was no demonstration.

BLICAN
Springfield, Mass.

MUCK IN PRISON

PLANATION IS GIVEN

AIR OF NONCHALANCE

—s Minister Says He Has Not Been Asked to Intervene

Dr Karl Muck, conductor of the oston symphony orchestra, who was ken into custody Monday night as enemy alien, was lodged last night a cell in the East Cambridge jail ter he had been questioned at ngth by officials of the department Justice.

It was announced that no decision to the final disposition of the case s reached and that Dr Muck would examined again within a few ys. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons his detention.

For six hours the orchestral conduc- was the center of interest at the eral building. From mid-forenoon en he was brought from the Back y police station, where he spent the ht, until late in the afternoon when was taken to jail, hundreds of per- ns including many women walked ough the corridors outside the of- e of the United States marshal ping to catch a glimpse of the disguished prisoner. Few of them wever, were successful.

It was not deemed necessary to p Dr Muck in the prisoner's cage the marshal's office prior to the amination, although when he first ived the iron door of the cage nked behind him. It was opened er a short time however, and he s allowed to pace about the detention room. While apparently calm d nonchalant the prisoner betrayed ertain nervousness, for in less than ee hours he had smoked several kages of cigarets.

Not Inclined to Pose

This is the biggest predicament I e ever been in in my life," he said en asked by newspaper photogphers to pose for a picture. "I not inclined to pose for a picture. m not inclined to pose for anyag."

Assistant District Attorney Judd wey gave orders that Dr Muck was see no one, but an exception was de in the case of Charles A. Ellis, nager of the orchestra, and Mrs ck. Husband and wife greeted h other affectionately, and they tted together briefly. Mrs Muck pressed those who saw her as very fident that her husband would soon released from custody. She acpanied him to the elevator before departure for the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and other justice department agents who talked with the prisoner said that he was fully acquainted with the presidential act under which he was held. Dr Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Federal agents said that the government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years of age did not affect the status of the son, they said.

To Be Confined Indefinitely

After the examination of the musician was completed, federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other papers seized at Dr Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again questioned by department of justice officials.

A representative of Maj Henry L Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St Matthew passion. In the absence of Dr Muck, the opening performance at Boston yesterday was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. During his automobile ride to the jail Dr Muck several times remarked to the two deputy marshals who accompanied him that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

Swiss Minister Talks

Hans Sulzer, the Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, yesterday told the Associated Press there that the claim of Dr Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct. The minister said that up to the present no representations had been made to him by Dr Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that, so far as he knew, none had been sent to the legation at Washington. The minister added that unless Dr Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter, but that if he was asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

TRIBUNE

New York City

MAR 27 1918

Dr. Muck Sent To Jail; All Pleas Are Vain

Boston Symphony Leader Committed, Despite Patrons' Requests

Home Is Ransacked, Documents Seized

Papers Found May Incriminate Others, Including Prominent Person

[Special Correspondence]

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, personal friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was committed to the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon, while Ernest Schmidt led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him and that a seizure of correspondence and papers was made.

It was rumored at the Federal Building to-night that these government agents found papers of such a character that other arrests may be expected and that one of those implicated with Dr. Muck is one of the most prominent persons in Boston. Officials declined to give out any information concerning their activities or the results of their visits to the Muck home beyond the fact that he was detained as an enemy alien and his conduct was under investigation.

Held in Common Pen

The Symphony Orchestra leader was a prisoner all day at the Federal building. He was held in the "pen" with several others under arrest for various infractions of government regulations, including several "bootleggers" and draft evaders.

He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey and United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton. When he was turned over to a deputy marshal for commitment to jail there was no change in the complaint entered on the United States marshal's record.

How farreaching revelations were made to-day by Federal agents was not stated to-inght. They would not deny, however, that Dr. Muck would not be taken into court at a later date and arraigned on a specific charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

There were several visitors at the offices of the numerous officials concerned with Dr. Muck's detention, and among them were some of Boston's prominent music patrons. They called on United States Marshal Mitchell, inquiring as to the possibility of Dr. Muck being permitted to conduct the concerts at Symphony Hall this afternoon and to-night. Offers of bonds, escorts and guards failed to move the officials to grant the requests for the orchestra leader's temporary release from custody.

Patrons Intercede in Vain

One group of ten patrons of the Symphony concerts interceded with the officials, but made it clear that their interest was entirely musical, and that they were not seeking Dr. Muck's release except under suitable restraint, long enough to conduct the orchestra at the concerts which were arranged far in advance of any suggestion that the leader was to be arrested. The callers declared they were Americans first and music lovers afterward, and freely expressed their desire to stand with the government in all patriotic matters, including their investigation of Dr. Muck's conduct.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey, in charge of enemy alien cases and in personal charge of the case against Dr. Muck, firmly refused to permit any arrangement to be made for Dr. Muck to leave the custody of the United States marshal, and arrangements were then completed for the concerts to go on without the leader.

House Completely Searched

When Dr. Muck was transferred from the police station in Boylston Street to the detention cage at the marshal's office in the Federal Building, application was made by Department of Justice officers for three search warrants. They described three premises which Dr. Muck was known to have visited, including his home at 50 Fenway Street, where an exhaustive search was conducted. Mrs. Muck was at home during the proceedings, but the officers apparently knew the premises thoroughly and asked for no assistance in finding the papers they sought.

The other warrants were served in other localities, and when the raiding officers returned to the Federal building they had a mass of papers which they had taken from the three places searched, but most of the matter was taken from Dr. Muck's studio.

After a brief interview with Assistant District Attorney Dewey, Dr. Muck reappeared greatly agitated. He

Tribune 3/27/18 continued

Shies at Handcuffs

The deputy had two pairs of handcuffs in his hand as he entered the room and Dr. Muck shrank back in the corner as his glance fell upon them. The officers unlocked the cage in which two of the prisoners were confined and handcuffed them, but the smile with which he nodded to Dr. Muck to follow him without handcuffs was acknowledged with a smile from the musician.

Mrs. Muck visited her husband and, with permission, gave him some cigarettes. To-night it was announced at the Cambridge jail that there would be no setting aside of the rule there against cigarettes, and that Dr. Muck would have to forego smoking until he became accustomed to a pipe.

Considerable speculation was indulged in to-night as to the time Dr. Muck would be held at Cambridge. He told one of his guards that he thought it would be three or four days. Officers at the Federal Building said they could not tell.

Status of Case

It was pointed out that Dr. Muck is now held as an enemy alien, subject to orders from Washington, and without any privilege of trial. If the papers seized at his house reveal incriminating information he may be charged with a violation of one or more of the regulations of the espionage act, in which event he would be arraigned in court for a trial. No information on this point was forthcoming to-night, but officials did say that no further arrests were expected before to-morrow.

AMERICAN

New York City.

MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK PUT IN CELL AFTER QUIZ

Mrs. William Jay Says She Has Written Testimony Against Symphony Conductor.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged to-night in a cell in East Cambridge jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice.

It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed some nervousness. When asked to pose for a photograph, he said:

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life. I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Federal agents said the Government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed, Federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Mrs. William Jay, who, since last November, has vigorously protested the public appearances of Dr. Muck, yesterday said:

"I have every reason to believe that, through information given to me, the authorities have intercepted correspondence at Bridgeport, Conn. A series of letters in German have been found. When I protested the recent appearance of Dr. Muck at the concert given in Carnegie Hall this month, Mrs. John Nagel, wife of a 'cellist in the Boston Orchestra, who is now living at No. 7 Macon street, Brooklyn, told me she would give certain written testimony the night Dr. Muck played in New York.

"This she did. The testimony was given to me and to a representative of the United States Government. On the night of March 15 a former associate of Dr. Muck agreed to give verbal and written testimony. This testimony is now also in the hands of the authorities.

"I believe the arrest of Dr. Muck is the beginning of a revelation of propaganda in very high places. This man, many people believe, was the cornerstone of a real and dangerous country-wide sentiment working for the enemy in this country."

PUBLIC LEDGER

Philadelphia, Pa.

MAR 27 1918

MUCK GOES TO JAIL AFTER DAY IN "PEN"

Held With "Bootleggers" and Slackers While Another Leads Orchestra

HIS LETTERS SEIZED

Correspondence May Result in Arrest of Well-Known Boston People

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was committed to the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon, while Ernest Schmidt, alleged to be a strong pro-German, led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him, and that a seizure of his correspondence and papers was made.

It was reported at the Federal Building tonight that Government agents found papers that would cause other arrests and that one of those implicated was one of the best-known persons in Boston.

Muck was held all day at the Federal Building in "the pen" with several "bootleggers" and draft evaders. He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Federal attorneys. Probably he will be arraigned on a charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Doctor Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said. Doctor Muck did not register as an enemy alien.

New York, March 26.—Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he was a naturalized citizen of Switzerland was correct. The minister said that no representations had been made to him by Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that unless the conductor sought the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter. If he was asked to intervene, the minister added, he would proceed as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

MAR 27 1918

SEARCH MUCK'S HOME IN BOSTON

U. S. Agents Refuse to Discuss Arrest of Orchestra Leader.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized in his home.

Officials declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the case have been received.

It was said a close friend of the doctor's was being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to avoid jail on the ground he was Swiss, but friends said counsel had been engaged for him.

Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Ship Launched 62 Days

SUN

Baltimore, Md.

MAR

Famous Musician In Cell

DR. KARL MUCK

Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is under arrest in that city and may be interned as an enemy alien.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

DR. MUCK'S ARREST.

THE Department of Justice no doubt has sound and sufficient reasons for the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—reasons which the public is prepared either to accept or to assume, according as the Federal Government does or does not give them out.

The arrest is a distinct surprise, the more so that during recent agitation directed against Dr. Muck the Federal authorities were understood to declare that they had no fault to find with his standing or conduct.

By far the most regrettable feature of the case is the position in which it places Major Henry L. Higginson, who has for years supported this famous musical organization, who has sturdily defended Dr. Muck through attacks led by persons possessing no real evidence upon which to base their hostility, and whose personal loyalty and Americanism are of the soundest.

Dr. Muck may be a dangerous alien enemy who ought to be interned for the duration of the war. But it is certainly neither his devotion to the music of Beethoven and Wagner nor the zeal of those who condemned him therefor that has now proved him a menace.

TRIBUNE

New York City

MAR 27 1918

Dr. Muck Sent To Jail; All Pleas Are Vain

Boston Symphony Leader Committed, Despite Patrons' Requests

Home Is Ransacked, Documents Seized

Papers Found May Incriminate Others, Including Prominent Person

[Special Correspondence]

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, personal friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was committed to the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon, while Ernest Schmidt led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him and that a seizure of correspondence and papers was made.

It was rumored at the Federal Building to-night that these government agents found papers of such a character that other arrests may be expected and that one of those implicated with Dr. Muck is one of the most prominent persons in Boston. Officials declined to give out any information concerning their activities or the results of their visits to the Muck home beyond the fact that he was detained as an enemy alien and his conduct was under investigation.

Held in Common Pen

The Symphony Orchestra leader was a prisoner all day at the Federal building. He was held in the "pen" with several others under arrest for various infractions of government regulations, including several "bootleggers" and draft evaders.

He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey and United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton. When he was turned over to a deputy marshal for commitment to jail there was no change in the complaint entered on the United States marshal's record.

How farreaching revelations were made to-day by Federal agents was not stated to-inght. They would not deny, however, that Dr. Muck would not be taken into court at a later date and arraigned on a specific charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

There were several visitors at the offices of the numerous officials concerned with Dr. Muck's detention, and among them were some of Boston's prominent music patrons. They called on United States Marshal Mitchell, inquiring as to the possibility of Dr. Muck being permitted to conduct the concerts at Symphony Hall this afternoon and to-night. Offers of bonds, escorts and guards failed to move the officials to grant the requests for the orchestra leader's temporary release from custody.

Patrons Intercede in Vain

One group of ten patrons of the Symphony concerts interceded with the officials, but made it clear that their interest was entirely musical, and that they were not seeking Dr. Muck's release except under suitable restraint, long enough to conduct the orchestra at the concerts which were arranged far in advance of any suggestion that the leader was to be arrested. The callers declared they were Americans first and music lovers afterward, and freely expressed their desire to stand with the government in all patriotic matters, including their investigation of Dr. Muck's conduct.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey, in charge of enemy alien cases and in personal charge of the case against Dr. Muck, firmly refused to permit any arrangement to be made for Dr. Muck to leave the custody of the United States marshal, and arrangements were then completed for the concerts to go on without the leader.

House Completely Searched

When Dr. Muck was transferred from the police station in Boylston Street to the detention cage at the marshal's office in the Federal Building, application was made by Department of Justice officers for three search warrants. They described three premises where Dr. Muck was known to have visited, including his home at 50 Fenway Street, where an exhaustive search was conducted. Mrs. Muck was at home during the proceedings, but the officers apparently knew the premises thoroughly and asked for no assistance in finding the papers they sought.

The other warrants were served in other localities, and when the raiding officers returned to the Federal building they had a mass of papers which they had taken from the three places searched, but most of the matter was taken from Dr. Muck's studio.

After a brief interview with Assistant District Attorney Dewey, Dr. Muck reappeared greatly agitated. He quickly [illegible]

Tribune 3/27/18 continued

Shies at Handcuffs

The deputy had two pairs of handcuffs in his hand as he entered the room and Dr. Muck shrank back in the corner as his glance fell upon them. The officers unlocked the cage in which two of the prisoners were confined and handcuffed them, but the smile with which he nodded to Dr. Muck to follow him without handcuffs was acknowledged with a smile from the musician.

Mrs. Muck visited her husband and, with permission, gave him some cigarettes. To-night it was announced at the Cambridge jail that there would be no setting aside of the rule there against cigarettes, and that Dr. Muck would have to forego smoking until he became accustomed to a pipe.

Considerable speculation was indulged in to-night as to the time Dr. Muck would be held at Cambridge. He told one of his guards that he thought it would be three or four days. Officers at the Federal Building said they could not tell.

Status of Case

It was pointed out that Dr. Muck is now held as an enemy alien, subject to orders from Washington, and without any privilege of trial. If the papers seized at his house reveal incriminating information he may be charged with a violation of one or more of the regulations of the espionage act, in which event he would be arraigned in court for a trial. No information on this point was forthcoming to-night, but officials did say that no further arrests were expected before to-morrow.

AMERICAN

New York City.

MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK PUT IN CELL AFTER QUIZ

Mrs. William Jay Says She Has Written Testimony Against Symphony Conductor.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged to-night in a cell in East Cambridge jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice.

It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed some nervousness. When asked to pose for a photograph, he said:

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life. I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Federal agents said the Government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed, Federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Mrs. William Jay, who, since last November, has vigorously protested the public appearances of Dr. Muck, yesterday said:

"I have every reason to believe that, through information given to me, the authorities have intercepted correspondence at Bridgeport, Conn. A series of letters in German have been found. When I protested the recent appearance of Dr. Muck at the concert given in Carnegie Hall this month, Mrs. John Nagel, wife of a 'cellist in the Boston Orchestra, who is now living at No. 7 Macon street, Brooklyn, told me she would give certain written testimony the night Dr. Muck played in New York.

"This she did. The testimony was given to me and to a representative of the United States Government. On the night of March 15 a former associate of Dr. Muck agreed to give verbal and written testimony. This testimony is now also in the hands of the authorities.

"I believe the arrest of Dr. Muck is the beginning of a revelation of propaganda in very high places. This man, many people believe, was the cornerstone of a real and dangerous country-wide sentiment working for the enemy in this country."

PUBLIC LEDGER

Philadelphia, Pa.

MAR 27 1918

MUCK GOES TO JAIL AFTER DAY IN "PEN"

Held With "Bootleggers" and Slackers While Another Leads Orchestra

HIS LETTERS SEIZED

Correspondence May Result in Arrest of Well-Known Boston People

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was committed to the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon, while Ernest Schmidt, alleged to be a strong pro-German, led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him, and that a seizure of his correspondence and papers was made.

It was reported at the Federal Building tonight that Government agents found papers that would cause other arrests and that one of those implicated was one of the best-known persons in Boston.

Muck was held all day at the Federal Building in "the pen" with several "bootleggers" and draft evaders. He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Federal attorneys. Probably he will be arraigned on a charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Doctor Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said. Doctor Muck did not register as an enemy alien.

New York, March 26.—Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he was a naturalized citizen of Switzerland was correct. The minister said that no representations had been made to him by Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that unless the conductor sought the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter. If he was asked to intervene, the minister added, he would proceed as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

SEARCH MUCK'S HOME IN BOSTON

U. S. Agents Refuse to Discuss Arrest of Orchestra Leader.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized in his home.

Officials declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the case have been received.

It was said a close friend of the doctor's was being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to avoid jail on the ground he was Swiss, but friends said counsel had been engaged for him.

Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Ship Launched 62 Days

SUN

Baltimore, Md.

Famous Musician In Cell

DR. KARL MUCK

Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is under arrest in that city and may be interned as an enemy alien.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

DR. MUCK'S ARREST.

THE Department of Justice no doubt has sound and sufficient reasons for the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—reasons which the public is prepared either to accept or to assume, according as the Federal Government does or does not give them out.

The arrest is a distinct surprise, the more so that during recent agitation directed against Dr. Muck the Federal authorities were understood to declare that they had no fault to find with his standing or conduct.

By far the most regrettable feature of the case is the position in which it places Major Henry L. Higginson, who has for years supported this famous musical organization, who has sturdily defended Dr. Muck through attacks led by persons possessing no real evidence upon which to base their hostility, and whose personal loyalty and Americanism are of the soundest.

Dr. Muck may be a dangerous alien enemy who ought to be interned for the duration of the war. But it is certainly neither his devotion to the music of Beethoven and Wagner nor the zeal of those who condemned him therefor that has now proved him a menace.

TRIBUNE

New York City

MAR 27 1918

Dr. Muck Sent To Jail; All Pleas Are Vain

Boston Symphony Leader Committed, Despite Patrons' Requests

Home Is Ransacked, Documents Seized

Papers Found May Incriminate Others, Including Prominent Person

[Special Correspondence]

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, personal friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was committed to the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon, while Ernest Schmidt led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him and that a seizure of correspondence and papers was made.

It was rumored at the Federal Building to-night that these government agents found papers of such a character that other arrests may be expected and that one of those implicated with Dr. Muck is one of the most prominent persons in Boston. Officials declined to give out any information concerning their activities or the results of their visits to the Muck home beyond the fact that he was detained as an enemy alien and his conduct was under investigation.

Held in Common Pen

The Symphony Orchestra leader was a prisoner all day at the Federal building. He was held in the "pen" with several others under arrest for various infractions of government regulations, including several "bootleggers" and draft evaders.

He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey and United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton. When he was turned over to a deputy marshal for commitment to jail there was no change in the complaint entered on the United States marshal's record.

How farreaching revelations were made to-day by Federal agents was not stated to-inght. They would not deny, however, that Dr. Muck would not be taken into court at a later date and arraigned on a specific charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

There were several visitors at the offices of the numerous officials concerned with Dr. Muck's detention, and among them were some of Boston's prominent music patrons. They called on United States Marshal Mitchell, inquiring as to the possibility of Dr. Muck being permitted to conduct the concerts at Symphony Hall this afternoon and to-night. Offers of bonds, escorts and guards failed to move the officials to grant the requests for the orchestra leader's temporary release from custody.

Patrons Intercede in Vain

One group of ten patrons of the Symphony concerts interceded with the officials, but made it clear that their interest was entirely musical, and that they were not seeking Dr. Muck's release except under suitable restraint, long enough to conduct the orchestra at the concerts which were arranged far in advance of any suggestion that the leader was to be arrested. The callers declared they were Americans first and music lovers afterward, and freely expressed their desire to stand with the government in all patriotic matters, including their investigation of Dr. Muck's conduct.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey, in charge of enemy alien cases and in personal charge of the case against Dr. Muck, firmly refused to permit any arrangement to be made for Dr. Muck to leave the custody of the United States marshal, and arrangements were then completed for the concerts to go on without the leader.

House Completely Searched

When Dr. Muck was transferred from the police station in Boylston Street to the detention cage at the marshal's office in the Federal Building, application was made by Department of Justice officers for three search warrants. They described three premises where Dr. Muck was known to have visited, including his home at 50 Fenway Street, where an exhaustive search was conducted. Mrs. Muck was at home during the proceedings, but the officers apparently knew the premises thoroughly and asked for no assistance in finding the papers they sought.

The other warrants were served in other localities, and when the raiding officers returned to the Federal building they had a mass of papers which they had taken from the three places searched, but most of the matter was taken from Dr. Muck's studio.

After a brief interview with Assistant District Attorney Dewey, Dr. Muck reappeared greatly agitated. He quick[illegible]

Tribune 3/27/18

continued

Shies at Handcuffs

The deputy had two pairs of handcuffs in his hand as he entered the room and Dr. Muck shrank back in the corner as his glance fell upon them. The officers unlocked the cage in which two of the prisoners were confined and handcuffed them, but the smile with which he nodded to Dr. Muck to follow him without handcuffs was acknowledged with a smile from the musician.

Mrs. Muck visited her husband and, with permission, gave him some cigarettes. To-night it was announced at the Cambridge jail that there would be no setting aside of the rule there against cigarettes, and that Dr. Muck would have to forego smoking until he became accustomed to a pipe.

Considerable speculation was indulged in to-night as to the time Dr. Muck would be held at Cambridge. He told one of his guards that he thought it would be three or four days. Officers at the Federal Building said they could not tell.

Status of Case

It was pointed out that Dr. Muck is now held as an enemy alien, subject to orders from Washington, and without any privilege of trial. If the papers seized at his house reveal incriminating information he may be charged with a violation of one or more of the regulations of the espionage act, in which event he would be arraigned in court for a trial. No information on this point was forthcoming to-night, but officials did say that no further arrests were expected before to-morrow.

AMERICAN

New York City

MAR 27 1918

DR. MUCK PUT IN CELL AFTER QUIZ

Mrs. William Jay Says She Has Written Testimony Against Symphony Conductor.

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged to-night in a cell in East Cambridge jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice.

It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to maintain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed some nervousness. When asked to pose for a photograph, he said:

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life. I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Federal agents said the Government had ruled that anyone living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed, Federal agents said that he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Mrs. William Jay, who, since last November, has vigorously protested the public appearances of Dr. Muck, yesterday said:

"I have every reason to believe that, through information given to me, the authorities have intercepted correspondence at Bridgeport, Conn. A series of letters in German have been found. When I protested the recent appearance of Dr. Muck at the concert given in Carnegie Hall this month, Mrs. John Nagel, wife of a 'cellist in the Boston Orchestra, who is now living at No. 7 Macon Street, Brooklyn, told me she would give certain written testimony the night Dr. Muck played in New York. This she did. The testimony was given to me and to a representative of the United States Government. On the night of March [illegible] former associate of Dr. Muck [illegible]d to give verbal and written [illegible]mony. This testimony is now [illegible] the hands of the authori[illegible]

[illegible]elieve the arrest of Dr. Muck [illegible] beginning of a revelation of [illegible]anda in very high places. [illegible]am, many people believe, was [illegible]nerstone of a real and dan[illegible] country-wide sentiment [illegible] for the enemy in this [illegible]

PUBLIC LEDGER

Philadelphia, Pa.

MAR 27 1918

MUCK GOES TO JAIL AFTER DAY IN "PEN"

Held With "Bootleggers" and Slackers While Another Leads Orchestra

HIS LETTERS SEIZED

Correspondence May Result in Arrest of Well-Known Boston People

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

Boston, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, friend of Count von Bernstorff and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was committed to the East Cambridge jail late this afternoon, while Ernest Schmidt, alleged to be a strong pro-German, led the orchestra in a concert at Symphony Hall. Before Muck departed from the Federal Building he learned that agents of the Department of Justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him, and that a seizure of his correspondence and papers was made.

It was reported at the Federal Building tonight that Government agents found papers that would cause other arrests and that one of those implicated was one of the best-known persons in Boston.

Muck was held all day at the Federal Building in "the pen" with several "bootleggers" and draft evaders. He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Federal attorneys. Probably he will be arraigned on a charge of violating some section of the espionage act.

Federal agents said that the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in Germany and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Doctor Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said. Doctor Muck did not register as an enemy alien.

New York, March 26.—Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he was a naturalized citizen of Switzerland was correct. The minister said that no representations had been made to him by Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that unless the conductor sought the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter. If he was asked to intervene, the minister added, he would proceed as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

MAR 27 1918

SEARCH MUCK'S HOME IN BOSTON

U. S. Agents Refuse to Discuss Arrest of Orchestra Leader.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent to-day in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized in his home.

Officials declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the case have been received.

It was said a close friend of the doctor's was being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to avoid jail on the ground he was Swiss, but friends said counsel had been engaged for him.

Hans Sulzer, Swiss minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Ship Launched 62 Days

SUN

Baltimore, Md.

Famous Musician In Cell

DR. KARL MUCK

Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is under arrest in that city and may be interned as an enemy alien.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

DR. MUCK'S ARREST.

THE Department of Justice no doubt has sound and sufficient reasons for the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—reasons which the public is prepared either to accept or to assume, according as the Federal Government does or does not give them out.

The arrest is a distinct surprise, the more so that during recent agitation directed against Dr. Muck the Federal authorities were understood to declare that they had no fault to find with his standing or conduct.

By far the most regrettable feature of the case is the position in which it places Major Henry L. Higginson, who has for years supported this famous musical organization, who has sturdily defended Dr. Muck through attacks led by persons possessing no real evidence upon which to base their hostility, and whose personal loyalty and Americanism are of the soundest.

Dr. Muck may be a dangerous alien enemy who ought to be interned for the duration of the war. But it is certainly neither his devotion to the music of Beethoven and Wagner nor the zeal of those who condemned him therefor that has now proved him a menace.

Gazzetta del Massachusetts

Italian Weekly Newspaper - Published Every Saturday

JAMES V. DONNARUMA.....Editor and Publisher
141 Richmond Street (Telephone Richmond 2457) Boston, Mass.

New York Representatives. American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Woolworth Building.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston as second-class mail matter. Subscription prices: One year $1.00. Foreign $2.50. Advertising Rates on Application

YEAR 22 — No. 13 ESTABLISHED 1896

SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1918.

OUR POLICY: To help preserve the ideals and sacred traditions of this, our adopted country, the United States of America: To revere its laws and inspire others to respect and obey them: To strive unceasingly to quicken the public's sense of civic duty: In all ways to aid in making this country greater and better than we found it.

IL DR. KARL MUCK.

Finalmente s'è agito. L'idolo è atterrato, a dispetto di tutti i manutengoli che gli tenevano bordone. L'arresto del famoso e famigerato Dr. Karl Muck, l'insuperabile, l'unico al mondo, il divino direttore dei concerti della Kulturata Symphony Orchestra, se commosse i precordi del banchiere e Maggiore Higginson, del premuroso Manager Ellis, dell'eccentrica Mrs. "Jack" Gardner e di qualche isterica dama del Back Bay, ha trovato il pieno plauso della gran maggioranza di Boston e della nazione. Il maestro "prestato dal Kaiser" giace ora in una cella comune d'East Cambridge non per l'incidente del rifiuto a suonare l'inno americano, non perchè è uno straniero nemico, ma perchè seri indizi di slealtà e spionaggio gravano sul suo capo. Non tutti gli "stranieri nemici" vengono arrestati, ma solamente quelli su cui v'è prova abbastanza da poter autorizzarne la detenzione. Pochi giorni prima dell'arresto, il Dr. Muck delegò un suo segretario particolare a cacciare per sè e la moglie due passaporti per l'Europa. Sospettava egli forse che le sue segrete attività pro-prussiane erano per venire a conoscenza dell'autorità federale? Certo si è che la polizia americana non avrebbe mai dato questo passo se non aveva in mano il bandolo della matassa.

E speriamo che finisca una volta per sempre l'anomalia ributtante d'un tedesco, che si serve d'una esagerata riputazione artistica per far passare i suoi sentimenti kaiserofili. In Germania non avrebbero mai permesso che un inglese o un americano, per quanto illustre, fosse ricolmo di onori e danari senza ch'egli si fosse espresso più d'una sola volta a favore della nazione ospitale. Figuriamoci se sul suo conto si fosse potuto dire quel po' di roba, che grava sul capo del Dr. Muck. L'avrebbero impiccato.

Con un nemico, pel quale le convenzioni internazionali sono dei pezzi di carta, pel quale i trattati di pace non hanno alcun valore e donne e bimbi non meritano alcuna considerazione, è delittuoso il solo pensare a sentimentalismi fuori posto.

Record Apr 5, 1918

MUCK'S SWISS CITIZENSHIP INSUFFICIENT

German Denizen Is Main Claim

Disposition of Case Will Be Made Within Few Days

WASHINGTON—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss Legation.

A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation, the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland, while Dr. Muck was a minor would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

Transcript April 5, 1918

Transcript 4/5/18

DR. MUCK NOT SAVED BY SWISS CITIZENSHIP

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE DECIDES AGAINST FORMER SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA LEADER

Washington, April 5—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The Department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland, while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

Monitor April 5, 1918

DR. MUCK SUBJECT TO IMPRISONMENT

Monitor 4/5/18

WASHINGTON, D. C.—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss Legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the Espionage Law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation, the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland, while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

...RAPH ... PUBLIC LEDGER

Transcript Apr 5, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

A VARIED GRIST FROM RECENT DAYS

The Symphony Orchestra and Miss Allen at Cambridge—Mr. Carpenter's Impending Symphony—Harrying Mr. Stransky—Mr. Stock Composes—New Memories of Auer—Items, Incidents, Impressions

A LIGHT but pleasingly diverse programme was offered to Cambridge last evening by the Symphony Orchestra. Miss Alice Allen with Chopin's more familiar Concerto as her choice, won the hearty applause by which the Cambridgites always attest their fondness for the many pianists befalling them. Mozart's Symphony in E-flat they also enjoyed; to Wallace's Symphonic Poem upon "Villon" they were merely polite. Miss Allen was as nervous as might be expected of one who was measuring a large auditorium and an august orchestra for the first time. Lacking confidence, hers was not a broadly planned performance, neither commanding nor persuasive. Her rhythms and tempi were even and well matched, but the filigree was none too liquid, the melody none too songful. Still, hers was an agreeable performance of agreeable music, with a certain clean precision that was becoming.

To Cambridge, a symphony of Mozart is always welcome. Mr. Schmidt, well accustomed to Dr. Muck's way with it, held the orchestra firmly to the pace. Yet the finest edge of piquancy, tonal clarity, airy fleetness, infinite grace—these qualities were distinctly missing. Wallace's tone-poem is pleasant music, with its impish wood-wind, its singing strings, its light punctuation by varied instruments of percussion. But its humor is perhaps too mild and innocuous for Villon. Villon could scandalize people in his own day, let alone ours. If Wallace was ever reckless, it was not in his music. Debussy was by nature far enough removed from Villon, but he was a Parisian, and that at once is common ground for sympathy. Whether or not this explains the fact, Debussy's ballads to verses of Villon are in far closer touch with the vagabond-poet than is the Scotsman's tone-poem. Still, Villon remains a fruitful subject for music, and open to many versions. Strauss to whom Wallace owed much, might have done striking things with it himself.

Here in Boston

Mr. John Alden Carpenter's first symphony, originally heard at the music-festival in Norfolk last June and repeated by Mr. Stock and the Chicago Orchestra last October, is now in rehearsal for performance in Boston at the Symphony Concerts of April 19 and 20. The piece is remarkable for individuality of imagination and richness of harmonic and instrumental coloring. On the other hand, the projected performance of a symphony by Mr. Daniel Gregory Mason has been abandoned for the time, since various circumstances made thorough preparation impossible.

The concert of the Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, April 14, for the increase of its Pension Fund, will be a miscellaneous entertainment with Mr. Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, and Miss Braslau, the notable young singer of the Metropolitan Opera House, assisting the band. He will play a concerto by Mozart and Weber's seldom revived "Concert-Piece"; she will be heard in an operatic air and songs; while among the orchestral numbers are the suite of dances from Chaikovsky's ballet, "The Nut-Cracker" and Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre." Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

Apropos the visit of the Metropolitan Company to Boston, the Public Library announces two "Opera-Talks," open to the public without fee, by Mr. Henry Gideon—one about Meyerbeer's "Prophet" on Sunday afternoon, April 14, at 3.30; the other about Leoni's "Oracle" on Sunday afternoon, April 21, at the same hour.

Transcript April 6, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Transcript 4/6

Novel Pieces for the Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Novaes Assisting — Comes Auer, the Master of Violinists—Mme. Matzenauer in Ancient Airs and Modern Songs—Minor Recitals

TWO unfamiliar pieces stand on the programme set by Mr. Schmidt for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. One is a curious symphony, long unrevived, by the Dittersdorf whom not a few amateurs and connoisseurs of music toward the end of the eighteenth century regarded as the equal of Mozart, if not his superior. Yet now Dittersdorf's name, whatever his skill, is almost as unknown as those which Mr. Bauer assembled last year in his list of forgotten composers for the piano, "celebrated in their time." The other novel number is Grieg's Suite for strings, "In Holberg's Time," characteristic resettings of music from the days in the eighteenth century when Holberg, the playwright, passed as a sort of Scandinavian Molière. Two other numbers complete the list: Smetana's songful and pictorial tone-poem, "The Moldau," of the flow and landscape of the chief river of Bohemia, and Chopin's Concerto for piano in F minor in which Miss Novaes will play the solo part. Already she stands in the first rank of the younger pianists; while her playing here at a Sunday concert a few weeks ago, proved her right to such place. In all that she does she is instinct with musical insight, taste, poise.

DR. MUCK IS ORDERED INTERNED

Advertiser April 6, 1918

416

Will Be Held in Confinement for Duration of the War

TO BE PLACED IN CUSTODY OF ARMY

Officials Refuse to Say Whether He Has Been Told of Fate

Dr. Karl Muck, former conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and held at the East Cambridge Jail as an enemy alien was ordered interned for the duration of the war, by the Washington authorities, late yesterday.

The local officials of the United States District Attorney's office received the orders last night, but would not make any statement regarding the procedure that will be taken to intern Dr. Muck, although it is presumed that he will follow through the regular routine and be taken to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where Karl Oskar Bertling of Lexington was sent Thursday.

Dr. Muck, during his two weeks' confinement at the East Cambridge Jail, has been confident that he would ultimately be released, it was said by those at the jail, who have had occasion to talk with him.

TAKES ARREST KEENLY.

He has not been very talkative, although when he has been before the Department of Justice officials, during the last few days for questioning as to his acts, he has appeared in good spirits. Friends of his, however, who have called upon him at the jail, and these have been few, say that he is considerably broken in spirit and takes his arrest keenly.

Department of Justice officials last night would not say whether Dr. Muck had been informed of the orders that will probably send him into confinement in the South. Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey, who has been handling the Muck case and was instrumental in bringing about his arrest, would make no statement other than admit that the internment orders had been received.

Washington despatches last night stated that while Dr. Muck has been held for two weeks on a Presidential warrant, the Department of Justice has been busily engaged in going over the reports of secret agents who have been following the musician's movements for several years, since he received the permission of Emperor William to remain in this country.

CLAIMS OVER-RULED.

These same despatches stated that the Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were over-ruled under the espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

The internment order was signed in spite of the fact that Dr. Muck held that he was a Swiss citizen and this claim was supported by the Swiss legation. The order states that he will be turned over to the military authorities and they will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

Record April, 1918

At the Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, Sunday, April 14, the soloists will be Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist.

DR. MUCK ORDERED INTERNED

Held to Be "Denizen" of an Enemy Country.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war, was ordered today by the Department of Justice. Dr. Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

Continued on Page 4—First Column

CONSIDERED DANGEROUS

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close association in the past with state leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.

His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr. Muck was arrested about two weeks ago and held on a presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents who have followed the former orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permission from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest he resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

Transcript 416

ASKS WHY MUCK IS INTERNED

WASHINGTON, April 6—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer, today inquired of the state department the American government's reasons for interning Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

Muck's Picture in Enemy Gallery

Dr. Karl Muck, former Boston Symphony orchestra leader, his photograph now one of the large collection in the government's gallery of alien enemies, is to be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., to be interned. The first step toward the trip was taken today, when he was removed from the East Cambridge jail to the federal building to be photographed.

The order to transfer him from the jail to the Georgia fort came from Washington. Although the federal and jail officials admit the order for his removal has been received and the trip will be started soon, they refuse to divulge the exact time.

Gazzetta del Massachusetts

Italian Weekly Newspaper - Published Every Saturday

JAMES V. DONNARUMA.....Editor and Publisher
141 Richmond Street (Telephone Richmond 2457) Boston, Mass.

New York Representatives. American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Woolworth Building.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston as second-class mail matter. Subscription prices: One year $1.00. Foreign $2.50. Advertising Rates on Application

YEAR 22 — No. 13 ESTABLISHED 1896

SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1918.

OUR POLICY: To help preserve the ideals and sacred traditions of this, our adopted country, the United States of America: To revere its laws and inspire others to respect and obey them: To strive unceasingly to quicken the public's sense of civic duty: In all ways to aid in making this country greater and better than we found it.

IL DR. KARL MUCK.

Finalmente s'è agito. L'idolo è atterrato, a dispetto di tutti i manutengoli che gli tenevano bordone. L'arresto del famoso e famigerato Dr. Karl Muck, l'insuperabile, l'unico al mondo, il divino direttore dei concerti della Kulturata Symphony Orchestra, se commosse i precordi del banchiere e Maggiore Higginson, del premuroso Manager Ellis, dell'eccentrica Mrs. "Jack" Gardner e di qualche isterica dama del Back Bay, ha trovato il pieno plauso della gran maggioranza di Boston e della nazione. Il maestro "prestato dal Kaiser" giace ora in una cella comune d'East Cambridge non per l'incidente del rifiuto a suonare l'inno americano, non perchè è uno straniero nemico, ma perchè seri indizi di slealtà e spionaggio gravano sul suo capo. Non tutti gli "stranieri nemici" vengono arrestati, ma solamente quelli su cui v'è prova abbastanza da poter autorizzarne la detenzione. Pochi giorni prima dell'arresto, il Dr. Muck delegò un suo segretario particolare a cacciare per sè e la moglie due passaporti per l'Europa. Sospettava egli forse che le sue segrete attività pro-prussiane erano per venire a conoscenza dell'autorità federale? Certo si è che la polizia americana non avrebbe mai dato questo passo se non aveva in mano il bandolo della matassa.

E speriamo che finisca una volta per sempre l'anomalia ributtante d'un tedesco, che si serve d'una esagerata riputazione artistica per far passare i suoi sentimenti kaiserofili. In Germania non avrebbero mai permesso che un inglese o un americano, per quanto illustre, fosse ricolmo di onori e danari senza ch'egli si fosse espresso più d'una sola volta a favore della nazione ospitale. Figuriamoci se sul suo conto si fosse potuto dire quel po' di roba, che grava sul capo del Dr. Muck. L'avrebbero impiccato.

Con un nemico, pel quale le convenzioni internazionali sono dei pezzi di carta, pel quale i trattati di pace non hanno alcun valore e donne e bimbi non meritano alcuna considerazione, è delittuoso il solo pensare a sentimentalismi fuori posto.

Record Apr 5, 1918

MUCK'S SWISS CITIZENSHIP INSUFFICIENT

German Denizen Is Main Claim

Disposition of Case Will Be Made Within Few Days

WASHINGTON—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss Legation.

A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation, the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland, while Dr. Muck was a minor would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

Transcript April 5, 1918

DR. MUCK NOT SAVED BY SWISS CITIZENSHIP

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE DECIDES AGAINST FORMER SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA LEADER

Washington, April 5—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The Department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland, while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

Monitor April 5, 1918

DR. MUCK SUBJECT TO IMPRISONMENT

Monitor 4/5/18

WASHINGTON, D. C.—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss Legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the Espionage Law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation, the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland, while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

Transcript Apr 5, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

A VARIED GRIST FROM RECENT DAYS

The Symphony Orchestra and Miss Allen at Cambridge—Mr. Carpenter's Impending Symphony—Harrying Mr. Stransky—Mr. Stock Composes—New Memories of Auer—Items, Incidents, Impressions

A LIGHT but pleasingly diverse programme was offered to Cambridge last evening by the Symphony Orchestra. Miss Alice Allen with Chopin's more familiar Concerto as her choice, won the hearty applause by which the Cambridgites always attest their fondness for the many pianists befalling them. Mozart's Symphony in E-flat they also enjoyed; to Wallace's Symphonic Poem upon "Villon" they were merely polite. Miss Allen was as nervous as might be expected of one who was measuring a large auditorium and an august orchestra for the first time. Lacking confidence, hers was not a broadly planned performance, neither commanding nor persuasive. Her rhythms and tempi were even and well matched, but the filigree was none too liquid, the melody none too songful. Still, hers was an agreeable performance of agreeable music, with a certain clean precision that was becoming.

To Cambridge, a symphony of Mozart is always welcome. Mr. Schmidt, well accustomed to Dr. Muck's way with it, held the orchestra firmly to the pace. Yet the finest edge of piquancy, tonal clarity, airy fleetness, infinite grace—these qualities were distinctly missing. Wallace's tone-poem is pleasant music, with its impish wood-wind, its singing strings, its light punctuation by varied instruments of percussion. But its humor is perhaps too mild and innocuous for Villon. Villon could scandalize people in his own day, let alone ours. If Wallace was ever reckless, it was not in his music. Debussy was by nature far enough removed from Villon, but he was a Parisian, and that at once is common ground for sympathy. Whether or not this explains the fact, Debussy's ballads to verses of Villon are in far closer touch with the vagabond-poet than is the Scotsman's tone-poem. Still, Villon remains a fruitful subject for music, and open to many versions. Strauss to whom Wallace owed much, might have done striking things with it himself.

Here in Boston

Mr. John Alden Carpenter's first symphony, originally heard at the music-festival in Norfolk last June and repeated by Mr. Stock and the Chicago Orchestra last October, is now in rehearsal for performance in Boston at the Symphony Concerts of April 19 and 20. The piece is remarkable for individuality of imagination and richness of harmonic and instrumental coloring. On the other hand, the projected performance of a symphony by Mr. Daniel Gregory Mason has been abandoned for the time, since various circumstances made thorough preparation impossible.

The concert of the Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, April 14, for the increase of its Pension Fund, will be a miscellaneous entertainment with Mr. Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, and Miss Braslau, the notable young singer of the Metropolitan Opera House, assisting the band. He will play a concerto by Mozart and Weber's seldom revived "Concert-Piece"; she will be heard in an operatic air and songs; while among the orchestral numbers are the suite of dances from Chaikovsky's ballet, "The Nut-Cracker" and Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre." Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

Apropos the visit of the Metropolitan Company to Boston, the Public Library announces two "Opera-Talks," open to the public without fee, by Mr. Henry Gideon—one about Meyerbeer's "Prophet" on Sunday afternoon, April 14, at 3.30; the other about Leoni's "Oracle" on Sunday afternoon, April 21, at the same hour.

Transcript April 6, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Transcript 4/6

Novel Pieces for the Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Novaes Assisting — Comes Auer, the Master of Violinists—Mme. Matzenauer in Ancient Airs and Modern Songs—Minor Recitals

TWO unfamiliar pieces stand on the programme set by Mr. Schmidt for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. One is a curious symphony, long unrevived, by the Dittersdorf whom not a few amateurs and connoisseurs of music toward the end of the eighteenth century regarded as the equal of Mozart, if not his superior. Yet now Dittersdorf's name, whatever his skill, is almost as unknown as those which Mr. Bauer assembled last year in his list of forgotten composers for the piano, "celebrated in their time." The other novel number is Grieg's Suite for strings, "In Holberg's Time," characteristic resettings of music from the days in the eighteenth century when Holberg, the playwright, passed as a sort of Scandinavian Molière. Two other numbers complete the list: Smetana's songful and pictorial tone-poem, "The Moldau," of the flow and landscape of the chief river of Bohemia, and Chopin's Concerto for piano in F minor in which Miss Novaes will play the solo part. Already she stands in the first rank of the younger pianists; while her playing here at a Sunday concert a few weeks ago, proved her right to such place. In all that she does she is instinct with musical insight, taste, poise.

PUBLIC LEDGER

Advertiser April 6, 1918

DR. MUCK IS ORDERED INTERNED

Will Be Held in Confinement for Duration of the War

TO BE PLACED IN CUSTODY OF ARMY

Officials Refuse to Say Whether He Has Been Told of Fate

Dr. Karl Muck, former conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, and held at the East Cambridge Jail as an enemy alien was ordered interned for the duration of the war, by the Washington authorities, late yesterday.

The local officials of the United States District Attorney's office received the orders last night, but would not make any statement regarding the procedure that will be taken to intern Dr. Muck, although it is presumed that he will follow through the regular routine and be taken to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where Karl Oskar Bertling of Lexington was sent Thursday.

Dr. Muck, during his two weeks' confinement at the East Cambridge Jail, has been confident that he would ultimately be released, it was said by those at the jail, who have had occasion to talk with him.

TAKES ARREST KEENLY.

He has not been very talkative, although when he has been before the Department of Justice officials, during the last few days for questioning as to his acts, he has appeared in good spirits. Friends of his, however, who have called upon him at the jail, and these have been few, say that he is considerably broken in spirit and takes his arrest keenly.

Department of Justice officials last night would not say whether Dr. Muck had been informed of the orders that will probably send him into confinement in the South. Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey, who has been handling the Muck case and was instrumental in bringing about his arrest, would make no statement other than admit that the internment orders had been received.

Washington despatches last night stated that while Dr. Muck has been held for two weeks on a Presidential warrant, the Department of Justice has been busily engaged in going over the reports of secret agents who have been following the musician's movements for several years, since he received the permission of Emperor William to remain in this country.

CLAIMS OVER-RULED.

These same despatches stated that the Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were over-ruled under the espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

The internment order was signed in spite of the fact that Dr. Muck held that he was a Swiss citizen and this claim was supported by the Swiss legation. The order states that he will be turned over to the military authorities and they will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

Record April 6, 1918

At the Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, Sunday, April 14, the soloists will be Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist.

DR. MUCK ORDERED INTERNED

Held to Be "Denizen" of an Enemy Country.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war, was ordered today by the Department of Justice. Dr. Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

Continued on Page 4—First Column

CONSIDERED DANGEROUS

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close association in the past with state leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.

His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr. Muck was arrested about two weeks ago and held on a presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents who have followed the former orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permission from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest he resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

Sunday Tel 4/6

ASKS WHY MUCK IS INTERNED

WASHINGTON, April 6—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer, today inquired of the state department the American government's reasons for interning Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

Muck's Picture in Enemy Gallery

Dr. Karl Muck, former Boston Symphony orchestra leader, his photograph now one of the large collection in the government's gallery of alien enemies, is to be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., to be interned. The first step toward the trip was taken today, when he was removed from the East Cambridge jail to the federal building to be photographed.

The order to transfer him from the jail to the Georgia fort came from Washington. Although the federal and jail officials admit the order for his removal has been received and the trip will be started soon, they refuse to divulge the exact time.

Herald Apr 6, 1918

Herald 4/6

SYMPHONY PAYS DEBUSSY HONOR

Late Composer Pointed the Way to a Host of Later Writers

OTHER SELECTIONS PLEASE AUDIENCE

By PHILIP HALE

The 20th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Schmidt conducted. The program was as follows: Dvorak's "New World" Symphony; Debussy, Nocturne No. 1, "Clouds"; Charpentier, Impressions of Italy.

"Clouds" was played in memory of Claude Debussy, who died on March 26. A few years ago it was whispered that he was suffering from cancer. It was recently announced that a sojourn in the south had bettered his condition.

In Chicago the orchestra played the first two Nocturnes in his memory. It is a question which one of his orchestral compositions would best illustrate his peculiar genius in a memorial service. There are some who say his indisputable genius shines brightest in his symphonic sketches, "The Sea." Would not "The Afternoon of a Faun" or "Iberia" be a fuller revelation? To us it seems that by these two compositions, the string quartet, some of the songs and piano pieces, "Pelleas and Melisande" he will be known by the generations to come. For Debussy's place among the immortals is assured. He was an innovator—there have been few in the history of music—not merely an accomplished developer. William Wallace in a remarkable book maintains that we are only on the threshold of the temple where the Muse is enthroned. There she waits patiently for her priests and worshippers. Debussy gave to musicians the keys to new chapels in this temple. For music lovers he broadened the horizon. His speech at first was strange to many. He suffered the fate of innovators; he was ridiculed, he was called a charlatan, a poseur—what was he not called? It was even said that he had no sense of form. He could afford to smile and pursue his own path.

He has suffered, too, from imitators, suffered in this respect with Wagner and Richard Strauss. Young composers, forgetting that Debussy triumphed in the Paris Conservatory, where the strictest forms of composition are inexorably taught, having themselves little technical equipment, have produced rapid, chaotic works. On the other hand, he has influenced the mighty of his generation. The French, the Italians, even certain Germans and Englishmen, write now far otherwise than they would if Debussy had not shown the way.

When the Nocturnes were first performed here, 14 years ago, they seemed mad babbling to the majority of the hearers, nor did the repetition in the same concert led by Mr. Lang change opinion. It is true that the two performances were not such as to reveal beauty. Nor is Mr. Schmidt the man to serve as Debussy's interpreter. But yesterday the music itself no longer seemed strange, perplexingly exotic.

Dvorak's melodious and strongly rhythmed symphony and the brilliant music of Charpentier pleased the audience.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Dittersdorf, Symphony in C; Chopin, Concerto in F minor, No. 2 (Guiomar Novaes, pianist); Grieg, "From Holberg's Time," suite for strings; Smetana, symphonic poem, "The Moldau."

Post Apr 6, 1918

FAMILIAR MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Dvorak's 'New World' Again Enjoyed by Audience

BY OLIN DOWNES

Dvorak's "New World" symphony; the movement, "Nuages," from Debussy's Nocturnes for Orchestra, and Charpentier's charming pieces, "Impressions d'Italie" made the programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

DVORAK'S EXUBERANCE

It was a programme for the greater part, of familiar and delightful music. Dvorak's symphony keeps its freshness and naivette, and the exquisite poetry of the slow movement. The American or near-American tunes employed, including the fragment of "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," are pleasing in themselves, and happily employed, but what makes the symphony fascinating is not the origin of its themes or anything else than the simple soul and the exuberant musical genius of Antonin Dvorak.

But the music of Debussy, who died last week—that, indeed, is music of incredible wonder. He surely never surpassed the poetry and originality of the early Nocturnes "Nuages". The unchangeable appearance of the sky, with the slow and solemn march of clouds dissolving in a gray agony tinted with white." The suggestion of distance, of silence, of mysterious depths of sky is something which only Debussy could have achieved. Every note of the piece is a stroke of genius.

Charpentier is another kind of artist, who finds delight in the scenes about him, who loves humanity and nature in the raw, who eagerly transcribes to his music paper that which he sees and hears. Melodious, piquant, full of color, vulgar, at times, with a natural and human vulgarity, this music fairly smells of the earth, and good, brown earth it is. The audience was much pleased with the programme and applauded warmly the conductor and orchestra.

Globe Apr 6, 1918

DR MUCK INTERNED

To Be Held Till War Ends

Goes to Oglethorpe Camp Today

WASHINGTON, April 5 — Internment of Dr Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war, was ordered today by the Department of Justice.

Dr Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.

His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr Muck was arrested about two weeks ago and held on a Presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents, who have followed the ex-orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permission from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest his resignation as leader of the orchestra has been accepted.

Herald April 6, 1918

Herald 4/6

DR. MUCK TO BE INTERNED TODAY

Government Holds Former Boston Symphony Leader Is Enemy Alien

TO BE IMPRISONED AT FT. OGLETHORPE

Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was arrested in Boston two weeks ago as an alien enemy, is to be interned immediately at Ft. Oglethorpe, Georgia, for the period of the war. Word to this effect was received from Washington last evening by United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, and it is probable the famous musician will be taken south today.

Dr. Muck was taken into custody on direction of U. S. Atty. Thomas J. Boynton, with Asst. U. S. Atty. Judd Dewey directly in charge of the case. The department of justice has since conducted an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of alleged pro-German sympathies and utterances, and his associations in the past with state leaders in Germany, and decided yesterday that it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.

Held to Be "Denizen" of Germany

The prisoner's claims of Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss legation, have been overruled. The department of justice holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation, the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland, while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

The arrest was made on a presidential warrant, and Dr. Muck has been held at the East Cambridge jail while the department of justice reviewed reports of secret service agents who have followed the former orchestra leader's movements for several years, since he obtained special permission from Emperor William to remain in this country. He resigned leadership of the orchestra following his arrest.

(Continued on Page Two, Column 5.)

(Continued from Page One.)

Advertiser Apr 6, 1918

80

SYMPHONY CONCERT IS MADE A SUCCESS

4/6

Entirely an Orchestral Program and Is Particularly Pleasing to the Audience

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Dvorak. "From the New World" Symphony.
Debussy. "Nuages." (In Memoriam.)
Charpentier. "Impressions of Italy" Suite.

Entirely orchestral, and without a Teutonic number. Such a list as at yesterday's Symphony concert at Symphony Hall puts a German conductor at a disadvantage, and the excellent reading of last week, in the Schumann Symphony, was scarcely attained. Nevertheless the American Symphony was finely interpreted, and made a success. Particularly praiseworthy was the English horn "obbligato" in the slow movement.

And this slow movement is the gem of the work, and goes deeper than the mere raythmic effect of plantation music. It gives that sweet and tender melancholy which finds its voice in some of the religious music of the Afro-Americans, a real folk-music if ever there was one, and a school of music which we can safely call "American," for the negro would never have evolved it in Africa; it is the outcome of American circumstances and surroundings.

It would be unfair, however, to give Dvorak the entire credit of developing this school. Long before he came to the United States Mr. Chadwick had introduced the music of the plantation into symphony. But it required a foreigner to awaken us to the worth of such folk-melodies in classical forms, although one can here occasionally discover a Bohemian in the American wood-pile. Mr. Schmidt was twice recalled at the end of the works and the orchestra was obliged to rise to acknowledge the applause.

DEBUSSY COMPOSITION.

It was appropriate, probably even necessary, to introduce a Debussy composition into the program to commemorate the death of one of the most important figures of present-day music. Debussy is most opportune as a protest against the grossness and the over-swollen style of Richard Strauss; he teaches a lesson also to those ultra-moderns who cannot create even a Sinfonietta without using up an hour, and an orchestra of the size of a small army.

"Nuages" ("Clouds") was a fairly typical piece to represent the delicate gossamer-web of this composer's work. The clouds were by no means the New England variety, and did not suggest rubbers, waterproofs and umbrellas, but were light and fleecy and etherial, although melancholy. But Debussy demands something more than contrasts of "piano" and "forte," and almost inaudible "pianissimo," and this intangible and elastic quality we sometimes missed. The work is the first of a set of three nocturnes which Dr. Muck has already given us in these concerts.

Charpentier evidently enjoyed himself in Italy. His orchestral suite upon the subject is full of the "joie de vivre," that joy which every northern traveler feels when he first comes under the spell of southern Italy. Yet here we may make an exception: Richard Strauss when he pictured Naples mistook Denza's "Funicoli-Funicola" for a folk-song and proceeded to contrapuntalize it until no Neapolitan would have recognized his favorite ditty, a mingling of sauer-kraut and macaroni that was neither graphic nor artistic.

BOLD AND NOVEL.

Charpentier is bold and novel in the highest degree. He begins with a long melody entirely unison (violins chiefly), then the harps, picking their strings near the edge, give a mandoline effect, carrying on the serenade impression, and then a Cantilena on the viola that is essentially Italian. This last was beautifully played by Mr. Ferir; only in Berlioz's "Childe Harold" has the viola such a striking role in symphony.

The oboe did most excellent work in the second movement—"At the Fountain"—a picture rather of charm and dignity than merely the rippling of waters. One could fancy the lithe maidens coming and going with their water jars. Then a picture of the muleteers driving their beasts, and a pretty little love-song, in simple thirds, excellently given by two flutes. Bird Carols and distant chimes blended in the gladsome sketch of "On the Heights of Sor-

Record Apr 6, 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the 20th Friday afternoon concert, again with Mr Schmidt conducting. Maj Higginson is fortunate in having within the ranks so able a man to call to the stand. It is such a time that reveals ability, its making or its lack.

Dvorak's "From the New World" symphony, Debussy's Nocturne No. 1, "Clouds," and Charpentier's suite, "Impressions of Italy," are works of sufficient divergence of school and style to test a conductor. While details could be found calling for greater polish, a finer nuance, lines asking greater breadth; while it is not conducting not to name as distinctive, there was character in what was played. There was the spirit of Dvorak in its child-like naivette and in that restive, tumultuous sweep which allies him with the Hungarian. The Debussy had atmosphere, and much tonal beauty if it also showed outlines at times too definite, music the more impressionistic vein of the late genius whom words fail to praise.

"The Impressions of Italy" reasonably were those of the ardent young prix de Rome whose imagination glowed in colors. The somber, passionate song of serenaders as 'cellists, now smouldering, now flaming, was finely phrased. Mr Ferir's repetition of the theme played off stage was characteristic of the supreme beauty of his tone and style. "At the Fountain" and "On Muleback," both pictorial in images, show by a comparison a sophomoric rhetoric in "The Summits." The brilliant closing in "Naples" was done with dash and color.

Mr Schmidt is meeting an emergency with a commendable manner and highly praiseworthy skill. His conducting during the days when he was called upon to substitute in the indisposition of his chief has not had the authority it had yesterday, and the spirited response from the men is now a thing to be remarked.

Next week the program will be: Dittersdorf, symphony in C; Chopin, 2d concerto (Miss Novaes, soloist); Grieg, suite for strings "From Holberg's Time"; Smetana, Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau."

Globe Apr 7, 1918

DR MUCK ON WAY TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Dr Karl Muck started on his way to Fort Oglethorpe last evening in the custody of Deputy United States Marshal Arthur Shinners and F. W. Nickerson of the Postoffice Department. The party left aboard the Washington express.

Record Apr 6, 1918

DR. MUCK GOES TO INTERNMENT DURING WAR

WASHINGTON.—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer, today inquired of the State Department the American government's reasons for interning of Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

WASHINGTON. — Internment of Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war has been ordered by the Department of Justice.

Dr. Karl Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.

His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr. Muck was arrested about two weeks ago and held on a Presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents, who have followed the ex-orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permission from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest his resignation as leader of the orchestra has been accepted.

Post Apr 7, 1918

The Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes will be soloist at the 25th pair of Symphony concerts, which will be given next Friday afternoon, April 12, and Saturday evening, April 13. This will be Miss Novaes' first appearance with the Symphony Orchestra in Boston. She has already created a considerable public here who will listen to her with much interest. Miss Novaes will play Chopin's Second Concerto in F-Minor

The symphony will be the little-known one in C-Major, by Dittersdorf, the one-time rival of Mozart. Another work that has not been heard for many years at the Symphony concerts is Grieg's Suite for Strings; "In Holberg's Time." The final number will be Smetana's impressive Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau." Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 14, in aid of the Pension Fund of the Symphony Orchestra. Every effort is being exerted to make this one of the most interesting concerts of the season, and for soloists there will be Miss Sophie Braslau, the distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist. Mr. Gabrilowitsch was delighted with the idea of playing at this concert, and it was suggested that he play the two pieces with which he had such extraordinary success with the Orchestra just three years ago, Mozart's Concerto for Piano in D-Minor and Weber's Concert-Piece for Piano and Orchestra. He readily consented to this.

Miss Braslau's numbers have not yet been received, but the full programme will be published within a day or two. The orchestral programme will probably include the "Nut-Cracker" Suite of Tschaikowsky and the Danse Macabre of Saint-Saens. Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

MAR 27

Date

MUCK STILL HELD IN BOSTON JAIL

After Being Questioned by Department of Justice Officials, Conductor Talks of "Biggest Predicament."

BOSTON, March 26.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged to-night in the East Cambridge Jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice.

It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached, and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days.

It was not deemed necessary to keep Dr. Muck in the prisoner's cage in the Marshal's office prior to his examination, although when he first arrived the iron door of the cage clanked behind him. It was opened after a short time, however.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Assistant District Attorney Dewey gave orders that Dr. Muck was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck.

The Prosecutor and Justice Department agents who talked with Dr. Muck said he was fully acquainted with the Presidential act under which he was held. He claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien. The fact that his father moved to Switzerland when his son was eight years old did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician, Federal agents said he had been informed he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other papers seized at the Muck apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again examined.

A representative of Major. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail. The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered his master effort in America—the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. In his absence the opening performance here to-day was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor.

Attorney General Has Report on Which Muck May Be Interned.

(Special to The World.)

WASHINGTON, March 26.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck, who was arrested as an alien enemy at Boston yesterday, will be interned for the period of the war will depend upon the contents of a report received at the Department of Justice to-day from Federal officials in the Massachusetts capital. The report was placed before Assistant Attorney General O'Brian, in charge of violations of war measures, who said to-night he had not had an opportunity to examine the document and would make no announcement on the case.

If the facts, however, warrant, the orchestra leader will be ordered interned.

NEW YORK HERALD

Address New York City

MAR 27 1918

MUCK IN JAIL AS ANOTHER WIELDS ORCHESTRA BATON

Herr Direktor Protests Being Locked in Cage at Marshal's Office.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Tuesday.—Doktor Karl Muck Koenigliche Pruessiche General Musik Direktor, favorite of the Kaiser and in this country the Herr Direktor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by special permission of the Kaiser, was committed to the East Cambridge Jail to-night, to remain there until the government officials in Washington determine what disposition will be made of his case.

The orchestra gave two concerts here, one in the afternoon and one to-night. Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder and guarantor of the orchestra, and others appealed to Thomas J. Boynton, United States Attorney, to excuse Dr. Muck, so he could lead the orchestra, but Mr. Boynton said that would be impossible, and the orchestra was conducted by Ernest Schmidt. There are twenty-three German subjects in the orchestra.

Termed as Propaganda.

Those who have been urging the government to intern Doktor Muck as a dangerous enemy alien have contended that his leadership of the orchestra is a part of German propaganda calculated to disseminate Prussian kultur through the United States.

When Doktor Muck was arrested in his home late Monday night government detectives seized a large quantity of letters and other papers. They are being closely examined to-day.

Government agents have been investigating Doktor Muck for several weeks, it developed. After spending the night in the Back Bay police station, to which he objected, Doktor Muck was taken to the United States Marshal's office this morning and at first he was placed in a prisoners' cage and the gate was locked. He protested, and later Mr. Boynton permitted him to sit outside the cage.

Disappointed at Outlook.

During the many hours Doktor Muck was detained and while secret agents were going over his papers he received callers. He was much disappointed this evening when he was informed that he probably would be interned as a dangerous enemy alien for the remainder of the war.

While government officials here refused to make any statement concerning Doktor Muck's case, it was understood that much of the evidence leading to his arrest came from the little band of patriotic women in New York, led by Mrs. William Jay, who tried to prevent his appearance there as orchestra leader. Documents have been seized in Bridgeport and other cities, it was said, adding to the case.

WIFE OF FOLLOWER FURNISHED CLEWS

New York leaders of the fight against Doktor Karl Muck are convinced that his private papers will reveal important facts concerning German propaganda in this country.

After the announcement of his arrest it became known that Department of Justice operatives here had been investigating charges against Muck for weeks. One of these charges had to do with correspondence said to have been seized in a house in Bridgeport.

Mrs. T. Nagel, wife of a member of the Muck following of enemy aliens in the orchestra, furnished the New York investigators with facts concerning this correspondence. Although nobody connected with the Department of Justice offices here would discuss the contents of these letters it became known that they will serve to substantiate the charges that the director has been supporting the German side of the war and in other ways violating the hospitality of the United States, where he was permitted to draw a salary larger than any he ever was paid in his own country.

"The fight here against enemy aliens who violate the hospitality of the nation shall continue," said Mrs. William Jay, who led the opposition to his appearance here. "Whatever the government may decide to do with Doktor Muck is its own affair, but I can say that there are others of his kind in this country who must be driven out of positions that they can use to harm the nation, and that the fight against them will be carried on until every one of their number has been put where he can do no further harm."

ASSEMBLYMAN DEMANDS

EVENING SUN

New York City

MAR 27 1918

MUCK DECISION LIKELY TO-DAY

Meanwhile Musician Remains Locked in Cell.

SEIZED PAPERS INVESTIGATED

Orchestra, Under Another Leader, Gives Two Concerts.

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was kept in his cell in the East Cambridge jail to-day, pending the receipt of a decision from Washington on his case.

Although agents of the Department of Justice arrested the orchestra leader on their own initiative and without instructions from the capital, their move has brought the matter squarely before the authorities, and action is expected before night.

The fact that Dr. Muck claims he is a Swiss citizen, even though it should be proved, will not of itself compel his release, according to the authorities. He has admitted he was a native of Germany and, regardless of the citizenship that he may have adopted, he will be held if facts in the case warrant his detention.

Taken Back to Jail.

Dr. Muck, who was arrested here on Monday as an enemy alien, was taken to the Cambridge street jail last night after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice. Letters and papers seized at his apartments are being examined by the authorities. His wife still insists that he has done nothing for which he can be held and is certain he will be released within a few hours.

Only Mrs. Muck and the orchestra leader's manager, Charles A. Ellis, have been permitted to see Dr. Muck since he was placed in the cell.

FOLO MUCK walsh

Mrs. William Jay, who has vigorously opposed the public appearance of Dr. Muck in this country for some time, is inclined to believe that his arrest marks the beginning of a series of arrests of persons who have been working for the cause of the enemy in the United States.

Believes Letters Seized.

"I have every reason to believe," she said, "that, through information given to me, the authorities have intercepted correspondence at Bridgeport, Conn. A series of letters in German have been found. When I protested the recent appearance of Dr. Much at the concert given in Carnegie Hall this month, Mrs. John Nagel, wife of a 'cellist in the Boston Orchestra, who is now living at 7 Macon street, Brooklyn, told me she would give certain written testimony the night Dr. Muck played in New York.

"This she did. The testimony was given to me and to a representative of the United States Government. On the night of March 15 a former associate of Dr. Muck agreed to give verbal and written testimony. This testimony is now also in the hands of the authorities.

"I believe the arrest of Dr. Muck is the beginning of a revelation of propaganda in very high places. This man, many people believe was the cornerstone of a real and dangerous country-wide sentiment for the enemy in this country.

BULLETIN

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK SENT TO JAIL

Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Will Be Kept in Custody Indefinitely

(By Associated Press)

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested Monday night as an enemy alien, was locked up in the East Cambridge jail last night after being examined by officials of the Department of Justice.

After the examination of the musician was completed, Federal agents said he had been informed he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other papers seized at Dr. Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected probably before he is again questioned by the Department of Justice officials.

A representative of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the Orchestra, who has defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanism, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail.

The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. In the absence of Dr. Muck, the opening performance yesterday was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor.

It is stated the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor are being investigated and another arrest may follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the Legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

(By Associated Press)

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Carl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States District Attorney at Boston.

Only a preliminary report from the Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today. Comment was withheld.

PUBLIC LEDGER

TRIBUNE

ss: Providence, R. I.

MUCK IN CELL IN JAIL AT CAMBRIDGE

Federal Agents Assert He Will Remain in Custody Indefinitely.

HIS PAPERS SEIZED.

Will be Inspected Before He is Again Questioned by Government Officials.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night as an enemy alien, was lodged to-night in a cell in the East Cambridge jail after he had been questioned at length by officials of the Department of Justice.

It was announced that no decision as to the final disposition of the case was reached and that Dr. Muck would be examined again within a few days. The officials continued to mainttain silence as to the specific reasons for his detention.

For six hours the orchestra conductor was the centre of interest at the Federal building. From mid-forenoon, when he was brought from the Back Bay police station, where he passed the night, until late in the afternoon, when he was taken to jail, hundreds of persons, including many women, walked to and fro in the corridors outside the office of the United States Marshal hoping to catch a glimpse of the distinguished prisoner.

It was not deemed necessary to keep Dr. Muck in the prisoner's cage in the Marshal's office prior to the examination, although when he first arrived the iron door of the cage clanked behind him. It was opened after a short time, however, and he was allowed to pack about the detention room. While apparently calm and nonchalant, the prisoner betrayed a certain nervousness. In less than three hours he smoked several packages of cigarettes.

NOT INCLINED TO POSE FOR PICTURE.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in in my life," he said, when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture. "I am not inclined to pose for anything."

Assistant District Attorney Dewey gave orders that Dr. Muck was to see the case of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Muck. Husband and wife greeted each other affectionately and chatted together briefly. Mrs. Muck impressed those who saw her as confident her husband would soon be released. She accompanied him to the elevator before his departure for the jail and threw a kiss to him as the car descended.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey and others who talked with the prisoner said he was fully acquainted with the Presidential act under which he was he.dl. Dr. Muck claims to be a citizen of Switzerland, although of German birth. He did not register as an enemy alien.

Federal agents said the Government had ruled that any one living in this country who was born in German and who had not become a citizen of the United States was an enemy alien. The fact that Dr. Muck's father moved to Switzerland when his son was 8 years old did not affect the status of the son, they said.

After the examination of the musician was completed Federal agents said he had been informed that he would remain in custody "indefinitely."

Letters and other papers seized at Dr. Muck's apartments during the day will be inspected before he is again questioned by the Department of Justice officials.

A representative of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder and patron of the orchestra, who defended its conductor in the attacks against his alleged pro-Germanish, tried unsuccessfully to have him admitted to bail.

The arrest came on the eve of what the conductor considered to be his master effort in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. In the absence of Dr. Muck the opening performance here to-day was conducted by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. Dur his automobile ride to the jail Dr. Muck several times remarked that he keenly regretted his inability to take part in the concert.

THE TRIBUNE ASTERNS

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
MAR 28 1918

DOKTOR MUCK'S PAPERS IMPERIL GERMAN FRIENDS

Search of Documents Is Expected to Result in Additional Arrests.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Wednesday. — While Doktor Karl Muck, favorite of the Kaiser and Prussian leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, remained behind the bars in the East Cambridge jail here to-day, agents of the Department of Justice were making a thorough examination of his papers which may result in the arrest of some of his enemy alien associates.

One representative of the government said that a close friend of the Kaiser's musical director was being investigated as a dangerous alien and that his arrest might be made at any time. It was intimated that the man under investigation was a member of the symphony orchestra.

It is known that some of the most important evidence against Muck and his alien associates was furnished by the wife of a 'cellist in the orchestra, an American woman, who left her husband because of his insults to the American flag and the United States, which has permitted him to make a larger salary as a musician than he ever enjoyed in Germany.

Money Sent to Aid Germany.

According to reports here the evidence was in the form of a letter which revealed the fact that Muck and some of the other twenty-three enemy aliens on the orchestra's pay roll were writing decidedly pro-German letters to relatives at home, sending them by way of Switzerland. Incidentally, the American money paid at the box offices of cities which continued to tolerate the Muck orchestra was being sent to Germany by the same route and used to aid in carrying on the war against the Allies.

While the government officials here have not explained any of their moves against the Prussian musician, it is believed they hesitated to arrest him during his recent concerts in New York, while the opposition against him was at its height, in order to give him further opportunity to carry on the correspondence which has been seized here.

Thus far Muck has not produced the much discussed Swiss naturalization papers which were to save him from facing prosecution as a dangerous alien. His continued silence is accepted here as substantiation of the stories that the papers are not genuine and probably will not be produced at all.

From New York came a statement by Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, that if Muck claimed Swiss citizenship and asked protection on that ground the Swiss official would proceed as in the case of any other possessor of such rights. He said no such claim for protection had been made as yet.

In spite of the arrest of Muck, the government investigation and the evidence that his enemy alien associates are about to face similar prosecution, Major H. L. Higginson has not announced the withdrawal of the Kaiser's favorite as head of the symphony orchestra. His announcement of the "temporary" appointment of a leader to act for him on Tuesday, when Muck first was detained, is accepted, as further evidence that Major Higginson has not abandoned faith in his Prussian leader.

TRIBUNE
s: New York City
MAR 28 1918

No Further Arrests Made in Muck Case

BOSTON, March 27.—Reports that another arrest might result from the seizure of papers at the home of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is held at the county jail in East Cambridge as an enemy alien, had failed to materialize up to a late hour to-night.

While the musician was spending the day in his cell at the jail Federal officials were making an examination of the papers.

Mrs. Muck and the doctor's secretary, C. J. Foley, were allowed a short interview with the prisoner to-day.

For perhaps the first time in his life the prisoner smoked a pipe. Dr. Muck is a cigarette smoker, and from the time of his arrest until his transfer to East Cambridge has smoked almost incessantly. The rules of the jail, however, forbid cigarette smoking. The conductor protested, but the authorities were obdurate. To-day he asked for a pipe and smoking tobacco, which were furnished.

m SUN
dress: New York City.
MAR 28 19
te

DR. MUCK'S PAPERS SENT TO CAPITAL

Secrecy Still Pervades Investigation of Alien Orchestra Leader.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck will know within a day or two whether he is to be treated simply as an alien enemy and interned or will have to stand trial in the Federal court on charges of violation of the espionage act. Private papers seized yesterday at his home in the Fenway have been forwarded to Washington, it is understood, and the Boston Federal office expects to hear some word by to-morrow. Meanwhile the Department of Justice officials here are silent.

Rumors yesterday that others would be arrested in connection with the case were neither confirmed nor denied to-day. It was learned that in the Symphony Orchestra leader's private papers were found several names and these persons are being investigated. Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, who is in charge of all alien enemy investigations in this district, said to-night that he was not prepared to say whether any more arrests would be made or not. He said that the investigation was still being conducted.

Dr. Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Cambridge jail to-day. His wife visited him this afternoon. He appears cheerful.

MUCK REPORT AWAITED.

Internment of Conductor Not Yet Decided Upon.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Whether or not Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest. Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice to-day.

All comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal Attorney's statement.

rom PUBLIC LEDGER
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
ate

MUCK DULL IN JAIL; EATS DAIRY LUNCH

Misses Cigarettes, but Takes to Smoking Pipe in His Cell

FATE STILL UNCERTAIN

Seized Papers May Decide Whether He Shall Be Tried or Interned

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

Boston, March 27. — Dr. Karl Muck will know in a day or two whether he is to be treated as an alien enemy and interned or whether he will stand trial in the Federal Court on charges of violating the espionage act. Private papers seized yesterday at his home in the Fenway have been forwarded to Washington, it is understood, and Federal agents expect to get instructions tomorrow. Meanwhile the local officials of the Department of Justice are silent.

Judd Dewey, Assistant United States District Attorney, who is in charge of alien-enemy investigations in this district, said tonight that he was not prepared to say whether or not any more arrests would be made.

Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Mambridge ail today. His wife visited him this afternoon. He appears cheerful. He has missed his cigarettes, but has taken to smoking a pipe in his cell.

So far as has been revealed there is no direct evidence to prove that when Empeor William made it possible for Muck to come to America the move was a part of a German campaign, but propagandists' methods would suggest that Muck could do much to popularize Germany in this country.

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston. Only a preliminary report from the Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today, and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal Attorney's statement.

WORLD
ess: New York City
MAR 28 1918

DR. MUCK TO STAY IN JAIL FOR INQUIRY

Government Is Investigating His Activities in America—Others Involved With Him, Is Report.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, March 27.—Indications are that Dr. Karl Muck, arrested Monday night as an alien enemy, must wait in the East Cambridge Jail several days while his papers are examined and his activities in this country since America entered the war investigated. He was visited to-day for the first time since his arrest by his wife. She obtained a pass from United States Marshal Mitchell.

She told her husband she was greatly concerned over his comfort and expressed the hope that he had obtained some rest. She was shown every courtesy at the jail and was allowed to give her husband newspapers, magazines and food.

Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and until recently one of Dr. Muck's strongest supporters, continues silent regarding the musician's detention. It has been reported that Major Higginson was not surprised at Dr. Muck's sudden detention.

It is thought the papers which the Government officials took from Dr. Muck's home may involve others in Boston. The arrest of a prominent Boston man was intimated to-day as one result. Federal officials refuse to disclose the identity of the man said to be implicated with the musical director.

Dr. Muck has taken to smoking a pipe in jail. After his return from the Federal Building yesterday he was told that it was against the rules of the jail to allow cigarette smoking, but he was told he might have a pipe. He directed his secretary to-day to bring a pipe to the jail. This takes the place of cigarettes, which he has been accustomed to smoking in great numbers.

TELEGRAM
ss: New York City.

MUCK MONEY IS SENT TO GERMANY BOSTON HEARS

Anti-American Letters Mailed Via Switzerland, Part of Evidence, It Is Said.

OTHER ARRESTS EXPECTED SOON.

BOSTON, Mass., Thursday.—The reason the Department of Justice allowed Dr. Karl Muck to conduct his Boston Symphony Orchestra in concerts in New York and other cities without interference, it has been learned here, is that the federal authorities wished to allow him to continue a certain correspondence with friends in Germany through Switzerland until they had sufficient evidence against him to take definite action.

This is one of the developments of the investigation which has been in progress since the Prussian music director and intimate of the Kaiser was taken into custody last Monday night. He is still in the East Cambridge Jail here, having been refused admission to bail, despite all the efforts of his friend and financial backer, Major N. L. Higginson.

Department of Justice agents say that Dr. Muck and some of the twenty-odd enemy aliens in the orchestra have been writing decidedly anti-American letters to persons in Germany and sending them by way of Switzerland. It is even alleged that some of the American dollars taken in at the box office of the Muck-Higginson concerts went to Germany by the same route to help kill American soldiers and sailors.

It is reported that the wife of a German 'cellist in the Muck orchestra, who is an American and has been estranged from her husband because of his insults to America gave the federal authorities the clew that led to Dr. Muck's detention. This woman's husband and several other members of the orchestra, as well as some friends of Dr. Muck outside the musical organization are under close surveillance by Secret Service agents, it is said.

No official word has come from Washington as to what the government intends to do with Dr. Muck, but unofficially it is reported his internment for the duration

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City
MAR 28 1918

MUCK MAY BE TRIED AS SPY

U. S. Authorities Considering Charge to Be Made.

ANOTHER ARREST IS HINTED

Seized Letters Sent to Washington for Further Investigation.

BOSTON, March 28.—Federal officials to-day were investigating evidence said to have been found in the papers of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is now at the East Cambridge jail awaiting action by the Federal authorities as to whether he is to be interned as a dangerous enemy alien or tried for violating the espionage act.

It was said to-day by those in charge of the investigation that among the papers seized at Dr. Muck's home in the Fenway there were letters in German between the orchestra leader and friends that may prove very interesting to the Government agents in Washington, where they have been sent. One of the close friends of Dr. Muck is being investigated by the Secret Service agents, it is said, and another arrest is likely, they hint.

Dr. Muck is still in jail, he'd without bail, and it may be several days before any action is taken in his case. In other like cases in this district it has been customary for the Government to act within ten days. Whether Dr. Muck will be charged with being a dangerous enemy alien and interned, or be tried for violation of the espionage act will probably be determined after the letters and papers seized by the Government agents when they arrested him, are thoroughly investigated. Many of them are in German and will have to be translated.

Because cigarette smoking is not permitted at the East Cambridge jail, where Federal prisoners in this district are held to await trial and before being sent to Government prisons, Dr. Muck has for the first time in his life had to smoke a pipe. Yesterday, when he had suffered for the want of a smoke for some hours he sent out for a pipe and tobacco, and is now using them in place of cigarettes, which he formerly smoked by the score. His meals are also being brought in to him from the outside, and his wife and his manager have been the only ones outside of Government agents who have been permitted to see him.

EVENING GLOBE
ess New York City

WASHINGTON APPROVES KARL MUCK'S ARREST

BOSTON, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram to-day to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of federal officials herein arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country.

Beyond announcing receipt of the telegram, the marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case.

Judd Dewey, assistant district attorney, in charge of enemy alien investigations, to-day denied reports that the arrest of Dr. Muck was due to information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. John L. Gardner, a Boston society woman, visited Dr. Muck today and gave him a detailed account of the concert Tuesday night, which he was unable to conduct because of his arrest.

om RECORD
ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.
ate

The license of the artistic temperament seems to be at an end. Without fear or favor enemy aliens should be put where they can do no harm. That they will be seems to be the significance of the arrest and incarceration of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The best guarantee against the ill-considered and regrettable mob action is prompt legal measures taken by the authorities. We can afford to be patient, but not fatuous.

om AMERICAN
dress: Baltimore, Md.
te

SEARCH MUCK'S LETTERS

Federal Officials Act While He Remains in Jail.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent today in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized at his home here. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case have been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared that counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representations in Mr. Muck's case were made to the legislation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Carl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today and all comment on the case was withheld pending the federal attorney's statement.

EVENING MAIL
New York City

Gregory Approves the Arrest of Dr. Muck

Boston, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram to-day to United States Marshal Mitchell, approved the arrest here of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to peace and safety of the country.

The marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Boynton and his assistants also declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment. He is held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

om POST
dress: Washington, D. C.

SEARCH KARL MUCK'S PAPERS.

Officials Delay Internment Decision; No Other Arrests Made.

Boston, March 27.—Reports that another arrest might result from the seizure of papers at the home of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is held at the county jail in East Cambridge as an enemy alien, had failed to materialize up to a late hour tonight.

While the musician was spending the day in his cell at the jail Federal officials were making a thorough examination of the papers.

Whether Dr. Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States attorney at Boston. Only a preliminary report from government investigators was received.

EVENING WORLD
ress: New York City.
MAR 28 1918

HOLD DR. MUCK IN JAIL PENDING FEDERAL INQUIRY

Others Are Involved With Alien Musician and More Arrests Are Forecast in Boston.

BOSTON, March 28.—Indications are that Dr. Karl Muck, arrested Monday night as an alien enemy, must wait in the East Cambridge Jail several days while his papers are examined and his activities in this country since America entered the war investigated.

It is thought the papers which the Government officials took from Dr. Muck's home may involve others in Boston. The arrest of a prominent Boston man was intimated to-day as one result. Federal officials refuse to disclose the identity of the man said to be implicated with the musical director.

rom EVENING JOURNAL
ddress: New York.
MAR 28
ate

SYMPHONY HEAD AWAITS U. S. ACTION

Dr. Muck Still in Jail, While Washington Officials Search His Seized Papers.

Boston, March 28.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taken into custody by authorities here, will undergo an examination by the United States District Attorney in the Federal Building within a day or two and will then know whether he is to be interned as an alien enemy or stand trial on a charge of violation of the espionage act.

The papers seized in Dr. Muck's home, it is understood, have been sent to Washington. The Boston Federal authorities are awaiting the result of the examination before they take any further action.

m TIMES
dress New York City
te

SEARCH DR. MUCK'S PAPERS.

Federal Agents Hunt Through Correspondence in German.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck still occupies a cell in the East Cambridge jail, where he is learning to smoke a briar pipe, being forbidden the use of cigarettes, to which he was addicted. His only visitors today were his wife, Manager Ellis of Symphony Hall, and the latter's secretary. Dr. Muck's food is being brought from his home.

Owing to the extent of the investigation into the affairs of Dr. Muck it is likely that he will not be taken from the jail to the Federal Building for several days. He was booked at the office of United States Marshal Mitchell as an enemy alien, and the authorities usually take definite action within ten days of arrests in such cases.

As a large part of Dr. Muck's seized correspondence is in German, some time will be required to get the case into shape for action. It is reported that the examination of these papers may result in the arrest of a friend of Dr. Muck.

m EVENING GLOBE
dress New York City
te

WASHINGTON APPROVES KARL MUCK'S ARREST

BOSTON, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram to-day to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of federal officials herein arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country.

Beyond announcing receipt of the telegram, the marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case.

TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. MUCK'S PAPERS SEIZED.

Boston, March 28.—The Federal authorities are still investigating the private papers and correspondence of Dr. Karl Muck, mostly written in German. It will be several days before all have been translated. There is a rumor that a friend of Dr. Muck may be arrested.

Dr. Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Cambride jail today. He appears cheerful.

TELEGRAM
s: New York City.
MAR 28 1918

In the event of a German invasion it is presumed Major Higginson, of Boston, because of his devotion to Dr. Muck, will not be molested.

blished: London,

om PRESS
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
ate

MUCK SPENDS DAY IN JAIL; U. S. AGENTS GO OVER HIS PAPERS

Inquiry Starts Into the Activities of One of Leader's Close Friends.

ANOTHER ARREST POSSIBLE

Prisoner Makes No Effort to Appeal on Ground That He Is a Swiss.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custodqy as an enemy alien, spent today in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined letters and documents seized at his home here.

Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case had been received, they said.

It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends said counsel had been engaged to protect his interests.

Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, said at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

WASHINGTON AWAITS REPORT ON DR. MUCK

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from the Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

GERMAN GENERAL KILLED.

Amsterdam, March 27.—German newspapers announce that General Paul Bloch, an infantry division commander in the German army, was killed at the front on March 23.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.

INDORSE MUCK ARREST

Department of Justice Sanction Holding of Musician

Boston, March 29.—The Department of Justice at Washington has approved the course of Federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country. The marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Boynton declined to say whether plans were being considered for Doctor Muck's immediate internment.

EVENING WORLD
s: New York City.
MAR 28

MUCK'S ARREST APPROVED.

Washington Backs Action of Federal Officer in Boston.

BOSTON, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram to-day to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of Federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country.

District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment. Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

om PUBLIC LEDGER
dress Philadelphia, Pa.
te

DR. MUCK'S PAPERS SENT TO WASHINGTON

Musician Dull in Cell, Misses Cigarettes, and Takes to Pipe. Fate Still Uncertain

Boston, March 28.—Dr. Karl Muck will know in a day or two whether he is to be treated as an alien enemy and interned or whether he will stand trial in the Federal Court on charges of violating the espionage act. Private papers seized at his home in the Fenway have been forwarded to Washington, it is understood, and Federal agents expect to get instructions today. Meanwhile the local officials of the Department of Justice are silent.

Judd Dewey, Assistant United States District Attorney, who is in charge of alien-enemy investigations in this district, said that he was not prepared to say whether or not any more arrests would be made.

Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Cambridge bridge yesterday. His wife visited him in the afternoon. He appears cheerful. He has mised his cigarettes, but has taken to smoking a pipe in his cell.

UBLIC LEDGER

rom WORLD
ddress: New York City
ate
MAR 29 1918

DR. MUCK AT LARGE DANGER TO THE U.S.

So Says Attorney General Gregory in Approving Conductor's Arrest — Denies Orchestra Trouble Caused Detention.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, March 28.—United States Marshal Mitchell has received a telegram from Attorney General Gregory approving the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to the effect that "Muck's presence at large was a danger to the public peace and the safety of the United States."

H was arrested in connection with Section 12 of the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917. Marshal Mitchell was also instructed to hold the prisoner in a hygienic place.

Assistant Federal Attorney Dewey to-day gave a quietus to the persistent report that there was trouble among the members of the orchestra and that Dr. Muck's arrest was due to information furnished by one or more members of that organization.

He said he had heard of no such trouble and that he had not been influenced in causing the arrest by any information caused by so-called professional jealousy on the part of other musicians either in or out of the orchestra.

Mrs. John L. Gardner, accompanied by Mr. Foley, Dr. Muck's secretary, visited the conductor this morning at the East Cambridge jail. Mrs. Gardner had a permit from Marshal Mitchell. She spent half an hour in conversation with the prisoner. Sheriff Fairbanks was present.

Mrs. Gardner brought Dr. Muck some cakes and jellies. The subject they discussed was the Tuesday night concert which Dr. Muck was not allowed to conduct. The prisoner asked many questions about it, and Mrs. Gardner gave him a detailed account of the production. It is understood that Mrs. Muck has gone to New York, so Mrs. Gardner was allowed to visit Dr. Muck, whose visitors are limited in number.

It was announced to-day that the prearranged programme of concerts will not be affected by Dr. Muck's detention. Ernest Schmidt, who has been with the orchestra for many years, will be conductor pro tem. The usual summer "pops" will be given.

rom RECORD
ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.
te
MAR 29

PROVES MUCK'S ARREST

tment of Justice Uphoids Federal Agents at Boston.

ton, March 28.—The Department stice at Washington, in a telegram to United States Marshal John J. ell, approved the course of Fed- officials here in aresting Dr. Karl , conductor of the Boston Sym- Orchestra, on the ground that his nce at large was a danger to the and safety of the country. The hal refused to say what disposition d be made of the case. District At- torney Thomas J. Boynton declined to say whether plans were being consider- ed for Dr. Muck's immediate intern- ment.

Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

Judd Dewey, Assistant District Attorney, in charge of enemy alien investigations, today denied widely circulated reports that the arrest of Dr. Muck was due to information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dewey said he had heard nothing to substantiate reports of professional jealousies in the organization or trouble among the musicians.

AMERICAN
: New York City.
MAR 29 1918

Dr. Muck Held on Warrant from Wilson

By International News Service.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—A presidential warrant was issued late today, through the Department of Justice, on which Dr. Karl Muck will be held, pending further investigation of evidence. Department of Justice officials admitted they had received preliminary reports from their operatives at Boston These reports, they said, were of such nature as to render the warrant advisable.

Dr. Muck will be held pending final decision on evidence presented against him. Officials would give no hint as to what they expect this decision to be, but said if it were adverse to the orchestra leader he

om AMERICAN
dress: Baltimore, Md.
te

SEARCH MUCK'S LETTERS

Federal Officials Act While He Remains in Jail.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor now in federal custody as an enemy alien, spent today in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined a number of letters and documents seized at his home here. Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case have been received, they said. It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends declared that counsel had been engaged to protect his interests. Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, declared at New York last night that if any representations in Mr. Muck's case were made to the legislation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Carl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today and all comment on the case was withheld pending the federal attorney's statement.

EVENING MAIL
New York City

MAR 28 1918

Gregory Approves the Arrest of Dr. Muck

Boston, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram to-day to United States Marshal Mitchell, approved the arrest here of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to peace and safety of the country.

The marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Boynton and his assistants also declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment. He is held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

om POST
dress: Washington, D. C. t

SEARCH KARL MUCK'S PAPERS.

Officials Delay Internment Decision; No Other Arrests Made.

Boston, March 27.—Reports that another arrest might result from the seizure of papers at the home of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is held at the county jail in East Cambridge as an enemy alien, had failed to materialize up to a late hour tonight.

While the musician was spending the day in his cell at the jail Federal officials were making a thorough examination of the papers.

Whether Dr. Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States attorney at Boston. Only a preliminary report from government investigators was received.

EVENING WORLD
ress: New York City.
MAR 28 1918

HOLD DR. MUCK IN JAIL PENDING FEDERAL INQUIRY

Others Are Involved With Alien Musician and More Arrests Are Forecast in Boston.

BOSTON, March 28.—Indications are that Dr. Karl Muck, arrested Monday night as an alien enemy, must wait in the East Cambridge Jail several days while his papers are examined and his activities in this country since America entered the war investigated.

It is thought the papers which the Government officials took from Dr. Muck's home may involve others in Boston. The arrest of a prominent Boston man was intimated to-day as one result. Federal officials refuse to disclose the identity of the man said to be implicated with the musical director.

rom EVENING JOURNAL
ddress: New York.
MAR 28
ate

SYMPHONY HEAD AWAITS U. S. ACTION

Dr. Muck Still in Jail, While Washington Officials Search His Seized Papers.

Boston, March 28.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, taken into custody by authorities here, will undergo an examination by the United States District Attorney in the Federal Building within a day or two and will then know whether he is to be interned as an alien enemy or stand trial on a charge of violation of the espionage act.

The papers seized in Dr. Muck's home, it is understood, have been sent to Washington. The Boston Federal authorities are awaiting the result of the examination before they take any further action.

m TIMES
dress New York City
te

SEARCH DR. MUCK'S PAPERS.

Federal Agents Hunt Through Correspondence in German.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck still occupies a cell in the East Cambridge jail, where he is learning to smoke a briar pipe, being forbidden the use of cigarettes, to which he was addicted. His only visitors today were his wife, Manager Ellis of Symphony Hall, and the latter's secretary. Dr. Muck's food is being brought from his home.

Owing to the extent of the investigation into the affairs of Dr. Muck it is likely that he will not be taken from the jail to the Federal Building for several days. He was booked at the office of United States Marshal Mitchell as an enemy alien, and the authorities usually take definite action within ten days of arrests in such cases.

As a large part of Dr. Muck's seized correspondence is in German, some time will be required to get the case into shape for action. It is reported that the examination of these papers may result in the arrest of a friend of Dr. Muck.

m EVENING GLOBE
dress New York City
e

WASHINGTON APPROVES KARL MUCK'S ARREST

BOSTON, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram to-day to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of federal officials herein arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country.

Beyond announcing receipt of the telegram, the marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case.

TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. MUCK'S PAPERS SEIZED.

Boston, March 28.—The Federal authorities are still investigating the private papers and correspondence of Dr. Karl Muck, mostly written in German. It will be several days before all have been translated. There is a rumor that a friend of Dr. Muck may be arrested.

Dr. Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Cambride jail today. He appears cheerful.

TELEGRAM
s: New York City.
MAR 28 1918

In the event of a German invasion it is presumed Major Higginson, of Boston, because of his devotion to Dr. Muck, will not be molested.

blished: London, 1901, ...

om PRESS
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
ate

MUCK SPENDS DAY IN JAIL; U. S. AGENTS GO OVER HIS PAPERS

Inquiry Starts Into the Activities of One of Leader's Close Friends.

ANOTHER ARREST POSSIBLE

Prisoner Makes No Effort to Appeal on Ground That He Is a Swiss.

Boston, March 27.—Dr. Karl Muck, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, now in Federal custody as an enemy alien, spent today in the East Cambridge jail while agents of the Department of Justice examined letters and documents seized at his home here.

Officials in charge of the investigation declined to say whether charges of specific acts against the United States would be brought in court against the prisoner. No orders from Washington regarding the disposal of his case had been received, they said.

It was stated that the activities of a close friend of the orchestra conductor were being investigated and that another arrest might follow.

Dr. Muck made no effort, so far as was known, to appeal against his detention on the ground that he was a citizen of Switzerland, but friends said counsel had been engaged to protect his interests.

Hans Sulzer, Swiss Minister to the United States, said at New York last night that if any representation in Dr. Muck's case were made to the legation he would proceed as in the case of any Swiss citizen.

WASHINGTON AWAITS REPORT ON DR. MUCK

Washington, March 27.—Whether Dr. Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States Attorney at Boston, where Dr. Muck is under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from the Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

GERMAN GENERAL KILLED.

Amsterdam, March 27.—German newspapers announce that General Paul Bloch, an infantry division commander in the German army, was killed at the front on March 23.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.

INDORSE MUCK ARREST

Department of Justice Sanctions Holding of Musician

Boston, March 29.—The Department of Justice at Washington has approved the course of Federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country. The marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Boynton declined to say whether plans were being considered for Doctor Muck's immediate internment.

EVENING WORLD
s: New York City.
MAR 28

MUCK'S ARREST APPROVED.

Washington Backs Action of Federal Officer in Boston.

BOSTON, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram to-day to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of Federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country.

District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment. Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

UBLIC LEDGER
om PUBLIC LEDGER
dress Philadelphia
te

DR. MUCK'S PAPER SENT TO WASHING

Musician Dull in Cell, Misses Cigarettes, and Takes to Pipe. Fate Still Uncertain

Boston, March 28.—Dr. Karl Muck will know in a day or two whether he is to be treated as an alien enemy and interned or whether he will stand trial in the Federal Court on charges of violating the espionage act. Private papers seized at his home in the Fenway have been forwarded to Washington, it is understood, and Federal agents expect to get instructions today. Meanwhile the local officials of the Department of Justice are silent.

Judd Dewey, Assistant United States District Attorney, who is in charge of alien-enemy investigations in this district, said that he was not prepared to say whether or not any more arrests would be made.

Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Cambridge bridge yesterday. His wife visited him in the afternoon. He appears cheerful. He has mised his cigarettes, but has taken to smoking a pipe in his cell.

rom WORLD
ddress: New York City
ate
MAR 29 1918

DR. MUCK AT LARGE DANGER TO THE U.S.

So Says Attorney General Gregory in Approving Conductor's Arrest — Denies Orchestra Trouble Caused Detention.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, March 28.—United States Marshal Mitchell has received a telegram from Attorney General Gregory approving the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to the effect that "Muck's presence at large was a danger to the public peace and the safety of the United States."

H was arrested in connection with Section 12 of the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917. Marshal Mitchell was also instructed to hold the prisoner in a hygienic place.

Assistant Federal Attorney Dewey to-day gave a quietus to the persistent report that there was trouble among the members of the orchestra and that Dr. Muck's arrest was due to information furnished by one or more members of that organization.

He said he had heard of no such trouble and that he had not been influenced in causing the arrest by any information caused by so-called professional jealousy on the part of other musicians either in or out of the orchestra.

Mrs. John L. Gardner, accompanied by Mr. Foley, Dr. Muck's secretary, visited the conductor this morning at the East Cambridge jail. Mrs. Gardner had a permit from Marshal Mitchell. She spent half an hour in conversation with the prisoner. Sheriff Fairbanks was present.

Mrs. Gardner brought Dr. Muck some cakes and jellies. The subject they discussed was the Tuesday night concert which Dr. Muck was not allowed to conduct. The prisoner asked many questions about it, and Mrs. Gardner gave him a detailed account of the production. It is understood that Mrs. Muck has gone to New York, so Mrs. Gardner was allowed to visit Dr. Muck, whose visitors are limited in number.

It was announced to-day that the prearranged programme of concerts will not be affected by Dr. Muck's detention. Ernest Schmidt, who has been with the orchestra for many years, will be conductor pro tem. The usual summer "pops" will be given.

rom RECORD
ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.
te
MAR 29 1918

APPROVES MUCK'S ARREST

Department of Justice Upholds Federal Agents at Boston.

Boston, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram today to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of Federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country. The marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment.

Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

Judd Dewey, Assistant District Attorney, in charge of enemy alien investigations, today denied widely circulated reports that the arrest of Dr. Muck was due to information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dewey said he had heard nothing to substantiate reports of professional jealousies in the organization or trouble among the musicians.

AMERICAN
: New York City.
MAR 29 1918

Dr. Muck Held on Warrant from Wilson

By International News Service.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—A presidential warrant was issued late today, through the Department of Justice, on which Dr. Karl Muck will be held, pending further investigation of evidence. Department of Justice officials admitted they had received preliminary reports from their operatives at Boston. These reports, they said, were of such nature as to render the warrant advisable.

Dr. Muck will be held pending final decision on evidence presented against him. Officials would give no hint as to what they expect this decision to be, but said if it were adverse to the orchestra leader he

TELEGRAM

ss: New York City.

MAR 29 1918

DR. MUCK'S WIFE HERE IN FIGHT FOR HIS FREEDOM

Seeks to Enlist Aid of Friend to Prevent Internment of Orchestra Director.

STATE DEPARTMENT APPROVES HIS IMPRISONMENT.

The wife of Dr. Karl Muck, jailed director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in New York trying to enlist the aid of friends here in preventing the internment of her husband by the United States government as a dangerous enemy alien.

Dr. Muck still occupies a cell in the Boston jail and the only word that has come from the State Department at Washington has been one of approval of the act of the Boston federal authorities in taking the Royal Prussian Music Director into custody.

One of the objects of Mrs. Muck's trip to New York, it is said, is to try to establish the alleged Swiss citizenship of her husband, who was born in Germany.

Mrs. Muck conferred with Hans Sulzer, head of the Swiss Legation at Washington, who was in New York and at the Vanderbilt Hotel.

After the conference with Mr. Sulzer Mrs. Muck refused to make any statement. Mr. Sulzer has left New York for Washington and refused to comment upon the situation regarding Dr. Muck. It was admitted by members of his staff that the citizenship of the musician was the subject discussed.

Mrs. William Jay, who was active in the agitation to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting the Boston Symphony at its recent appearance in this city, said that the establishing of Swiss citizenship by Dr. Muck would have no bearing at all upon the opposition to his activities.

"It has long been established that a German may be of any citizenship and still work incessantly for the ends of Germany without a thought of duty to the country of which he has become a citizen," she said. Dr. Muck is a friend of the Kaiser, is utterly pro-German and has no right to be permitted to go about this country at will, much less direct one of its large musical organizations."

m AMERICAN

dress: Baltimore, Md.

e.....

MUCK'S ARREST APPROVED

Department Officials Support the Marshal's Course.

Boston, Mass., March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington in a telegram today to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell approved the course of federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country. The Marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment.

Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

Judd Dewey, assistant district attorney, in charge of enemy alien investigations, today denied widely circulated reports that the arrest of Dr. Muck was due to information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dewey said he had nothing to substantiate reports of professional jealousies in the organization or trouble among the musicians.

rom AMERICAN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

ate.....

Dr. Muck is to remain in jail for further inquiry. To while away the time he might be given the score of the Star-spangled Banner with which to familiarize himself.

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

MAR 29 1918

Muck's Wife Tries to Prove by Consul Husband Is Swiss

Confers with Hans Sulzer, Head of Legation, on Trip Here.

Mrs. Carl Muck, wife of the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, who is held without bail in Boston on a charge of enemy activities, arrived in New York yesterday from Boston and took steps to establish the Swiss citizenship claimed by her husband. Mrs. Muck conferred with Hans Sulzer, head of the Swiss Legation at Washington, who was at the Valderbilt Hotel in New York.

After the conference with Mr. Sulzer Mrs. Muck refused to make any statement. Mr. Sulzer left New York for Washington at noon and refused to comment upon the situation regarding Doktor Muck. It was admitted by members of his staff that the citizenship of the musician was the subject discussed.

Mrs. William Jay, who was active in the agitation to prevent Doktor Muck from conducting the Boston Symphony at its recent appearance in this city, said last night that the establishing of Swiss citizenship by Doktor Muck would have no bearing at all upon the opposition to his activities.

"It has long been established that a German may be of any citizenship and still work incessantly for the ends of Germany without a thought of duty to the country of which he has become a citizen," she said. Doktor Muck is a friend of the Kaiser, is utterly pro-German and has no right to be permitted to go about this country at will, much less direct one of its large musical organizations."

MR. GREGORY CALLS MUCK A PUBLIC PERIL

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Thursday.—John J. Mitchell, United States Marshal, is in receipt of a telegram from Attorney General Gregory approving of the arrest of Doktor Karl Muck, saying that "Muck's presence at large was a danger to the public peace and the safety of the United States."

Business Manager Brennan, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stated to-day that the symphony orchestra schedule would go on as prearranged, with Ernst Schmidt, assistant conductor, taking the place of Doktor Muck. Mr. Schmidt has been with the orchestra for years.

Judd Dewey, Assistant United States Attorney, denied persistent reports that there was trouble among the members of the symphony orchestra and that Doktor Muck's arrest was due to information furnished by one or more members of that organization to the government.

Mrs. John L. Gardner, accompanied by Mr. Foley, secretary of Doktor Muck, called on the symphony leader this morning at the East Cambridge jail. Mrs. Gardner had a permit from Marshal Mitchell and spent half an hour in conversation with the prisoner. Sheriff Fairbairn was present during the interview. Mrs. Gardner took some cakes and jellies to Doktor Muck. The subject discussed was the Tuesday night concert, which Doktor Muck was not allowed to conduct.

om MORNING TELEGRAPH

ddress: New York City

MAR 29 1918

DR. MUCK TO FIGHT, ATTORNEY HINTS

Status as Alien Enemy Is Question on Which Lawyers May Differ, He Asserts After Conference.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, March 28.

A move that came late to-day indicates that preparations are under way for a fight in the case of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held here as an enemy alien. This afternoon Clift Rogers Clapp, of State street, for a long time attorney for Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the Boston orchestra, was granted a permit at the United States Marshal's office to visit Dr. Muck at the East Cambridge jail.

Attorney Clapp was closeted with Dr. Muck in the Sheriff's private office for a considerable time in private conversation, and to-night made this statement:

"The papers seem to have cut loose regarding Dr. Muck's case. There is no occasion for any talk. Dr. Muck is detained at the East Cambridge jail under authority of the President's Alien Enemy Act. Dr. Muck did not consider he was an enemy alien and whether he was or not is a question on which lawyers may differ."

It is because of this last statement that the opinion is held that a fight is to be made.

As a result of the issuance of a Federal warrant by authorities at Washington Dr. Muck was this afternoon officially declared an enemy alien, the order calling for his retention in jail pending further investigation of his case.

BORING PLAYERS TO LEAVE

SUN

ss: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK'S PAPERS SENT TO WASHINGTON

Boston, March 28.—Dr. Karl Muck will know within a day or two whether he is to be treated simply as an alien enemy and interned or will have to stand trial in the Federal Court on charges of violation of the Espionage act. Private papers seized at his home in the Fenway have been forwarded to Washington, it is understood, and the Boston Federal office expects to hear some word today. Meanwhile the Department of Justice officials here are silent.

Rumors yesterday that others would be arrested in connection with the case are neither confirmed nor denied. It was learned that in the Symphony Orchestra leader's private papers were found several names, and these persons are being investigated. Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, who is in charge of all alien enemy investigations in this district, says that he was not prepared to say whether any more arrests would be made or not. He said that the investigation was still being conducted.

Dr. Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Cambridge jail today. His wife visited him yesterday. He appears cheerful.

om TIMES

dress New York City

APPROVES MUCK'S ARREST.

Department of Justice Considered His Presence Dangerous.

BOSTON, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram today to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of Federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country.

Beyond announcing receipt of the telegram the Marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants also declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment.

Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge Jail as an enemy alien.

Judd Dewey, Assistant District Attorney, in charge of enemy alien investigations today denied widely circulated reports that the arrest of Dr. Muck was due to information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dewey said that he had heard nothing to substantiate reports of professional jealousies in the organization or trouble among the musicians.

Mrs. John L. Gardner, a Boston society woman, visited Dr. Muck today and gave him a detailed account of the concert Tuesday night, which he was unable to conduct because of his arrest.

om WORLD

ddress: New York City

te.....

MAY SEIZE MUCK'S PROPERTIES HERE

$50,000 Home May Be Taken—Back Bay Hears of Radio Outfit.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, March 29.—Washington authorities have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of the leads discovered among the musician's documents. The question of disposing of Dr. Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility the Government will seize his securities as well as his $50,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers says that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claims that he is an alien enemy, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussion in the Back Bay to-day developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities decline to discuss this report.

Dr. Muck is still in the East Cambridge jail and is fast becoming used to smoking a pipe. To-day some of his friends sent him a bag of pipes, of which he is [illegible]

EVENING SUN

ess: Baltimore, Md.

Glad He Is In The Toils At Last.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN:

Sir—It is a satisfaction at last to read of the arrest of Dr. Muck, which, according to reliable testimony, was due several months ago. It is significant that no denial of the charge of disloyalty ever was made by the orchestral director himself, the disclaimers coming from those to whom his admission of expressed unwillingness to direct the playing of our national anthem would have meant heavy financial loss.

We are proud that our city is on record as having refused to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Dr. Muck.

ss: New York City. MAR 30 1918

WIFE SEEKS TO PROVE DR. MUCK SWISS CITIZEN

Mrs. Muck Making Effort to Gain Freedom for Her Husband in Jail.

The wife of Dr. Karl Muck, jailed director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in New York trying to enlist the aid of friends here in preventing the internment of her husband by the United States Government as a dangerous enemy alien.

Dr. Muck still occupies a cell in the Boston jail, and the only word that has come from the State Department at Washington has been one of approval of the act of the Boston federal authorities in taking the Royal Prussian Music director into custody.

One of the objects of Mrs. Muck's trip to New York, it is said, is to try to establish the alleged Swiss citizenship of her husband, who was born in Germany.

Mrs. Muck conferred with Hans Sulzer, head of the Swiss Legation at Washington, who was in New York and at the Vanderbilt Hotel.

After the conference with Mr. Sulzer Mrs. Muck refused to make any statement. Mr. Sulzer has left New York for Washington and refused to comment upon the situation regarding Dr. Muck. It was admitted by members of his staff that the citizenship of the musician was the subject discussed.

Mrs. William Jay, who was active in the agitation to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting the Boston Symphony at its recent appearance in this city, said that the establishing of Swiss citizenship by Dr. Muck would have no bearing at all upon the opposition to his activities.

"It has long been established that a German may be of any citizenship and still work incessantly for the ends of Germany, without a thought of duty to the country of which he has become a citizen," she said. Dr. Muck is a friend of the Kaiser, is utterly pro-German and has no right to be permitted to go about this country at will, much less direct one of its large musical organizations."

EVENING WORLD

s: New York City.

MAY SEIZE MUCK'S PROPERTIES HERE

$50,000 Home May Be Taken—Back Bay Hears of Radio Outfit.

BOSTON, March 30.—Washington authorities have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of the leads discovered among the musician's documents. The question of disposing of Dr. Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility the Government will seize his securities as well as his $50,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers says that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claims that he is an alien enemy, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussion in the Back Bay to-day developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities decline to discuss this report.

EVENING JOURNAL

ss: New York.

MAR 30 191

MUCK MAY FIGHT INTERNMENT ORDER

Major Higginson's Attorney Visits Imprisoned Enemy Alien in Boston Jail.

By International News Service.

Boston, March 29.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now under the classification of "enemy alien" following an order from United States Attorney General Gregory, who said he considered the leader a danger to the public peace and safety of the country.

Under his new status Dr. Muck is ostracized by society here, and officials say he probably will be removed to a "hygienic" place. Strong hints of further arrests continued, but authorities say no American citizen is suspected.

Indication of a fight in Dr. Muck's case has been given. He was visited in jail by C. R. Clapp, attorney for Major Higginson, supporter of the Boston orchestra. Clapp declared that the leader does not consider himself an alien enemy.

m NEW YORK HERALD

ress New York City

Federal Officials Consider Seizure of Muck's Property

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Doktor Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which already have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not been settled, but there is a possibility that the government will seize his securities, as well as his $30,000 residence in the Fenway.

Federal officers say the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's assertion that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and officials already have declared that he does.

It developed today that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Doktor Muck's place, is a registered enemy alien—a German. He registered here under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States government.

EVENING SUN

ss: New York City

DR. MUCK'S HOME MAY BE SEIZED BY GOVERNMENT

His Successor as Symphony Leader Found Listed as German.

BOSTON, March 30.—Federal authorities here are making preparations, it is said, in regard to the disposal of the property of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is being held at the East Cambridge Jail under the espionage act. It is said that the Government is likely to seize his securities and $30,000 home in the Fenway under the Alien Property act.

Federal officials say that Dr. Muck is not entitled to contest the Government's assertion that he is an alien enemy, beyond submitting proof that he does not come under the President's proclamation, and officials have already decided that he does. Secret Service agents are investigating further into the affairs of the musician, and it is rumored that other arrests may be made as a result of information gleaned from papers seized when Dr. Muck was arrested.

It developed last night that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in place of Dr. Muck, is listed as an alien enemy. Schmidt is a German and registered here under the recent compulsory regulations.

TELEGRAM

ss: New York City.

MAR 29 1918

DR. MUCK'S WIFE HERE IN FIGHT FOR HIS FREEDOM

Seeks to Enlist Aid of Friend to Prevent Internment of Orchestra Director.

STATE DEPARTMENT APPROVES HIS IMPRISONMENT.

The wife of Dr. Karl Muck, jailed director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in New York trying to enlist the aid of friends here in preventing the internment of her husband by the United States government as a dangerous enemy alien.

Dr. Muck still occupies a cell in the Boston jail and the only word that has come from the State Department at Washington has been one of approval of the act of the Boston federal authorities in taking the Royal Prussian Music Director into custody.

One of the objects of Mrs. Muck's trip to New York, it is said, is to try to establish the alleged Swiss citizenship of her husband, who was born in Germany.

Mrs. Muck conferred with Hans Sulzer, head of the Swiss Legation at Washington, who was in New York and at the Vanderbilt Hotel.

After the conference with Mr. Sulzer Mrs. Muck refused to make any statement. Mr. Sulzer has left New York for Washington and refused to comment upon the situation regarding Dr. Muck. It was admitted by members of his staff that the citizenship of the musician was the subject discussed.

Mrs. William Jay, who was active in the agitation to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting the Boston Symphony at its recent appearance in this city, said that the establishing of Swiss citizenship by Dr. Muck would have no bearing at all upon the opposition to his activities.

"It has long been established that a German may be of any citizenship and still work incessantly for the ends of Germany without a thought of duty to the country of which he has become a citizen," she said. Dr. Muck is a friend of the Kaiser, is utterly pro-German and has no right to be permitted to go about this country at will, much less direct one of its large musical organizations."

m AMERICAN

dress: Baltimore, Md.

e

MUCK'S ARREST APPROVED

Department Officials Support the Marshal's Course.

Boston, Mass., March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington in a telegram today to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell approved the course of federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country. The Marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment.

Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge jail as an enemy alien.

Judd Dewey, assistant district attorney, in charge of enemy alien investigations, today denied widely circulated reports that the arrest of Dr. Muck was due to information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dewey said he had nothing to substantiate reports of professional jealousies in the organization or trouble among the musicians.

rom AMERICAN

ddress: Baltimore, Md.

ate

Dr. Muck is to remain in jail for further inquiry. To while away the time he might be given the score of the Star-spangled Banner with which to familiarize himself.

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

MAR 29 1918

Muck's Wife Tries to Prove by Consul Husband Is Swiss

Confers with Hans Sulzer, Head of Legation, on Trip Here.

Mrs. Carl Muck, wife of the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, who is held without bail in Boston on a charge of enemy activities, arrived in New York yesterday from Boston and took steps to establish the Swiss citizenship claimed by her husband. Mrs. Muck conferred with Hans Sulzer, head of the Swiss Legation at Washington, who was at the Valderbilt Hotel in New York.

After the conference with Mr. Sulzer Mrs. Muck refused to make any statement. Mr. Sulzer left New York for Washington at noon and refused to comment upon the situation regarding Doktor Muck. It was admitted by members of his staff that the citizenship of the musician was the subject discussed.

Mrs. William Jay, who was active in the agitation to prevent Doktor Muck from conducting the Boston Symphony at its recent appearance in this city, said last night that the establishing of Swiss citizenship by Doktor Muck would have no bearing at all upon the opposition to his activities.

"It has long been established that a German may be of any citizenship and still work incessantly for the ends of Germany without a thought of duty to the country of which he has become a citizen," she said. Doktor Muck is a friend of the Kaiser, is utterly pro-German and has no right to be permitted to go about this country at will, much less direct one of its large musical organizations."

MR. GREGORY CALLS MUCK A PUBLIC PERIL

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Thursday.—John J. Mitchell, United States Marshal, is in receipt of a telegram from Attorney General Gregory approving of the arrest of Doktor Karl Muck, saying that "Muck's presence at large was a danger to the public peace and the safety of the United States."

Business Manager Brennan, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stated to-day that the symphony orchestra schedule would go on as prearranged, with Ernst Schmidt, assistant conductor, taking the place of Doktor Muck. Mr. Schmidt has been with the orchestra for years.

Judd Dewey, Assistant United States Attorney, denied persistent reports that there was trouble among the members of the symphony orchestra and that Doktor Muck's arrest was due to information furnished by one or more members of that organization to the government.

Mrs. John L. Gardner, accompanied by Mr. Foley, secretary of Doktor Muck, called on the symphony leader this morning at the East Cambridge jail. Mrs. Gardner had a permit from Marshal Mitchell and spent half an hour in conversation with the prisoner. Sheriff Fairbairn was present during the interview.

Mrs. Gardner took some cakes and jellies to Doktor Muck. The subject discussed was the Tuesday night concert, which Doktor Muck was not allowed to conduct.

om MORNING TELEGRAPH

dress: New York City

MAR 29 1918

DR. MUCK TO FIGHT, ATTORNEY HINTS

Status as Alien Enemy Is Question on Which Lawyers May Differ, He Asserts After Conference.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, March 28.

A move that came late to-day indicates that preparations are under way for a fight in the case of Dr. Karl Muck leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held here as an enemy alien. This afternoon Clift Rogers Clapp, of State street, for a long time attorney for Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the Boston orchestra, was granted a permit at the United States Marshal's office to visit Dr. Muck at the East Cambridge jail.

Attorney Clapp was closeted with Dr Muck in the Sheriff's private office for a considerable time in private conversation, and to-night made this statement:

"The papers seem to have cut loose regarding Dr. Muck's case. There is no occasion for any talk. Dr. Muck is detained at the East Cambridge jail under authority of the President's Alien Enemy Act. Dr. Muck did not consider he was an enemy alien and whether he was or not is a question on which lawyers may differ."

It is because of this last statement that the opinion is held that a fight is to be made.

As a result of the issuance of a Federal warrant by authorities at Washington Dr. Muck was this afternoon officially declared an enemy alien, the order calling for his retention in jail pending further investigation of his case.

BORING PLAYERS TO LEAVE

SUN

ss: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK'S PAPERS SENT TO WASHINGTON

Boston, March 28.—Dr. Karl Muck will know within a day or two whether he is to be treated simply as an alien enemy and interned or will have to stand trial in the Federal Court on charges of violation of the Espionage act. Private papers seized at his home in the Fenway have been forwarded to Washington, it is understood, and the Boston Federal office expects to hear some word today. Meanwhile the Department of Justice officials here are silent.

Rumors yesterday that others would be arrested in connection with the case are neither confirmed nor denied. It was learned that in the Symphony Orchestra leader's private papers were found several names, and these persons are being investigated. Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, who is in charge of all alien enemy investigations in this district, says that he was not prepared to say whether any more arrests would be made or not. He said that the investigation was still being conducted.

Dr. Muck was served with meals purchased from a dairy lunch near the East Cambridge jail today. His wife visited him yesterday. He appears cheerful.

om TIMES

dress New York City

te

PPROVES MUCK'S ARREST.

Department of Justice Considered His Presence Dangerous.

BOSTON, March 28.—The Department of Justice at Washington, in a telegram today to United States Marshal John J. Mitchell, approved the course of Federal officials here in arresting Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that his presence at large was a danger to the peace and safety of the country.

Beyond announcing receipt of the telegram the Marshal refused to say what disposition would be made of the case. District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants also declined to say whether plans were being considered for Dr. Muck's immediate internment.

Dr. Muck is being held in the Cambridge Jail as an enemy alien.

Judd Dewey, Assistant District Attorney, in charge of enemy alien investigations today denied widely circulated reports that the arrest of Dr. Muck was due to information furnished by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dewey said that he had heard nothing to substantiate reports of professional jealousies in the organization or trouble among the musicians.

Mrs. John L. Gardner, a Boston society woman, visited Dr. Muck today and gave him a detailed account of the concert Tuesday night, which he was unable to conduct because of his arrest.

om WORLD

ddress: New York City

te

MAY SEIZE MUCK'S PROPERTIES HERE

$50,000 Home May Be Taken—Back Bay Hears of Radio Outfit.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, March 29.—Washington authorities have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of the leads discovered among the musician's documents. The question of disposing of Dr. Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility the Government will seize his securities as well as his $50,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers says that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claims that he is an alien enemy, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussion in the Back Bay to-day developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities decline to discuss this report.

Dr. Muck is still in the East Cambridge jail and is fast becoming used to smoking a pipe. To-day some of his friends sent him a bag of pretzels, of which he is fond.

ss: New York City

MAR 30 1918

WIFE SEEKS TO PROVE DR. MUCK SWISS CITIZEN

Mrs. Muck Making Effort to Gain Freedom for Her Husband in Jail.

The wife of Dr. Karl Muck, jailed director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in New York trying to enlist the aid of friends here in preventing the internment of her husband by the United States Government as a dangerous enemy alien.

Dr. Muck still occupies a cell in the Boston jail, and the only word that has come from the State Department at Washington has been one of approval of the act of the Boston federal authorities in taking the Royal Prussian Music director into custody.

One of the objects of Mrs. Muck's trip to New York, it is said, is to try to establish the alleged Swiss citizenship of her husband, who was born in Germany.

Mrs. Muck conferred with Hans Sulzer, head of the Swiss Legation at Washington, who was in New York and at the Vanderbilt Hotel.

After the conference with Mr. Sulzer Mrs. Muck refused to make any statement. Mr. Sulzer has left New York for Washington and refused to comment upon the situation regarding Dr. Muck. It was admitted by members of his staff that the citizenship of the musician was the subject discussed.

Mrs. William Jay, who was active in the agitation to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting the Boston Symphony at its recent appearance in this city, said that the establishing of Swiss citizenship by Dr. Muck would have no bearing at all upon the opposition to his activities.

"It has long been established that a German may be of any citizenship and still work incessantly for the ends of Germany, without a thought of duty to the country of which he has become a citizen," she said. Dr. Muck is a friend of the Kaiser, is utterly pro-German and has no right to be permitted to go about this country at will, much less direct one of its large musical organizations."

EVENING WORLD

s: New York City.

18

MAY SEIZE MUCK'S PROPERTIES HERE

$50,000 Home May Be Taken—Back Bay Hears of Radio Outfit.

BOSTON, March 30.—Washington authorities have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of the leads discovered among the musician's documents. The question of disposing of Dr. Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility the Government will seize his securities as well as his $50,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers says that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claims that he is an alien enemy, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussion in the Back Bay to-day developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities decline to discuss this report.

EVENING JOURNAL

ss: New York.

MAR 29 1918

MUCK MAY FIGHT INTERNMENT ORDER

Major Higginson's Attorney Visits Imprisoned Enemy Alien in Boston Jail.

By International News Service.

Boston, March 29.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now under the classification of "enemy alien" following an order from United States Attorney General Gregory, who said he considered the leader a danger to the public peace and safety of the country.

Under his new status Dr. Muck is ostracized by society here, and officials say he probably will be removed to a "hygienic" place. Strong hints of further arrests continued, but authorities say no American citizen is suspected.

Indication of a fight in Dr. Muck's case has been given. He was visited in jail by C. R. Clapp, attorney for Major Higginson, supporter of the Boston orchestra. Clapp declared that the leader does not consider himself an alien enemy.

n NEW YORK HERALD

ress New York City

Federal Officials Consider Seizure of Muck's Property

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Doktor Karl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it again is reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which already have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not been settled, but there is a possibility that the government will seize his securities, as well as his $30,000 residence in the Fenway.

Federal officers say the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's assertion that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and officials already have declared that he does.

It developed to-day that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Doktor Muck's place, is a registered enemy alien—a German. He registered here under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States government.

EVENING SUN

ss: New York City

DR. MUCK'S HOME MAY BE SEIZED BY GOVERNMENT

His Successor as Symphony Leader Found Listed as German.

Boston, March 30.—Federal authorities here are making preparations, it is said, in regard to the disposal of the property of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is being held at the East Cambridge Jail under the espionage act. It is said that the Government is likely to seize his securities and $30,000 home in the Fenway under the Alien Property act.

Federal officials say that Dr. Muck is not entitled to contest the Government's assertion that he is an alien enemy, beyond submitting proof that he does not come under the President's proclamation, and officials have already decided that he does. Secret Service agents are investigating further into the affairs of the musician, and it is rumored that other arrests may be made as a result of information gleaned from papers seized when Dr. Muck was arrested.

It developed last night that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in place of Dr. Muck, is listed as an alien enemy. Schmidt is a German and registered here under the recent compulsory regulations.

Government

...it is a satisfaction at ... arrest of Dr. Muck, which, accord-reliable testimony, was due several hs ago. It is significant that no deof the charge of disloyalty ever was e by the orchestral director himself, disclaimers coming from those to m his admission of expressed unwillness to direct the playing of our na-al anthem would have meant heavy ancial loss.

We are proud that our city is on ord as having refused to listen to Boston Symphony Orchestra under leadership of Dr. Muck.

84

om TELEGRAM

ddress: New York City.

ate

START WITH DR. MUCK.

It is reported from Washington that Dr. Muck is held, pending further investigation, on a Presidential warrant issued through the Department of Justice.

For a year or more rumor was busy with the name of Karl Muck as an active German agent, and this has been revived within a few days.

That Dr. Muck is a citizen of Switzerland is said to be vouched for by Mr. Sulzer, the Swiss Minister, but even so Department of Justice officials admit receipt of reports from operatives at Boston were of such nature as to render the conductor's detention advisable.

It is certainly time to commence a round-up of enemies, and why it has been delayed passes comprehension.

m EAGLE

ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

ate

GLAD OF MUCK'S ARREST.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

Rejoice, and I say again, rejoice. And all patriotic Americans will rejoice with me, and congratulate Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Carolyn Kate Wright and Supreme Court Justice Ingraham on the outcome of the agitation to secure the apprehension of Dr. Karl Muck as an enemy alien.

Now it remains to be seen how he will be disposed of. Why interne him at our expense during the war? Why not deport him so that he may join his much-beloved Kaiser?

JAMES H. WILLIAMSON.
23 Renmore Place.

om TIMES

dress New York City

e

KARL MUCK IS OUT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

Management Accepts Resignation of Conductor Under Arrest as an Enemy Alien.

BOSTON, Mass., March 30.—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced tonight that the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted. Dr. Muck was arrested by Federal officers last Monday night under the Enemy Alien act, and is at present confined in the jail at East Cambridge. It is understood that the resignation, which was offered last January when Dr. Muck was under a fire of criticism for alleged refusal to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts, will be effective at the close of the orchestra's regular season on May 4, when his contract expires. At present Ernest Schmidt, the assistant conductor, is leading the orchestra.

Dr. Muck made his first appearance with the orchestra in 1906. His work created such a favorable impression that special permission was obtained from Emperor William of Germany in 1912 to have him undertake the leadership of the organization for four years. At the end of this period his leave of absence from Berlin was again extended.

n SUN

ress: New York City.

MAR 3 1 191

DR. MUCK OUT OF ORCHESTRA.

Resignation Accepted of Boston's Director, Who Is in Jail.

BOSTON, March 30.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced to-night that the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted. Dr. Muck was arrested last Monday under the enemy alien act and is confined in the jail at East Cambridge.

The resignation, offered last January when Dr. Muck was under criticism for alleged refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at concerts, will be effective at the close of the orchestra's season, May 4, when his contract expires. Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor, is leading the orchestra.

TELEGRAM

New York City.

MUCK SEIZURE BRINGS WIDE PLOT TO LIGHT

New Wireless System, Said To Be Used by Agents in New England for Dampening War Spirit, Under Investigation by Federal Agents.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING TELEGRAM.]

BOSTON, Sunday.—The investigation of a new system of wireless telegraphy, presumably used by German agents, and the clandestine distribution of treasonable literature is being followed up here by federal agents in connection with the detention of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the arrest of Dr. Karl Oskar Bertling, of New York and Lexington, Mass., formerly an officer in the German Army. Dr. Muck has resigned from his post as director of the Symphony Orchestra, and his resignation has been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson.

It is expected that a third arrest will soon be made, this time of a nationally prominent German, on the charge of giving secret assistance to the enemies of the United States.

Left New York Suddenly.

Dr. Bertling was taken into custody at Lexington. While in New York he maintained a residence at No. 109 East Twenty-fourth street, but was forced to vacate the premises when they were made untenable by fire. Bertling charged that the house was set afire by British agents, who had robbed his apartments and seized his private papers.

Dr. Bertling has been living on Bedford street, Lexington, with Walter A. Seymore and his family. The house is in a secluded location back from the street, in a grove of pine trees. It is close to the Bedford line. The police were unaware that Bertling lived in Lexington, so quiet has he kept.

For some time residents of Lexington and Bedford have been suspicious about Bertling's conduct, and it is believed that complaints about him have previously been made to the federal authorities. There is a telephone in the Seymore house, but it is not listed in the telephone directory.

Away Much of the Time.

According to prsons living in the vicinity, Dr. Bertling was away from Lexington much of the time. He was almost never at home on Sundays and holidays, and spent about three days out of each week away from his home. Where he went or what he was doing he never divulged to those who at various times conversed with him. He always appeared to be busy, but he was extremely secretive about what kept him so.

The mysterious new system of wireless telegraphy discovered, it is said, has been used by German agents in various New England towns and possibly in Boston.

According to information obtained by the newspaper men, the new system includes indoor antennae, which with the remainder of the wireless apparatus is concealed in a secret room in houses located in sequestered places. In this way there are no aerials for secret service operatives or others to discover, and the noise made by the powerful sending apparatus is drowned out by chopping wood, running a gasolene pumping engine or by other means.

NEW YORK HERALD

s New York City

MAR 3 1 1918

Muck Resignation Is Accepted by Major Higginson

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Saturday.—It was learned to-day that the resignation of Doktor Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been accepted by Major Henry L. Higginson. The resignation, which was offered by Doktor Muck at the time of "The Star Spangled Banner" incident, was accepted by Major Higginson on March 6, to take effect on May 4, when the present series of concerts ends.

Doktor Muck is held as an enemy alien in the East Cambridge jail. The tickets to the present series here and in other cities were sold last spring and summer with the understanding that "a certain orchestra and a certain conductor" would take part, and for this reason the backers felt they could not drop either Doktor Muck or any part of the orchestra unless compelled by law.

With Dr. Karl Oskar Bertling lodged in the East Cambridge jail after his arrest at his home, in Lexington, last night, a well founded report was current that another "detention" soon is to occur, adding another prominent German to the list of those who have been taken into custody by the local federal authorities.

Dr. Bertling is an officer in the German army and was sent to America the day after war was declared in Europe for the avowed purpose of spreading German propaganda. Although the federal authorities say there is no connection between his arrest and that of Doktor Muck, it is believed their actions for Germany were of an almost identical nature.

om EAGLE

dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

e

MUCK OUT OF ORCHESTRA

Boston, Mass., March 30—The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced tonight that the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted. Dr. Muck was arrested by Federal officers last Monday night under the Enemy Alien act and is at present confined in the jail at East Cambridge. It is understood that the resignation, which was offered last January when Dr. Muck was under a fire of crisicism for alleged refusal to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts will be effective at the close of the orchestra's regular season on May 4, when his contract expires. At present Ernest Schmidt, the assistant conductor, is

om MORNING TELEGRAPH

dress: New York City

MUCK, IN PRISONER'S DOCK, NOT SO CHIPPER

Former Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Seems Glum—May Have Chance to Accept Sentence.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, April 1.

A marked change was seen in the manner of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Berlin and Boston Symphony orchestras, when he was brought to the Federal Building to-day for questioning by United States Attorney Thomas J. Boynton. The debonair manner which was so conspicuous during the first few days of his detention was entirely missing. He was uncommunicative, quiet and even sullen. Though a week ago he was permitted to sit on the bench, to-day he was placed in the iron cage. He refused to talk with United States Marshal Backus on the ride from the East Cambridge Jail, and maintained this demeanor throughout. This questioning followed examination of Dr. Muck's papers.

If the authorities have direct charges that Muck has violated the original code, it is likely that a proposition will be made to him to accept sentence without trial, with the understanding that the term will be shorter than if he be tried and found guilty. Papers seized in two recent raids show that women have been more or less active in alleged anti-American activities. The authorities would not connect them with the cases of Dr. Muck and Dr. Karl Bertling, who was arrested late last week. Bertling was arrested when it appeared he was about to leave the country. His home at Lexington is described as a "house of mystery."

Officers, watching the Bertling home, reported last Thursday night that they saw Bertling and another man loading bags, porteman'eaux and bundles into an automobile. Bertling's arrest followed soon after. The other man is an American citizen, and the authorities are anxious to reach and question him.

om TRIBUNE

dress: New York City

APR 2 1918

Oust Stransky as Pro-German, Plea To Philharmonic

Editor Who Aided Attack on Muck Demands Conductor's Removal

A definite demand for the resignation of Josef Stransky as conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra on the ground of pro-Germanism was made at the annual meeting of the Philharmonic Society's board of directors at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The demand was made by Richard Fletcher, editor of "The Chronicle," in a letter to Mrs. George L. Cheney, one of the directors of the society.

Mr. Fletcher, who acted as secretary to Mrs. William Jay in her recent effort to prevent Karl Muck from directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York, wrote as follows:

"I beg to ask you, as one of the directors of the New York Philharmonic, to present this suggestion—that Josef Stransky be called on to resign. I am actuated by no personal sentiments, and I am merely convinced that now is the time for every true American to stamp out whatever Teuton influence there remains in this country. This means winning the war, and in the wake of the case of Doktor Muck, a friend of Mr. Stransky, there can be no choice.

"I have been told that Mr. Stransky's box at the Philharmonic has been visited by Lady Speyer, whose sympathies are known to be German, and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger, whose name has been published in connection with two questionable incidents. I am also taking the liberty of saying to you that both Eugen Ysaye and Verbrugger, Belgians and allies, would be honored to lead the Philharmonic."

No action was taken on Mr. Fletcher's letter. Mrs. Jay's resignation as a Philharmonic director was accepted and Howard Taylor was elected in her place. It is believed that Mrs. Jay's resignation was due to her dissatisfaction with the continuance of Mr. Stransky as conductor.

Mr. Stransky has taken out first citizenship papers and declares that he is a Czecho-Slav. He recently told a Tribune reporter that he stood with President Wilson, but that he does not believe that Austria ought to be dismembered.

A New York newspaper man declares that shortly after the war broke out in 1914 Mr. Stransky told him that he had offered his services to Austria and was sorry that they were not accepted. When told of this charge yesterday Mr. Stransky denied that he had ever made any such statement. A photograph was recently published in New York newspapers showing Mrs. Stransky, former Ambassador von Bernstorff and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger standing in a group.

om EVENING WORLD

ddress: New York City. 1918

ate

TRY TO LINK MUCK WITH PROPAGANDA

Federal Agents Tracing His Relations With Bertling—On Trail of Secret Wireless.

BOSTON, April 1.—Officials of the Department of Justice are trying to learn whether there was any connection in the work of German propaganda between Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar Bertling, both of whom are being detained as alien enemies.

Dr. Bertling has received degrees from Harvard University and is said to have been in this country as a special agent of the German Government, coming here soon after the opening of the war.

It is said that the Government is still investigating a number of fires of mysterious origin which have occurred in this State, but whether Dr Bertling has come under suspicion in connection with them officials refuse to say.

A new system of wireless telegraphy has been used by German agents in New England and possibly in Boston, it was learned to-day.

om EVENING STAR

dress: Washington, D. C.

APR 30 1918

e

Investigation apparently shows that something more than Dr. Muck's artistic sensibilities made him reluctant about playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

om TRIBUNE

ldress: New York City

te

Dr. Muck Under Fire By Federal Official

Taken From Jail and Subjected to Long Questioning

[Special Correspondence]

BOSTON, April 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Berlin and Boston Symphony orchestras, was taken from the East Cambridge jail to-day to the office of United States Attorney Thomas Boynton and questioned at length by United States Attorney Judd Dewey. It is presumed the questioning resulted from the examination of Dr. Muck's papers.

Dr. Muck was placed in the iron cage at the Federal Building; a week ago he was allowed to sit on the bench. The sprightly manner, he adopted during the early days of his arrest, was missing to-day.

Dr. Muck refused to talk with United States Marshal Backus on the ride from the jail. In the cage he was quiet, even sullen. If the authorities have direct charges that he has violated United States laws, it is likely that a proposition will be made to him to accept sentence without trial, with the understanding that the term will be shorter than if tried and found guilty.

Papers seized in two recent raids show that women had been more or less active in alleged anti-American work. The authorities could not connect them with the cases of Dr. Muck or Dr. Karl Bertling, who was arrested late last week. Dr. Bertling was arrested when it appeared he was about to leave the country. His home is described as a "house of mystery."

Officers watching the Bertling home report that last Thursday night they saw him and another man loading bags and bundles into an automobile. Bertling's arrest followed soon after.

The other man is an American citizen and the authorities are anxious to question him.

rom WORLD
ddress: New York City
APR 1 - 1918
ate

TRY TO LINK MUCK WITH PROPAGANDA

Federal Agents Tracing His Relations With Bertling—On Trail of Secret Wireless.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, March 31.—Officials of the Department of Justice are trying to learn whether there was any connection in the work of German propaganda between Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar Bertling, both of whom are being detained as alien enemies.

Dr. Bertling has received degrees from Harvard University and is said to have been in this country as a special agent of the German Government, coming here soon after the opening of the war.

It is said that the Government is still investigating a number of fires of mysterious origin which have occurred in this State, but whether Dr. Bertling has come under suspicion in connection with them officials refuse to say.

A new system of wireless telegraphy has been used by German agents in New England and possibly in Boston, it was learned to-day.

The system consists of indoor antennae, which, with the remainder of the apparatus, are concealed in a secret rom in houses located in sequestered places. In this way there are no aerials for secret service operatives or others to discover, and the noise made by the powerful sending apparatus is drowned out by chopping wood, running a gasoline pumping engine or other means.

The system is believed to be the latest development in wireless communication discovered by German agents who have been working since the beginning of the war to thwart the United States Secret Service and the Intelligence Departments of the army and navy.

m TIMES
ress: New York City

GRILL DR. MUCK FOR 3 HOURS

Federal Authorities Bring Conductor from Jail for Questioning.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, who had been confined in the East Cambridge jail since last Tuesday under the Enemy Alien act, was taken to the Federal Building today, where he was questioned for three hours by United States District Attorney Boynton and special agents of the United States Bureau of Investigation. Later he was returned to the jail.

C. J. Foley, representing Manager Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached the office of the United States Marshal and waited until Dr. Muck was through with the examination. There were a few transactions between Mr. Foley and Dr. Muck, after which the latter went into the prisoners' cage to eat his luncheon.

Upon his return from the conference at Mr. Boynton's office, Dr. Muck was nervous and seemed to have lost a great deal of the care-free appearance which he had earlier in the day. Assistant District Attorney Dewey stated tonight that there was nothing to be made public as to the conference.

City
2 191
r Fire Official and Sub-Ques-nce]
Karl Muck,
and Bos-was taken ail to-day s Attorney tioned at torney Judd uestioning ion of Dr.
iron cage week ago
he bench.
opted dyrrest, was ith United ride from uiet, even ave direct ed United a proposicept sen-e under-e shorter y.
ent raids more or American
not con-
Dr. Muck arrested was aras about e is dey." ng home ght they loading tomobile.
after.
ican citixious to n TIMES

ress New York City
APR

STRANSKY ATTACKED AS KARL MUCK WAS

Philharmonic Conductor Defended as Pro-Ally, and Society Takes No Action on Letter.

It became known yesterday, following the Philharmonic Society's annual meeting at the executive offices in Carnegie Hall, that Mrs. William Jay, who was recently active in the campaign against Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had resigned from the Philharmonic directorate, and that a similar attack had now been made upon Josef Stransky, leader of the Philharmonic.

Mrs. George L. Cheney, one of two women members now on the Directors' board, presented at the meeting a letter received by her calling on the Philharmonic to follow the Boston Symphony and other orchestras in dismissing foreign conductors hitherto active in America. No action was taken on the letter, but Secretary Leifels said after the meeting that Conductor Stransky was born in Bohemia and was "pro-ally" in the war.

Under President Wilson's proclamation regarding the Bohemians or Czecho-Slavs, some of whom are now fighting on the side of the Allies, the United States Government has not held persons of that nationality as enemy aliens, though they are Austrian subjects, Mr. Leifels said.

"Mr. Stransky," he added, "has conducted under our service flag all season; he has played in the national army camps, and has been received as the guest of American officers there. He has applied for American citizenship, and the Directors believe that his conduct has been 'on the square.'"

The Directors at yesterday's meeting announced the election of several officers for next season, and of members of the Board of Directors for five years to come. The office of President, from which Oswald Garrison Villard resigned on Jan. 4 last, was not filled at this time.

The officers re-elected were: Vice President Richard Arnold, Secretary Felix F. Leifels, and the new Treasurer Henry E. Cooper. Mr. Cooper has been acting Treasurer since the retirement of Rudolf E. E. Flinsch on Jan. 16, soon after Mr. Villard.

Mrs. Cheney, Messrs. Arnold and Cooper were re-elected for a five-year term as members of the board, numbering fifteen in all. Howard Taylor was also elected for a full term, having become a member of the board three weeks ago, on the resignation of Mrs. Jay.

Among the Philharmonic Directors, other than those elected yesterday, are Miss Anne D. Duane, and Messrs. Arthur Curtiss James, F. W. Krafft, Thomas L. Leeming, Ludwig Manoly, Robert Alfred Shaw, Nelson S. Spencer, and Clarence Mott Woolley.

TRIBUNE
s: New York City

There is no longer any controversy about the name Cocoanut Grove. Elliott, Comstock and Gest have voluntarily abandoned the name out of courtesy to the wishes of Florenz Ziegfeld, jr. The resort on top of the Century will be known as the Century Grove.

"The Dramatic Mirror," which has always dealt with the stage in an interesting manner, has changed hands, but the new management announces that it will continue to cover the drama as well as the films.

Following the arrest of Karl Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a movement has been set on foot to eliminate all German and Austrian artists still belonging to the Metropolitan Opera Company. Unless peace should come before the opening of the next opera season, it is altogether probable that none of these artists will be allowed to remain in the company, as the feeling against their continuance is increasing.

The artists who would be affected are Artur Bodanzky, the Austrian conductor; Mme. Frieda Hempel, Mme. Margaret Matzenauer, Max Bloch, Robert nhardt and about eighteen mem- s of the chorus. It is not that any hese have committed overt acts, but ply that with the growing bitter- against things German, it is con- red improper to continue any en- aliens on the roster of the opera pany.

e Metropolitan last season dis- ged or refused to reëngage a num- of its German singers. These in- d Mme. Johanna Gadski, Otto tz, Mme. Margarete Ober, Her- Weil and Carl Braun. Mme. is at present suing the opera any for breach of contract. The ation of Austrian artists will urge the company of all alien enemies. Exceptions probably will be made of Polish or Bohemian artists. Richard Ordynsky, the stage director of the company, is an Austrian Pole, but, like all patriotic Poles, is intensely pro-Ally.

WORLD
ess: New York City
APR 2 - 1918

SUGGESTS TO PHILHARMONIC THAT STRANSKY BE DROPPED

Letter Read to Directors, Who Take No Action—It Referred to Conductor's Nationality.

At a meeting of the directors of the Philharmonic Society yesterday a letter from Richard Fletcher to Mrs. George L. Cheney was read suggesting that the society drop Josef Stransky as conductor and mentioning several men as possible successors. The writer referred to Mr. Stransky's nationality.

Mrs. Cheney, a director, was prompted to inquire why the letter was addressed to her and who the writer might be. No action was taken.

Felix Leiffels, Secretary of the society, later said that Mr. Stransky is a Czech, some of whom are fighting with the Allies. Mr. Stransky, he said, has been conducting under the service flag, has played at army camps and is on the square and is satisfactory.

Mrs. William Jay, who started an agitation against Dr. Muck of the Boston orchestra, resigned from the Philhafmonic board three weeks ago. Howard Taylor was elected to fill her place. Mrs. George Cheney, Richard Arnold and Henry E. Cooper were re-elected directors for five years. No President was chosen to succeed Oswald G. Villard. Richard Arnold was re-elected Vice President, Felix Leiffels, Secretary and Henry Cooper, Treasurer.

Eve Eagle
March 27, 1918

Dr. Karl Muck is getting his just deserts. I met last evening a Boston woman who has known Muck ever since his arrival in this country and was one of his most liberal supporters as a musical leader. Until he assumed an attitude of hostility to the people of the United States and to their cause, she was his defender; but now she has only words of reprobation and contempt for a vainglorious pedant who has turned his back upon the country that adopted him when he was poverty stricken, unknown and unappreciated. When Muck arrived in Boston he is alleged to have been actually suffering from malnutrition. He was so impoverished that his wife had to do her own washing and cooking in a very small apartment. He was taken up by some music lovers in Boston and was pushed forward until he became the head of one of the most prominent orchestras in this country. He is now rich and scorns the country in which he has found this prosperity and the people who gave popular recognition to his talents! His conduct goes much further than personal ingratitude to those who helped him to the prominence he now occupies. He has been pronounced disloyal by a legal official and is under arrest. He will probably be deported, which will be very distasteful to him, according to general belief, despite a recent application of his agent for passports to leave the country.

m VARIETY,
lress: New York Cit

DR. MUCK HELD.

Boston, March 27.

Dr. Carl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was lodged in the East Cambridge jail Tuesday night and will be held there until after certain information which has been forwarded to Washington by agents of the Department of Justice here has been investigated.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home Monday night after conducting a long rehearsal and spent the night in a police station. The next morning he was taken to the Federal building and after an examination was sent to the jail to await further developments.

Manager C. A. Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was one of the few persons allowed to talk with Dr Muck. Mrs. John L. Gardner, one of Boston's prominent society women also called at the Federal building during the forenoon and left a parcel for Dr. Muck. She waved her hand gaily at him when leaving the building.

Dr. Muck, who has been the principal director of the Royal Opera in Berlin, first came to this city to lead the Symphony Orchestra in 1906 and remained here two years. He returned in 1912 and has been head of the orchestra since that time. Last November it was asserted Dr. Muck had refused to lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence. Soon after the Providence incident he began the custom of leading the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the Symphony concerts in this city.

For some time the citizenship of Dr Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion. It is generally believed tha while the holder of Swiss papers he i a Prussian. Dr. Muck's father, whe the former was six or eight years old went to the Canton of Zug and ob tained by purchase papers entitlin him to Swiss citizenship.

n SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.

MUCK HAD WIRELESS STATION, IS RUMOR

Another Arrest May Follow Disclosures In Documents Of Boston Symphony Leader.

Boston, March 30.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Carl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the Government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claim that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussions of the case in the Back Bay today developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities declined to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interesting speculation.

Another interesting fact that is creating considerable comment developed today when it became known that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dr. Muck's place, is a registered enemy alien—a German. He registered here under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States Government.

ENQUIRER
ess Philadelphia, Pa.

GOVERNMENT MAY SEIZE MUCK'S BOSTON HOME

Effort Made to Connect the Musical Conductor With a Wireless Plant

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., March 29.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation in Dr. Carl Muck's alleged pro-German activities and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's claim that he is an enemy alien beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation and the government has already declared that he does.

Discussions of the case in the Back Bay today developed rumor of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities declined to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interesting speculation.

Another interesting fact that is creating considerable comment developed today when it became known that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dr. Muck's place, is a registered enemy alien—a German. He registered here under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States Government.

EVENING SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

MUCK HAD WIRELESS STATION, IS RUMOR

Another Arrest May Follow Disclosures In Documents Of Boston Symphony Leader.

Boston, March 30.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Carl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the Government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claim that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussions of the case in the Back Bay today developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities declined to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interesting speculation.

Another interesting fact that is creating considerable comment developed today when it became known that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dr. Muck's place, is a registered enemy

PUBLIC LEDGER
ress Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 31 1918

Are We at Last to Deal With Home Foes?

One can but rejoice when men known to be heart and soul with this country's foes are placed, regardless of naturalization or other quibbles, where they will do least harm. We have been pitifully slow in realizing the harm which German propagandists have caused among us, and the weakening effect that their insidious work has had upon the morale of our people. Far less injurious were the flamboyant attacks of the Von Bernstorffs, the Dernburgs, the Munsterbergs than are these burrowings, things said or written under cover of other topics that reach the ears unprepared to resist the poison of disloyalty, gatherings of disaffected men who, under cloak of other interests, get in their work of disintegration; articles calculated to create unrest with the masses and set them against the work of defense, thus indirectly affecting an already tense situation.

These are the reptilian tactics that have followed the frontal attacks of the discharged, accredited agents of the enemies of our western civilization. Under the cloak of music, Doctor Muck has traveled far and wide over this country. Under the cloak of a Swiss citizenship he doubtless has counted on his immunity. It has long been said that he used these for doubtful purposes. This remains to be proved publicly. Meantime it was well to disarm him, pending a decision.

Only once did he openly show his hand in the light of day, doubtless betrayed into revealing his true feeling by the overwhelming popularity n for him by his great talent. That mistake has focused upon him searchlights of every truly loyal izen of this country.

We have been very lenient with our o-German friends, because in the ree years of our official neutrality have become accustomed to acowledge men's right to a difference opinion and with true American lsser-faire we have not troubled ourlves much about their acts, unless om time to time brought to our otice by explosions, sinking of ships, arson and other "accidents."

We Are at War. Must Stand by Our Own

But today WE ARE AT WAR. This means that we as a nation have sent our young men—your sons and mine—to defend this country against aggressions that are threatening its very existence as an independent power on land and sea. As a nation our duty is to stand by that army composed of our sons; to stand back of it like a stone wall, upon which they may depend, and to allow not a weak point in that stone wall that may impair its solidarity. A man's value here today cannot be judged by his talents or his popularity, but by his loyalty to our army. It is a case of your right hand. If it offend it must be cut off and cast away.

It seems difficult to awaken our people—even the mothers, fathers, sisters of our boys—to the stern responsibility now weighing upon them. Singularly thoughtless are those who have remained at home and whose duty it is to see to it that "home" is kept safe for those boys whom we have sent yonder to fight our fight and to die for our rights. Yet it seems a simple, if peremptory, duty. It cannot be performed if we coquette with our—their—enemies, with those emissaries, friends and sympathizers of the powers who seek the destruction of our young army and who are endeavoring at home to break down the unity of our public opinion and to destroy such efficiency as we are able to develop among our workers and factory hands.

rom WORLD
ddress: New York City
ate APR 1 - 1918

TRY TO LINK MUCK WITH PROPAGANDA

Federal Agents Tracing His Relations With Bertling—On Trail of Secret Wireless.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, March 31.—Officials of the Department of Justice are trying to learn whether there was any connection in the work of German propaganda between Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar Bertling, both of whom are being detained as alien enemies.

Dr. Bertling has received degrees from Harvard University and is said to have been in this country as a special agent of the German Government, coming here soon after the opening of the war.

It is said that the Government is still investigating a number of fires of mysterious origin which have occurred in this State, but whether Dr. Bertling has come under suspicion in connection with them officials refuse to say.

A new system of wireless telegraphy has been used by German agents in New England and possibly in Boston, it was learned to-day.

The system consists of indoor antennae, which, with the remainder of the apparatus, are conceoled in a secret rom in houses located in sequestered places. In this way there are no aerials for secret service operatives or others to discover, and the noise made by the powerful sending apparatus is drowned out by chopping wood, running a gasoline pumping engine or other means.

The system is believed to be the latest development in wireless communication discovered by German agents who have been working since the beginning of the war to thwart the United States Secret Service and the Intelligence Departments of the army and navy.

m TIMES
ress: New York City

GRILL DR. MUCK FOR 3 HOURS

Federal Authorities Bring Conductor from Jail for Questioning.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, who had been confined in the East Cambridge jail since last Tuesday under the Enemy Alien act, was taken to the Federal Building today, where he was questioned for three hours by United States District Attorney Boynton and special agents of the United States Bureau of Investigation. Later he was returned to the jail.

C. J. Foley, representing Manager Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached the office of the United States Marshal and waited until Dr. Muck was through with the examination. There were a few transactions between Mr. Foley and Dr. Muck, after which the latter went into the prisoners' cage to eat his luncheon.

Upon his return from the conference at Mr. Boynton's office, Dr. Muck was nervous and seemed to have lost a great deal of the care-free appearance which he had earlier in the day. Assistant District Attorney Dewey stated tonight that there was nothing to be made public as to the conference.

WORLD
ess: New York City
APR 2 - 1

SUGGESTS TO PHILHARMONI THAT STRANSKY BE DROPPE

Letter Read to Directors, Who Tak No Action—It Referred to Conductor's Nationality.

At a meeting of the directors of the Philharmonic Society yesterday a letter from Richard Fletcher to Mrs. George L. Cheney was read suggesting that the society drop Josef Stransky as conductor and mentioning several men as possible successors. The writer referred to Mr. Stransky's nationality.

Mrs. Cheney, a director, was prompted to inquire why the letter was addressed to her and who the writer might be. No action was taken.

Felix Leiffels, Secretary of the society, later said that Mr. Stransky is a Czech, some of whom are fighting with the Allies. Mr. Stransky, he said, has been conducting under the service flag, has played at army camps and is on the square and is satisfactory.

Mrs. William Jay, who started an agitation against Dr. Muck of the Boston orchestra, resigned from the Philhafmonic board three weeks ago. Howard Taylor was elected to fill her place. Mrs. George Cheney, Richard Arnold and Henry E. Cooper were re-elected directors for five years. No President was chosen to succeed Oswald G. Villard. Richard Arnold was re-elected Vice President, Felix Leiffels, Secretary and Henry Cooper, Treasurer.

n TIMES
ress New York City
APR

STRANSKY ATTACKED AS KARL MUCK WAS

Philharmonic Conductor Defended as Pro-Ally, and Society Takes No Action on Letter.

1884

It became known yesterday, following the Philharmonic Society's annual meeting at the executive offices in Carnegie Hall, that Mrs. William Jay, who was recently active in the campaign against Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had resigned from the Philharmonic directorate, and that a similar attack had now been made upon Josef Stransky, leader of the Philharmonic.

Mrs. George L. Cheney, one of two women members now on the Directors' board, presented at the meeting a letter received by her calling on the Philharmonic to follow the Boston Symphony and other orchestras in dismissing foreign conductors hitherto active in America. No action was taken on the letter, but Secretary Leifels said after the meeting that Conductor Stransky was born in Bohemia and was "proally" in the war.

Under President Wilson's proclamation regarding the Bohemians or Czecho-Slavs, some of whom are now fighting on the side of the Allies, the United States Government has not held persons of that nationality as enemy aliens, though they are Austrian subjects, Mr. Leifels said.

"Mr. Stransky," he added, "has conducted under our service flag all season; he has played in the national army camps, and has been received as the guest of American officers there. He has applied for American citizenship, and the Directors believe that his conduct has been 'on the square.'"

The Directors at yesterday's meeting announced the election of several officers for next season, and of members of the Board of Directors for five years to come. The office of President, from which Oswald Garrison Villard resigned on Jan. 4 last, was not filled at this time.

The officers re-elected were: Vice President Richard Arnold, Secretary Felix F. Leifels, and the new Treasurer Henry E. Cooper. Mr. Cooper has been acting Treasurer since the retirement of Rudolf E. F. Flinsch on Jan. 16, soon after Mr. Villard.

Mrs. Cheney, Messrs. Arnold and Cooper were re-elected for a five-year term as members of the board, numbering fifteen in all. Howard Taylor was also elected for a full term, having become a member of the board three weeks ago, on the resignation of Mrs. Jay.

Among the Philharmonic Directors, other than those elected yesterday, are Miss Anne D. Duane, and Messrs. Arthur Curtiss James, F. W. Krafft, Thomas L. Leeming, Ludwig Manoly, Robert Alfred Shaw, Nelson S. Spencer, and Clarence Mott Woolley.

TRIBUNE
s: New York City

There is no longer any controversy about the name Cocoanut Grove. Elliott, Comstock and Gest have voluntarily abandoned the name out of courtesy to the wishes of Florenz Ziegfeld, jr. The resort on top of the Century will be known as the Century Grove.

"The Dramatic Mirror," which has always dealt with the stage in an interesting manner, has changed hands, but the new management announces that it will continue to cover the drama as well as the films.

Following the arrest of Karl Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a movement has been set on foot to eliminate all German and Austrian artists still belonging to the Metropolitan Opera Company. Unless peace should come before the opening of the next opera season, it is altogether probable that none of these artists will be allowed to remain in the company, as the feeling against their continuance is increasing.

The artists who would be affected are Artur Bodanzky, the Austrian conductor; Mme. Frieda Hempel, Mme. Margaret Matzenauer, Max Bloch, Robert Leonhardt and about eighteen members of the chorus. It is not that any of these have committed overt acts, but simply that with the growing bitterness against things German, it is considered improper to continue any enemy aliens on the roster of the opera company.

The Metropolitan last season discharged or refused to reëngage a number of its German singers. These included Mme. Johanna Gadski, Otto Goritz, Mme. Margarete Ober, Hermann Weil and Carl Braun. Mme. Ober is at present suing the opera company for breach of contract. The elimination of Austrian artists will purge the company of all alien enemies. Exceptions probably will be made of Polish or Bohemian artists. Richard Ordynsky, the stage director of the company, is an Austrian Pole, but, like all patriotic Poles, is intensely pro-Ally.

Rochester Eagle
March 27, 1918

Dr. Karl Muck is getting his just deserts. I met last evening a Boston woman who has known Muck ever since his arrival in this country and was one of his most liberal supporters as a musical leader. Until he assumed an attitude of hostility to the people of the United States and to their cause, she was his defender; but now she has only words of reprobation and contempt for a vainglorious pedant who has turned his back upon the country that adopted him when he was poverty stricken, unknown and unappreciated. When Muck arrived in Boston he is alleged to have been actually suffering from malnutrition. He was so impoverished that his wife had to do her own washing and cooking in a very small apartment. He was taken up by some music lovers in Boston and was pushed forward until he became the head of one of the most prominent orchestras in this country. He is now rich and scorns the country in which he has found this prosperity and the people who gave popular recognition to his talents! His conduct goes much further than personal ingratitude to those who helped him to the prominence he now occupies. He has been pronounced disloyal by a legal official and is under arrest. He will probably be deported, which will be very distasteful to him, according to general belief, despite a recent application of his agent for passports to leave the country.

m VARIETY,
lress: New York Cit

DR. MUCK HELD.

Boston, March 27.

Dr. Carl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was lodged in the East Cambridge jail Tuesday night and will be held there until after certain information which has been forwarded to Washington by agents of the Department of Justice here has been investigated.

Dr. Muck was arrested at his home Monday night after conducting a long rehearsal and spent the night in a police station. The next morning he was taken to the Federal building and after an examination was sent to the jail to await further developments.

Manager C. A. Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was one of the few persons allowed to talk with Dr. Muck. Mrs. John L. Gardner, one of Boston's prominent society women, also called at the Federal building during the forenoon and left a parcel for Dr. Muck. She waved her hand gaily at him when leaving the building.

Dr. Muck, who has been the principal director of the Royal Opera in Berlin, first came to this city to lead the Symphony Orchestra in 1906 and remained here two years. He returned in 1912 and has been head of the orchestra since that time. Last November it was asserted Dr. Muck had refused to lead the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence. Soon after the Providence incident he began the custom of leading the orchestra in playing "The Star Spangled Banner" at the Symphony concerts in this city.

For some time the citizenship of Dr Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion. It is generally believed tha while the holder of Swiss papers he i a Prussian. Dr. Muck's father, whe the former was six or eight years old went to the Canton of Zug and ob tained by purchase papers entitlin him to Swiss citizenship.

n SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.

MUCK HAD WIRELESS STATION, IS RUMOR

Another Arrest May Follow Disclosures In Documents Of Boston Symphony Leader.

Boston, March 30.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Carl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the Government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claim that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussions of the case in the Back Bay today developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities declined to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interesting speculation.

Another interesting fact that is creating considerable comment developed today when it became known that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dr. Muck's place, is a registered enemy alien—a German. He registered here under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States Government.

ENQUIRER
ess Philadelphia, Pa.

ERNMENT MAY SEIZE MUCK'S BOSTON HOME

Effort Made to Connect the Musical Conductor With a Wireless Plant

Special to The Inquirer.

BOSTON, Mass., March 29.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation in Dr. Carl Muck's alleged pro-German activities and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the government's claim that he is an enemy alien beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation and the government has already declared that he does.

Discussions of the case in the Back Bay today developed rumor of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities declined to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interesting speculation.

Another interesting fact that is creating considerable comment developed today when it became known that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dr. Muck's place, is a registered enemy alien—a German. He registered here under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States Government.

EVENING SUN
ess: Baltimore, Md.

MUCK HAD WIRELESS STATION, IS RUM

Another Arrest May Follow Di sures In Documents Of Boston Symphony Leader.

Boston, March 30.—The authorities at Washington have ordered a further investigation into Dr. Carl Muck's alleged pro-German activities, and it is again reported that another arrest will follow as the result of "leads" which have been discovered in the accused man's documents.

The question of disposing of Muck's property has not yet been settled, but there is a possibility that the Government will seize his securities as well as his $30,000 home in the Fenway.

Federal officers say that the prisoner is not entitled to contest the Government's claim that he is an enemy alien, beyond submitting proof that he does not come within the limitations of the President's proclamation, and the Government has already declared that he does.

Discussions of the case in the Back Bay today developed rumors of a wireless outfit which is said to have been operated in or from a Back Bay dwelling. Federal authorities declined to discuss this report in any way.

But at several society functions the reported wireless outfit has been and still is the subject of interesting speculation.

Another interesting fact that is creating considerable comment developed today when it became known that Ernst Schmidt, who is acting as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Dr. Muck's place, is a registered enemy alien—a German. He registered here under the recent compulsory regulations issued by the United States Government.

PUBLIC LEDGER
ress Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 31 1918

Are We at Last to Deal With Home Foes?

One can but rejoice when men known to be heart and soul with this country's foes are placed, regardless of naturalization or other quibbles, where they will do least harm. We have been pitifully slow in realizing the harm which German propagandists have caused among us, and the weakening effect that their insidious work has had upon the morale of our people. Far less injurious were the flamboyant attacks of the Von Bernstorffs, the Dernburgs, the Munsterbergs than are these burrowings, things said or written under cover of other topics that reach the ears unprepared to resist the poison of disloyalty, gatherings of disaffected men who, under cloak of other interests, get in their work of disintegration; articles calculated to create unrest with the masses and set them against the work of defense, thus indirectly affecting an already tense situation.

These are the reptilian tactics that have followed the frontal attacks of the discharged, accredited agents of the enemies of our western civilization. Under the cloak of music, Doctor Muck has traveled far and wide over this country. Under the cloak of a Swiss citizenship he doubtless has counted on his immunity. It has long been said that he used these for doubtful purposes. This remains to be proved publicly. Meantime it was well to disarm him, pending a decision.

Only once did he openly show his hand in the light of day, doubtless betrayed into revealing his true feeling by the overwhelming popularity won for him by his great talent. That one mistake has focused upon him the searchlights of every truly loyal citizen of this country.

We have been very lenient with our pro-German friends, because in the three years of our official neutrality we have become accustomed to acknowledge men's right to a difference of opinion and with true American laisser-faire we have not troubled ourselves much about their acts, unless from time to time brought to our notice by explosions, sinking of ships, arson and other "accidents."

We Are at War. Must Stand by Our Own

But today WE ARE AT WAR. This means that we as a nation have sent our young men—your sons and mine—to defend this country against aggressions that are threatening its very existence as an independent power on land and sea. As a nation our duty is to stand by that army composed of our sons; to stand back of it like a stone wall, upon which they may depend, and to allow not a weak point in that stone wall that may impair its solidarity. A man's value here today cannot be judged by his talents or his popularity, but by his loyalty to our army. It is a case of your right hand. If it offend it must be cut off and cast away.

It seems difficult to awaken our people—even the mothers, fathers, sisters of our boys—to the stern responsibility now weighing upon them. Singularly thoughtless are those who have remained at home and whose duty it is to see to it that "home" is kept safe for those boys whom we have sent yonder to fight our fight and to die for our rights. Yet it seems a simple, if peremptory, duty. It cannot be performed if we coquette with our—their—enemies, with those emissaries, friends and sympathizers of the powers who seek the destruction of our young army and who are endeavoring at home to break down the unity of our public opinion and to destroy such efficiency as we are able to develop among our workers and factory hands.

Post Apr 7, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

THREE COMPOSERS IN ENGAGING CONTRAST

Dvorak's Music of "The New World," Charpentier's "Impressions of Italy" and Debussy's "Clouds" as the Programme Neighbored Them and as the Years Sift Them—Mr. Schmidt, His Orchestra and His Audience

THE three pieces filling the concert of the Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon made interesting contrast each with each—Dvoràk's one enduring symphony, "From the New World"; the first of Debussy's Nocturnes—"Clouds"—played to the memory of the composer, dead ten days ago, and Charpentier's suite, "Impressions of Italy," now reestablished after long desuetude (as President Cleveland used to say) in the active repertory of the band. An audience of the usual quality, but of rather less than the usual numbers, heard this music with every sign of a pleasure rising highest with the Bohemian's symphony, falling lowest with the Parisian's Nocturne. Especially in the upper balcony, where the seats are sold for the day, was the listening company sparse—a circumstance readily explainable by the absence of many students on spring holidays. From every quarter of the hall, however, came clear evidence of an honest encouraging cordiality toward Mr. Schmidt. He was applauded when he came to his place as conductor and when he left it; while at each pause in the symphony, the clapping waxed until at the end he was twice recalled and finally brought the orchestra to its feet.

All this was no more than just desert to leader and men, since Dvoràk's frank and animated music lay well within his power, and the orchestra spared not in songful tone, bite of rhythm and transition and bright instrumental color. At the performance of The Matthew-Passion on Tuesday, there had been occasional and ominous signs of laxity in one or two of the choirs, as though one or another in them was careless of discipline and standards. Of this indifference hardly a trace remained yesterday. However difficult to follow Mr. Schmidt's beat may be, the orchestra returned him precision, pliancy and zeal. True, the Nocturne of Debussy went appreciably less well than it might and was relatively little clapped; for the intrinsic quality of such music somewhat evades the conductor's imagination, and he missed not a little of its poetry of matter and subtlety of procedure. On the other hand, with Charpentier's suite came clear sailing, eager interest and warm applause again—the more, perhaps, because Mr. Schmidt caught well the broad speech and the clear inflections of the music and seldom halted its spirited progress by too slow a pace. As the circumstances of the day went, the audience of Friday afternoons is disposed to accept him, with reasonable content, as conductor for the remainder of the season.

Moreover, whatever the relative quality of performance with the three pieces, it did not materially lessen the agreeable contrasts that severally and collectively they afforded. Nearly twenty-five years after the first performance of Dvoràk's symphony hardly any listener cares a pin whether negro folk song contributed to the character of the music, whether the voice of it is pure Czech, or whether, as is probably the golden mean of truth, the composer here and there distilled motives and progressions from the blacks through his own Bohemian individuality. Were it not for a dutifully reminding programme-book, scarcely a hearer nowadays would remember these ancient, withered controversies. As few, probably, meditated in the pauses of the symphony on the fact that a dozen years after Dvoràk's death little of his music outside it, two or three overtures, an occasional concerto and a few chamber pieces abides in the active repertory of American concert-rooms. Yet Dvoràk had uppiled no inconsiderable amount of musical baggage during a diligent lifetime. Recalling this sifting of the years, the reflective listener might speculate upon the "chances of life" (as the actuaries say) of such a music of instinct, practice, transparent voice and readily communicable mood as Dvoràk wrote with those of so meditated, cultivated, subtle and evasive a music as that of the Debussy who in the chances of the programme neighbored him. It is possible to believe that more of the Parisian's pieces will be current in the active repertory of 1935 than of the Bohemian's in the like repertory of 1918.

For most ears, however, the progress of this "New World" symphony is sufficiently engrossing in itself. In immediate appeal and pleasure to the average listener not even Chaikovsky's "Pathetic" may now excel it. Quickly Dvoràk expands his motives, into clear-voiced, full-bodied, freely flowing melodies. They are neither too sweet nor too austere; they fall not into many fragments, lose themselves in no intricate ramifications; progress, beat, modulation, color—all are vivid; there is no mistaking the mood and that mood is usually of instant, universal appeal. At bottom Dvoràk was a common man with an inborn aptitude for music-making. As he was, so unconsciously he expressed himself, while the average ear, the average sensibilities by music make corresponding response to him. The pleasure that the usual audience takes in the "New World" symphony is no caprice of the public taste, no compulsion of the achieving composer; it is only the common human tie that binds him and his hearers together. Above many a composer of far finer abilities, of ampler and longer enduring note, Dvoràk has here written a universal music. Yet, to the imaginative and exacting connoisseur, prone to be over-superior with this symphony, it yields pleasures. Be it a Czech or a quasi-American music, from the slow movement still exhales glamor of longing, penetrating song, heard remote over vast, empty, solitary spaces, until they vibrate to the passion of this calling, calling that will not be sated or stayed. So again, the first movement, the scherzo, the finale sometimes leap and glow as with the spring of a native wildness that will not down, be it, again, of Bohemia or of America. Dvoràk to the end was primitive man, who can bound as well as muse with his music.

Probably to that average hearer Charpentier's "Impressions of Italy" are nearly as frank and communicating a music. No ear may fall into confusions over the advancing and receding serenade of the first division, miss its Italian tang; while no very sharp imagination is necessary to discover in it the amorous mood that both caresses and bites. As clear are the processional progress and the tranquil vein—shepherd's song and the rest—of the second division. The succeeding movement is as frank of even rhythm and warm song, softened into twilight memories. The ensuing music of landscape and seascape in quivering expanse is broad, rich, glowing. The finale is almost nasal with Neapolitan song, strident with Neapolitan tumult and then, of a sudden, stilled and melancholy as with the great velvety expanse of sky and water in the crescent of the bay. Most imaginations, with perhaps a jog from the programme-book, may readily provide the slight Italian background that Charpentier's suite asks. Beyond peradventure, it is easily comprehensible, immediately likable music; yet in no wise does it engross the average ear as does Dvoràk's symphony. By his very nature, the Bohemian wrote an intuitive, a quasi-inspired music, whereas the Parisian merely did a sound and capable job in these Italian memoranda in tones. Moreover, to the connoisseur, who has his pleasure in some of the finer strokes and wilder moods of Dvoràk, Charpentier in this suite no less than in his music-dramas writes a somewhat coarse-fibred and obvious music, because it is his nature so to do. Such idiosyncrasy happens to heighten the illusion of picture, character and passion in the abiding "Louise." To what degree it could vitiate the matter in hand was apparent in the nearly forgotten "Julien."

Far alike from the Dvoràk of the "New World" symphony and the Charpentier of the "Impressions of Italy" is the Debussy of "Clouds." Perhaps no fitter memorial piece could have been chosen, unless Boston had still an opera house of its own and "Pelléas and Mélisande" were to retraverse the stage; for the Nocturne is epitome of not a few characteristic traits in a composer that we of his generation like fondly to believe will in his best work endure the years and the changeful likings of the sons and the daughters of men. As we of 1918 listened yesterday to a Dvoràk and a Charpentier of the long vanished nineties so may they of 1935 hear a Debussy of the "Clouds," of "The Afternoon of a Faun," of "The Sea," "Iberia," "Gigues," with a like pleasure in which there is as little condescension to another time, another manner. The years work their will, wanton, invincible, but it is the happy illusion of us of middle age who have known and cherished Debussy's music almost from the beginnings, that they will not still it. Surely the low, penetrating, diaphanous, endlessly modulated tones of "Clouds," the softly eating rhythms, the harmonies that are as shadows upon the faint melodic line, the pale timbres, the new inflections (as they once seemed) that are as impulses of a new tonal imagination, the new articulations in strange groups, euphonies, dissonances are not a manner to become the mode to be imitated, to pass, but the self-expression of an individual spirit searching out and compassing its own characteristic idiom.

As surely in that spirit dwelt a poetic imagery releasing itself in music, finding there its characteristic speech, when out of this Nocturne, seeming so slender, still and slow, rise the vision of clouds sailing the ether, melting into it, refashioning themselves as from their own vapors, changeful ever, softly luminous, caressing the eye, soothing the heart—a vision of dream in tones as filmy and iridescent. Few relatively are the ears and the sensibilities that take their pleasure in such an idiom and such a poetry beside the many which the comparative prose and platitude of Dvoràk and Charpentier delight; but each generation, while it breeds its multitudes for them, breeds also its exceptions for a Debussy. For such as him, for such music as his, the flying years do leave a waxing residue of understanding, admiration, devotion.

H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 6, 1918

MUCK OFF FOR CAMP OGLETHORPE

Bids Farewell to Wife at Fenway Home

SWISS ASK WHY DR. MUCK WAS INTERNED

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer, today inquired of the State Department the American government's reasons for the interning of Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

After making a special trip from East Cambridge jail to his home at 50 Fenway, to bid good bye to his wife and to pick up a few personal articles that he wished to take with him, Dr. Karl Muck, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, left last night on the Federal express, in charge of Deputy Marshal Arthur Shinners for the internment camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

TEARFUL FAREWELL

Dr. Muck had learned during the morning that he was to leave last night to remain in confinement until the war is over. And during the early afternoon he communicated with the federal officials, and expressed a wish to be allowed to go to his Back Bay home before he left for such an indefinite stay.

Officials could see no objection to the request being granted, so a taxi took the musician and a deputy marshal across the Harvard bridge to his former residence. There he was constantly under the eye of his guard. Mrs. Muck could not restrain the tears as she parted from him, but the prisoner himself bore up well.

The party consisting of Dr. Muck, Deputy Marshal Shinners and another guard, occupied a stateroom on the Federal express, and are due in Washington early this morning. They will be compelled to wait over in the capital until tonight for a train further South. It is about a 24-hour's trip from Washington to the internment camp. They should reach there tomorrow night.

Transcript Apr 6-1918

Herald April 7, 1918

DR. MUCK ON WAY TO INTERNMENT

Starts for Fort Oglethorpe Under Guard

Dr. Karl Muck, famous former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is speeding southward by train to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in custody of Deputy United States Marshal Arthur J. Shinners and a guard. The party left Boston at 7:30 last night, and by tomorrow night it is expected that the noted alien enemy will be formally interned for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck was apparently in a cheerful frame of mind during his last day in Boston in spite of the fact that the grim business of war is to deprive him of his liberty until the conflict ends. The noted musician was taken to the Federal building in the afternoon and officially photographed. While at the Federal building he conferred privately with Assistant United States Attorney Judd Dewey and was permitted to talk with C. J. Foley, secretary to Manager Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ellis was in the building at the time, but did not visit Dr. Muck in the office of the marshal.

The former leader was later taken back to the East Cambridge jail by Deputy Marshal Shinners after bidding officials in the office of Marshal Mitchell good by. He expressed his delight over the manner in which he has been treated since he was arrested two weeks ago. He was made as comfortable as possible at the jail, and is likely to be provided with many comforts by friends while at Fort Oglethorpe.

American Apr 7, 1918

SWISS QUERY ON MUCK INTERNMENT

Minister Sulzer Puts Government's Question Before State Department

Washington, April 6.—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer, today inquired of the State Department the American government's reasons for the interning of Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

Dr. Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is classed as an alien enemy. He was arrested in Boston, two weeks ago.

Dr. Muck bases his claim to Swiss citizenship on the fact that when he was eight years of age his father, who was a native of Bavaria and a subject of the Kingdom, obtained naturalization papers in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland. The Department of Justice claims that he made no profession of Swiss citizenship, however, until recently.

Muck Taken South For Internment

Dr. Karl Muck, famed leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bid this city good-by at 7:30 o'clock last night when he boarded the Federal Express to begin the first stage of his journey to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned as an alien enemy for the duration of the war.

Although he said little in connection with his departure from Boston, which had on so many occasions paid him homage for his brilliant work in the musical field, Dr. Muck said to a near friend that he was resigned to the inevitable and would make the most of his enforced confinement at the Southern fort.

Accompanying Dr. Muck on the train for a part of the trip was Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra. The only other member of the party was United States Deputy Marshal Arthur Shinners, in whose charge Muck will remain until he has been officially turned over to the government authorities in the South.

WIFE WEEPS AT PARTING.

The conductor's parting with his wife at East Cambridge was marked by a sad note. She appeared at the jail with her husband's breakfast, as she had been doing since his confinement there.

Later a taxi-cab drew up to the door and they bade each other an affectionate farewell. Tears dimmed both their eyes as they stood saying the few last words before he was whisked away to the Federal building.

Mrs. Muck followed her husband to the door and there, tears in her eyes, she watched the machine until it was out of sight, blowing kisses at him and waving a handkerchief.

FINGERPRINTS TAKEN.

Before leaving the jail his fingerprints were taken. On the way to the Federal building a stop was made to take his photograph for the authorities.

Later he was taken to his home, where he was busy with many details in connection with cleaning up his business affairs. He also packed clothing for the Southern rip.

One of the distinguished visitors during the afternoon was Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, who expressed her deep sympathy over his departure.

A great part of the morning was occupied by Dr. Muck in adjusting unfinished business and making plans for matters which had been unattended since his arrest.

DR. MUCK TO BE INTERNED

Transcript - 4/6

Former Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Going to Fort Oglethorpe

Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned as an enemy alien at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., during the remainder of the war. Instructions were received from Washington, last evening, by United States Marshal Mitchell. Dr. Muck has been at the East Cambridge jail nearly two weeks, awaiting final disposition of his case by the Department of Justice at Washington. It is likely that he will be taken to the internment camp at once. An extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of alleged Pro-German sympathies and utterances, and his associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, has been made by the Department of Justice and it was decided yesterday that grave danger might result from the musician's remaining at large.

Herald Apr 7, 1918

Serenade.....Beethoven
Vivace.....Haydn-Auer
Chaconne.....Vitali

PENSION FUND

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 14, in aid of the pension fund of the Symphony orchestra. Every effort is being exerted to make it one of the most interesting concerts of the season. For soloists there will be Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch was delighted with the idea of playing at this concert, and it was suggested that he play the two pieces with which he had great success with the orchestra three years ago, Mozart's concerto for piano in D-minor, and Weber's concert piece for piano and orchestra. Miss Braslau's selections have not yet been received. The full program will be published within a day or two. The orchestral program will probably include the "Nut-Cracker" suite of Tschaikowsky, and the Danse Macabre of Saint-Saens. Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

Globe April 7, 1918

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The brilliant Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, will be soloist at the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Miss Novaes earlier in the season played with the orchestra in Cambridge with much success, but this will be her first appearance with the orchestra in Boston. She will play Chopin's Second Concerto, that in F minor.

The Symphony will be one in C major, by Littersdorf, the one-time rival of Mozart. Another work that has not been heard for many years at the Symphony concerts is Grieg's Suite for strings, "In Holberg's Time." The final number will be Smetana's Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau." Mr Schmidt will conduct.

Globe Apr 7, 1918

Pension Fund Concert

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, April 14, in aid of the pension fund of the Symphony Orchestra. There will be two soloists—Miss Sophie Braslau, the talented young contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist. Mr Gabrilowitsch, who was delighted with the idea of appearing at this concert, will play the two pieces with which he had such extraordinary success with the orchestra just three years ago—Mozart's Concerto for piano in D-minor and Weber's Concert-piece for piano and orchestra.

Miss Braslau's numbers will be published within a day or two. The orchestral program probably will include the "Nut-Cracker" Suite of Tschaikowsky, and the Danse Macabre of Saint-Saens. Mr Schmidt will conduct.

Post Apr 7, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

THREE COMPOSERS IN ENGAGING CONTRAST

Dvorak's Music of "The New World," Charpentier's "Impressions of Italy" and Debussy's "Clouds" as the Programme Neighbored Them and as the Years Sift Them—Mr. Schmidt, His Orchestra and His Audience

THE three pieces filling the concert of the Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon made interesting contrast each with each—Dvoràk's one enduring symphony, "From the New World"; the first of Debussy's Nocturnes—"Clouds"—played to the memory of the composer, dead ten days ago, and Charpentier's suite, "Impressions of Italy," now reëstablished after long desuetude (as President Cleveland used to say) in the active repertory of the band. An audience of the usual quality, but of rather less than the usual numbers, heard this music with every sign of a pleasure rising highest with the Bohemian's symphony, falling lowest with the Parisian's Nocturne. Especially in the upper balcony, where the seats are sold for the day, was the listening company sparse—a circumstance readily explainable by the absence of many students on spring holidays. From every quarter of the hall, however, came clear evidence of an honest encouraging cordiality toward Mr. Schmidt. He was applauded when he came to his place as conductor and when he left it; while at each pause in the symphony, the clapping waxed until at the end he was twice recalled and finally brought the orchestra to its feet.

All this was no more than just desert to leader and men, since Dvoràk's frank and animated music lay well within his power, and the orchestra spared not in songful tone, bite of rhythm and transition and bright instrumental color. At the performance of The Matthew-Passion on Tuesday, there had been occasional and ominous signs of laxity in one or two of the choirs, as though one or another in them was careless of discipline and standards. Of this indifference hardly a trace remained yesterday. However difficult to follow Mr. Schmidt's beat may be, the orchestra returned him precision, pliancy and zeal. True, the Nocturne of Debussy went appreciably less well than it might and was relatively little clapped; for the intrinsic quality of such music somewhat evades the conductor's imagination, and he missed not a little of its poetry of matter and subtlety of procedure. On the other hand, with Charpentier's suite came clear sailing, eager interest and warm applause again—the more, perhaps, because Mr. Schmidt caught well the broad speech and the clear inflections of the music and seldom halted its spirited progress by too slow a pace. As the circumstances of the day went, the audience of Friday afternoons is disposed to accept him, with reasonable content, as conductor for the remainder of the season.

Moreover, whatever the relative quality of performance with the three pieces, it did not materially lessen the agreeable contrasts that severally and collectively they afforded. Nearly twenty-five years after the first performance of Dvoràk's symphony hardly any listener cares a pin whether negro folk song contributed to the character of the music, whether the voice of it is pure Czech, or whether, as is probably the golden mean of truth, the composer here and there distilled motives and progressions from the blacks through his own Bohemian individuality. Were it not for a dutifully reminding programme-book, scarcely a hearer nowadays would remember these ancient, withered controversies. As few, probably, meditated in the pauses of the symphony on the fact that a dozen years after Dvoràk's death little of his music outside it, two or three overtures, an occasional concerto and a few chamber pieces abides in the active repertory of American concert-rooms. Yet Dvoràk had uppiled no inconsiderable amount of musical baggage during a diligent lifetime. Recalling this sifting of the years, the reflective listener might speculate upon the "chances of life" (as the actuaries say) of such a music of instinct, practice, transparent voice and readily communicable mood as Dvoràk wrote with those of so mediated, cultivated, subtle and evasive a music as that of the Debussy who in the chances of the programme neighbored him. It is possible to believe that more of the Parisian's pieces will be current in the active repertory of 1935 than of the Bohemian's in the like repertory of 1918.

For most ears, however, the progress of this "New World" symphony is sufficiently engrossing in itself. In immediate appeal and pleasure to the average listener not even Chaikovsky's "Pathetic" may now excel it. Quickly Dvoràk expands his motives, into clear-voiced, full-bodied, freely flowing melodies. They are neither too sweet nor too austere; they fall not into many fragments, lose themselves in no intricate ramifications; progress, beat, modulation, color—all are vivid; there is no mistaking the mood and that mood is usually of instant, universal appeal. At bottom Dvoràk was a common man with an inborn aptitude for music-making. As he was, so unconsciously he expressed himself, while the average ear, the average sensibilities to music make corresponding response to him. The pleasure that the usual audience takes in the "New World" symphony is no caprice of the public taste, no compulsion of the achieving composer; it is only the common human tie that binds him and his hearers together. Above many a composer of far finer abilities, of ampler and longer enduring note, Dvoràk has here written a universal music. Yet, to the imaginative and exacting connoisseur, prone to be over-superior with this symphony, it yields pleasures. Be it a Czech or a quasi-American music, from the slow movement still exhales glamor of longing, penetrating song, heard remote over vast, empty, solitary spaces, until they vibrate to the passion of this calling, calling that will not be sated or stayed. So again, the first movement, the scherzo, the finale sometimes leap and glow as with the spring of a native wildness that will not down, be it, again, of Bohemia or of America. Dvoràk to the end was primitive man, who can bound as well as muse with his music.

Probably to that average hearer Charpentier's "Impressions of Italy" are nearly as frank and communicating a music. No ear may fail into confusions over the advancing and receding serenade of the first division, miss its Italian tang; while no very sharp imagination is necessary to discover in it the amorous mood that both caresses and bites. As clear are the processional progress and the tranquil vein—shepherd's song and the rest—of the second division. The succeeding movement is as frank of even rhythm and warm song, softened into twilight memories. The ensuing music of landscape and seascape in quivering expanse is broad, rich, glowing. The finale is almost nasal with Neapolitan song, strident with Neapolitan tumult and then, of a sudden, stilled and melancholy as with the great velvety expanse of sky and water in the crescent of the bay. Most imaginations, with perhaps a jog from the programme-book, may readily provide the slight Italian background that Charpentier's suite asks. Beyond peradventure, it is easily comprehensible, immediately likable music; yet in no wise does it engross the average ear as does Dvoràk's symphony. By his very nature, the Bohemian wrote an intuitive, a quasi-inspired music, whereas the Parisian merely did a sound and capable job in these Italian memoranda in tones. Moreover, to the connoisseur, who has his pleasure in some of the finer strokes and wilder moods of Dvoràk, Charpentier in this suite no less than in his music-dramas writes a somewhat coarse-fibred and obvious music, because it is his nature so to do. Such idiosyncrasy happens to heighten the illusion of picture, character and passion in the abiding "Louise." To what degree it could vitiate the matter in hand was apparent in the nearly forgotten "Julien."

Far alike from the Dvoràk of the "New World" symphony and the Charpentier of the "Impressions of Italy" is the Debussy of "Clouds." Perhaps no fitter memorial piece could have been chosen, unless Boston had still an opera house of its own and "Pelléas and Mélisande" were to retraverse the stage; for the Nocturne is epitome of not a few characteristic traits in a composer that we of his generation like fondly to believe will in his best work endure the years and the changeful likings of the sons and the daughters of men. As we of 1918 listened yesterday to a Dvoràk and a Charpentier of the long vanished nineties so may they of 1935 hear a Debussy of the "Clouds," of "The Afternoon of a Faun," of "The Sea," "Iberia," "Gigues," with a like pleasure in which there is as little condescension to another time, another manner. The years work their will, wanton, invincible, but it is the happy illusion of us of middle age who have known and cherished Debussy's music almost from the beginnings, that they will not still it. Surely the low, penetrating, diaphanous, endlessly modulated tones of "Clouds," the softly eating rhythms, the harmonies that are as shadows upon the faint melodic line, the pale timbres, the new inflections (as they once seemed) that are as impulses of a new tonal imagination, the new articulations in strange groups, euphenies, dissonances are not a manner to become the mode to be imitated, to pass, but the self-expression of an individual spirit searching out and compassing its own characteristic idiom.

As surely in that spirit dwelt a poetic imagery releasing itself in music, finding there its characteristic speech, when out of this Nocturne, seeming so slender, still and slow, rise the vision of clouds sailing the ether, melting into it, refashioning themselves as from their own vapors, changeful ever, softly luminous, caressing the eye, soothing the heart—a vision of dream in tones as filmy and iridescent. Few relatively are the ears and the sensibilities that take their pleasure in such an idiom and such a poetry beside the many which the comparative prose and platitude of Dvoràk and Charpentier delight; but each generation, while it breeds its multitudes for them, breeds also its exceptions for a Debussy. For such as him, for such music as his, the flying years do leave a waxing residue of understanding, admiration, devotion.

H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 6, 1918

MUCK OFF FOR CAMP OGLETHORPE

Bids Farewell to Wife at Fenway Home

SWISS ASK WHY DR. MUCK WAS INTERNED

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer, today inquired of the State Department the American government's reasons for the interning of Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

After making a special trip from East Cambridge jail to his home at 50 Fenway, to bid good bye to his wife and to pick up a few personal articles that he wished to take with him, Dr. Karl Muck, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, left last night on the Federal express, in charge of Deputy Marshal Arthur Shinners for the internment camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

TEARFUL FAREWELL

Dr. Muck had learned during the morning that he was to leave last night to remain in confinement until the war is over. And during the early afternoon he communicated with the federal officials, and expressed a wish to be allowed to go to his Back Bay home before he left for such an indefinite stay.

Officials could see no objection to the request being granted, so a taxi took the musician and a deputy marshal across the Harvard bridge to his former residence. There he was constantly under the eye of his guard. Mrs. Muck could not restrain the tears as she parted from him, but the prisoner himself bore up well.

The party consisting of Dr. Muck, Deputy Marshal Shinners and another guard, occupied a stateroom on the Federal express, and are due in Washington early this morning. They will be compelled to wait over in the capital until tonight for a train further South. It is about a 24-hour's trip from Washington to the internment camp. They should reach there tomorrow night.

Transcript Apr 6-1918

DR. MUCK TO BE INTERNED

Former Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Going to Fort Oglethorpe

Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned as an enemy alien at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., during the remainder of the war. Instructions were received from Washington, last evening, by United States Marshal Mitchell. Dr. Muck has been at the East Cambridge jail nearly two weeks, awaiting final disposition of his case by the Department of Justice at Washington. It is likely that he will be taken to the internment camp at once. An extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of alleged Pro-German sympathies and utterances, and his associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, has been made by the Department of Justice and it was decided yesterday that grave danger might result from the musician's remaining at large.

Herald Apr 7, 1918

Serenade.....Boccherini
Vivace.....Haydn-Auer
Chaconne.....Vitali

PENSION FUND

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 14, in aid of the pension fund of the Symphony orchestra. Every effort is being exerted to make it one of the most interesting concerts of the season. For soloists there will be Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch was delighted with the idea of playing at this concert, and it was suggested that he play the two pieces with which he had great success with the orchestra three years ago, Mozart's concerto for piano in D-minor, and Weber's concert piece for piano and orchestra. Miss Braslau's selections have not yet been received. The full program will be published within a day or two. The orchestral program will probably include the "Nut-Cracker" suite of Tschaikowsky, and the Danse Macabre of Saint-Saens. Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

Herald April 7, 1918

DR. MUCK ON WAY TO INTERNMENT

Starts for Fort Oglethorpe Under Guard

Dr. Karl Muck, famous former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is speeding southward by train to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in custody of Deputy United States Marshal Arthur J. Shinners and a guard. The party left Boston at 7:30 last night, and by tomorrow night it is expected that the noted alien enemy will be formally interned for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck was apparently in a cheerful frame of mind during his last day in Boston in spite of the fact that the grim business of war is to deprive him of his liberty until the conflict ends. The noted musician was taken to the Federal building in the afternoon and officially photographed. While at the Federal building he conferred privately with Assistant United States Attorney Judd Dewey and was permitted to talk with C. J. Foley, secretary to Manager Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ellis was in the building at the time, but did not visit Dr. Muck in the office of the marshal.

The former leader was later taken back to the East Cambridge jail by Deputy Marshal Shinners after bidding officials in the office of Marshal Mitchell good-by. He expressed his delight over the manner in which he has been treated since he was arrested two weeks ago. He was made as comfortable as possible at the jail, and is likely to be provided with many comforts by friends while at Fort Oglethorpe.

Globe April 7, 1918

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The brilliant Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, will be soloist at the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Miss Novaes earlier in the season played with the orchestra in Cambridge with much success, but this will be her first appearance with the orchestra in Boston. She will play Chopin's Second Concerto, that in F minor.

The Symphony will be one in C major, by Littersdorf, the one-time rival of Mozart. Another work that has not been heard for many years at the Symphony concerts is Grieg's Suite for strings, "In Holberg's Time." The final number will be Smetana's Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau." Mr Schmidt will conduct.

American Apr 7, 1918

SWISS QUERY ON MUCK INTERNMENT

Minister Sulzer Puts Government's Question Before State Department

Washington, April 6.—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer, today inquired of the State Department the American government's reasons for the interning of Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

Dr. Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is classed as an alien enemy. He was arrested in Boston, two weeks ago.

Dr. Muck bases his claim to Swiss citizenship on the fact that when he was eight years of age his father, who was a native of Bavaria and a subject of the Kingdom, obtained naturalization papers in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland. The Department of Justice claims that he made no profession of Swiss citizenship, however, until recently.

Muck Taken South For Internment

Dr. Karl Muck, famed leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bid this city good-by at 7:30 o'clock last night when he boarded the Federal Express to begin the first stage of his journey to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned as an alien enemy for the duration of the war.

Although he said little in connection with his departure from Boston, which had on so many occasions paid him homage for his brilliant work in the musical field, Dr. Muck said to a near friend that he was resigned to the inevitable and would make the most of his enforced confinement at the Southern fort.

Accompanying Dr. Muck on the train for a part of the trip was Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra. The only other member of the party was United States Deputy Marshal Arthur Shinners, in whose charge Muck will remain until he has been officially turned over to the government authorities in the South.

WIFE WEEPS AT PARTING.

The conductor's parting with his wife at East Cambridge was marked by a sad note. She appeared at the jail with her husband's breakfast, as she had been doing since his confinement there.

Later a taxi-cab drew up to the door and they bade each other an affectionate farewell. Tears dimmed both their eyes as they stood saying the few last words before he was whisked away to the Federal building.

Mrs. Muck followed her husband to the door and there, tears in her eyes, she watched the machine until it was out of sight, blowing kisses at him and waving a handkerchief.

FINGERPRINTS TAKEN.

Before leaving the jail his fingerprints were taken. On the way to the Federal building a stop was made to take his photograph for the authorities.

Later he was taken to his home, where he was busy with many details in connection with cleaning up his business affairs. He also packed clothing for the Southern trip.

One of the distinguished visitors during the afternoon was Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, who expressed her deep sympathy over his departure.

A great part of the morning was occupied by Dr. Muck in adjusting unfinished business and making plans for matters which had been unattended since his arrest.

Globe Apr 7, 1918

Pension Fund Concert

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, April 14, in aid of the pension fund of the Symphony Orchestra. There will be two soloists—Miss Sophie Braslau, the talented young contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist. Mr Gabrilowitsch, who was delighted with the idea of appearing at this concert, will play the two pieces with which he had such extraordinary success with the orchestra just three years ago—Mozart's Concerto for piano in D-minor and Weber's Concert-piece for piano and orchestra.

Miss Braslau's numbers will be published within a day or two. The orchestral program probably will include the "Nut-Cracker" Suite of Tschaikowsky, and the Danse Macabre of Saint-Saens. Mr Schmidt will conduct.

Boston Post Apr 7, 1918

Transcript Apr 7, 1918

New Symphony Leader?

Rachmaninoff Escapes From Russia—Rebirth of French Musical Art—Concerts

The news that the Russian composer, Sergei Rachmaninoff, has barely escaped from Russia with his life, and is coming to America, is not only very good news to those interested in music, but news which might be of particular interest to Boston. When Mr. Rachmaninoff toured America in 1909, and led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first performance of his symphonic poem, "The Isle of the Dead," both music and conductor made a deep impression. And there will be need of a new conductor of the highest reputation for the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season.

That conductor will not be a German, and, aside from the situation created by the war, it is high time he were not. German conductors have led the Boston Symphony from 1883 onward, with the single exception of Arthur Nikisch, a Hungarian. To one German, Mr. Gericke, is due the eternal credit of making the Boston Symphony what it is today. Other Germans who did musical work of importance and interest within recent memory were Messrs. Fiedler and Muck. But it must also be realized that the German leaders, inevitably, have superimposed their own musical traditions on our band as other Germans did on most of the orchestras of the United States. To them is due in a considerable extent the grip which German tradition has made on music in this country ever since its musical life was fairly established. Musically, speaking, we talked German, and unfortunately many of us imbibed unconsciously the provincial intolerance and lack of appreciation of the qualities of any products but their own, which is characteristic of the German in all fields of thought and production. It has been not because of but in spite of German musicians in this country that we have broadened our appreciation of music so that we require of them and of our ourselves a knowledge of French, Italian, Bohemian, Scandinavian and other schools of composition.

Even so, much of the music of these other peoples has been misrepresented in interpretation. Even Dr. Muck, an uncommonly sensitive and catholic interpreter for a German, was far from grasping in an intimate and sympathetic manner the subtleties of a Franck or a Debussy. What is more astonishing, he did not even hesitate to "doctor" the scores of the latter master of orchestration, whose art and whose sense of tonal balance were at least as fine and worthy of respect as his own. And while such procedure was doubtless of great help to composers of the Boehe and Bischoff persuasion, it did not materially add to the charm and the finesse of the music of Debussy.

A change from the German to another school will be a new and valuable experience for the Symphony audiences as well as the orchestra. Suppose a Frenchman were engaged, and suppose he was as chauvinistic in his choice of music as a German and as undiluted an exponent of French traditions as his predecessors were of the Teutonic. Even so, he would bring a broadening and artistic experience to us all. We would see music itself from a different angle, and we would see farther in certain directions than we have ever seen before.

Whomever the appointment goes to, it is likely to prove artistically profitable. As we said in this place last week, there are a number of distinguished leaders available. There are men not only in America today who could direct the orchestra brilliantly, but there are conductors in allied countries whose appearance would be welcomed and enjoyed here. And now, from Russia, comes Mr. Rachmaninoff.

In a brief summary in a former study, says Jean Hure in the Musical Quarterly, I hinted at the progressive impoverishment, not of the French musical genius, but of its external manifestations, under various foreign influences during more than half of the 19th century. In perfect sincerity. many musicians and writers about music consider these influences as beneficent. French opera seems to them to have been regenerated by the Italian school and by the lucubrations, so well received in France, of the Germanic-Franco-Italian Giacomo Meyerbeer. Besides, people have wanted to "construct" fugues and symphonies after the style of Bach and Beethoven; so they killed the admirable art of the fugue by creating the school-fugue. And they brought symphonic art to its death agony by teaching the realization of the Franco-Beethoven idea of the sonata, like a horrible mixture of healthy German beer with some light but strong French wine. Vocal art, so brilliant among the Italians, so sober and so perfect in truly French works, was abandoned for Wagnerian clumsiness; chromaticism, feverish and bristling, took the place of our pure and suave "diatonicism"; either disorder or tedious symmetry, whichever chanced, pervaded the phases of an art which in former days boasted of being at once well-balanced and imaginative. In all these ways was brought about the death of the French genius—but only the apparent death.

As I have said before, our historians first brought about the rebirth of French art by their documentary studies; the public all the while in revolt, had persisted in admiring it. Then there arose a few geniuses, some a little Germanized, some tinged with Italianism, a few purely French. Their names are well known; they are justly famous.

At last, under a new and unexpected influence, the musical art of France is finding again most of the qualities of the race, which it should never have abandoned. A whole new school has been born and is growing up. Its works are composed of sweetness, of a soberly emotional charm, of discreet and contained form, of elegance without triviality. In a style quite different and wholly original, there has been a natural return to the qualities of the Couperins, of Rameau and of Charles Gounod. Even mediocre musicians and melody borrowed from antique modes, chords hitherto not used, free rhythms, varied and delicate timbres.

French musical art was born again. That it was born again is beyond all question, but it was reborn in a delicious and elegant disorder; or else it produced works full of unity, but monotonous, where variety was entirely lacking—or where lack of variety was a fault—works in a so-called "restrained" style, where the musical vocabulary, though indubitably original and ingenious, was slight.

Creators of rare and distinguished beauty vied with one another in these delicate compositions. But the most precious of the ancient qualities were either ignored or forgotten. First, the fault which appears most strikingly in these contemporary productions is the non-continuity in the contour, especially in the musical idea in general. Let me explain my point. In most works of the present day, there is found—above a harmonic murmuring the purpose of which is, according to the current expression, to create an atmosphere—a little motif of one or two measures repeated twice; then the waves of the harmony, exquisite and enchanting, persist, and another motif floats to the surface, and then another, and so on to the end of the work. . . .; these motifs bear to one another no relation either rhythmical or harmonic or melodic or tonal or expressive. . . .often the very intervals of the motifs themselves lack these very necessary relationships: the ear is repeatedly surprised and almost always shocked, by unforeseen obstacles, which in the long run fatigue the hearer. This mass of jewels, often very precious, does not form a single object—a work of art—but a strange mass "which has no name in any tongue." It doesn't "hang together," to use an accurate popular expression. There is incoherence—organized incoherence you may call it if you like, but incontestible incoherence.

This absence of harmony—I use the word in its antique sense—has numerous consequences. First, it produces a disconcerting quality which fatigues and enervates the hearer, which causes a sort of anguish and unrest even in the midst of pleasure and of which the hearer soon tires. This succession of sentiments, though lively and agreeable ones, when they are entirely disconnected, give the hearer with musical taste a constant sense of deception. It is a curious fact that in such music the unity and variety necessary to every esthetic work can be found, but the unity is neutralized by the incoherence of the varied elements which are superimposed. Further, whatever seduction these works may have is ephemeral—the ear is quickly wearied with them. As St. Augustine well said, "The sensation passes, the feeling of harmonious proportions abides."

Such, in brief, is the present state of contemporary musical art in France—or rather such is the music which, triumphant yesterday, seems today a little out of date, almost forgotten, despite its seductive qualities.

A younger school seems to be announcing itself, resplendent. It has furnished so far only attempts, but these efforts give promise of a fine future. It is not without interest to endeavor to sketch this new art, which is still stammering, but which tomorrow will perhaps be more magnificent than any other. Above all, the new art will carefully avoid the neglect of any of the marvellous elements in the musical art of preceding times. We can learn what these elements are by a profound study of the masters, romantic and classic, of the musicians of the Renaissance, of the ecclesiastical modes of the middle ages, of the modes of Greece, of the East and the Far East, and of the popular songs of all countries.

Does this mean that the works of the future will be imitations of the music of former days? Not at all. External means, musical material, will be widely used, but the works will not be copies. The modern artist will assimilate ancient methods; he will use them according to his own taste and his own temperament, and he will renew them. As was said of La Fontaine, "In taking everything he imitated nothing." The modern musician will regenerate the art of counterpoint, of canons, of the fugue; he will give the sonata a new form, more closely one, more logical, more concise, more perfect in beauty than the symphonic form of older days, ingenious but conventional as that is. He will cultivate the art of writing for voices and will bring to perfection again the refined art of instrumental composition. He will invent harmonic and melodic combinations—chords, progressions of chords, tonalities never heard before, undiscovered disposition of timbres. His work will be essentially new; it will have above all that harmony of proportions without which nothing can endure.

It will be modern. This is an important point. It is wrong to call all new music modern music. Modern music is that which corresponds to our modern mentality. Now, what actually is our modern mentality? It is a mentality which seeks every day in every field, more conciseness, more logic, more clearness. Proof of this may be found in all our social and economic organization, in our taste for the comfortable, our hatred for inconvenience and boredom, our love for agreeable sensations, our aspiration after serenity. The art of tomorrow will be an art of quiet and, as I have often said, quiet is the most esthetic of passions. The art of tomorrow will be, like the science of today, made up of logic, of deduction, of simplicity in the midst of the greatest complexity.

It will tolerate no useless element, no manifestation the expression of which could be more simple. It will detest fatiguing prolixities, tediousness, redundancy, sterile agitation, everything which can shock our sensorial eagerness and the logic which we wish to apply to that eagerness or the fancy which pleases us in that application. Like existing science, it will be bold and free, eager to dart in full flight over the highest summits, with a facility the greater because of the more perfect technical surety and esthetic logic of the artists. It will be an art of perfect realization of ideals, an art of wider scope, an art disdainful of all prejudice.

The artists of tomorrow, the musician especially, will have to guard against one danger. Composed of so many differing elements, the music of the future may easily be lacking in sobriety and in unity if, forewarned, the musician does not take especial care to fuse and weld closely together his divers parts; he must not be content to classify them in disorder or even to arrange them in a logical order, as has been done too often in very recent times, with the result that in one work elements borrowed from various styles followed one another instead of mingling in one whole.

There is, then, a great musical epoch which is destined to follow the pleasant band of present-day conquerors. We must greet this new dawn with sympathy and with hope.—Jean Hure in the Musical Quarterly: "The Immediate Future of French Music."

American Apr 7, 1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

That very brilliant and gifted Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, will be soloist at the Symphony concerts this week. She will play Chopin's second concerto. The Symphony will be one in C-Major by Dittersdorf, the one-time rival of Mozart. Grieg's Suite for Strings, "In Holberg's Time," and Smetana's Symphonic poem, "The Moldau," will also be played.

The selection of the songs and airs for this program is due to many requests Mr. deGorgorza has received since his concert here in January.

Galli-Curci, the favorite colorature soprano, will give her last recital in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 28.

John McCormack will come back to Symphony Hall for another recital on April 21.

SJOSELIUS RECITAL

Next Tuesday afternoon, Mme. Alice Sjoselius, the American soprano, will make her bow before a Boston audience at Steinert Hall. Her program will include Italian airs by Scarlatti, Buononcini, Pergolese, two arias from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," English songs by Bartholomew, Horsman and Campbell-Tipton, Swedish folksongs, Scandinavian and Finnish songs and songs by MacDowell, Arthur Foote, George Chadwick, and Woodman. Richard Hageman will play the accompaniments.

MISS SAVAGE'S DEBUT.

Marguerite G. Savage, an active member of Brookline's younger social set, will make her stage debut with the Somerville Players, at their playhouse, Monday, appearing in George M. Cohan's musical play, "Fifty Miles from Boston."

CONCERT CALENDAR

Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Miss Braslau with the Symphony Orchestra—Messrs. McCormack and de Gogorza and Mme. Galli-Curci for Impending Singers—The Cecilia in "The Children's Crusade"

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, April 14, in Symphony Hall, the second of the two annual concerts of the Symphony Orchestra for the increase of the Pension Fund for retired or disabled members of the band. Mr. Schmidt will conduct and for new departure, miscellaneous pieces will fill the programme—among them Chaikovsky's Suite of dances, "The Nut-Cracker" and Saint-Saëns's tone-poem, "Danse Macabre" long unheard here. Mr. Gabrilowitsch, the eminent and favorite pianist, and Miss Braslau, the notable young singer of the Metropolitan Opera House have offered their services as "assisting artists." He will play a smiling Concerto by Mozart and Weber's ornate "Concert-Piece," both with orchestra.

American April 7, 1918

Nardini (1722-1793); Sonata for Violin, G major. Locatelli (1693-1764); Serenade, Vivaldi. Haydn Auer (1732-1809); Chanconne, Vitali.

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 14, in aid of the pension fund of the Symphony orchestra. Miss Sophie Braslau, the distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist, will be the soloists. The pianist will play Mozart's concert in D-Minor and Weber's concert-piece. Miss Braslau's numbers have not yet been received. The orchestral program will probably include the "Nut-Cracker" Suite of Tschaikowsky, and the "Danse Macabre" of Saint-Saens. Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

Herald Apr 4, 1918

As the World Wags

By PHILIP HALE.

We have received the following letter from Mr. E. Ondricek of Boston:

"Would it not interest your readers to know that Rachmaninoff's (the famous Russian composer) coming is practically assured through the co-operation of his friends here and in New York, who had become acquainted with the facts concerning his destitute condition brought about by the chaotic condition of his country, and had learned that he had barely escaped with his life to Stockholm? Would it not be an honor to receive him here in Boston as a possible leader of our orchestra? Would his coming not insure the further continuance of that institution and his leadership uphold its high standards of efficiency, add new inspiration, and probably change the stereotyped programs of the Symphony concerts of past years?"

Boston Post Apr 7, 1918

Transcript Apr 7, 1918

New Symphony Leader?

Rachmaninoff Escapes From Russia—Rebirth of French Musical Art—Concerts

The news that the Russian composer, Sergei Rachmaninoff, has barely escaped from Russia with his life, and is coming to America, is not only very good news to those interested in music, but news which might be of particular interest to Boston. When Mr. Rachmaninoff toured America in 1909, and led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first performance of his symphonic poem, "The Isle of the Dead," both music and conductor made a deep impression. And there will be need of a new conductor of the highest reputation for the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season.

That conductor will not be a German, and, aside from the situation created by the war, it is high time he were not. German conductors have led the Boston Symphony from 1883 onward, with the single exception of Arthur Nikisch, a Hungarian. To one German, Mr. Gericke, is due the eternal credit of making the Boston Symphony what it is today. Other Germans who did musical work of importance and interest within recent memory were Messrs. Fiedler and Muck. But it must also be realized that the German leaders, inevitably, have superimposed their own musical traditions on our band as other Germans did on most of the orchestras of the United States. To them is due in a considerable extent the grip which German tradition has made on music in this country ever since its musical life was fairly established. Musically, speaking, we talked German, and unfortunately many of us imbibed unconsciously the provincial intolerance and lack of appreciation of the qualities of any products but their own, which is characteristic of the German in all fields of thought and production. It has been not because of but in spite of German musicians in this country that we have broadened our appreciation of music so that we require of them and of our ourselves a knowledge of French, Italian, Bohemian, Scandinavian and other schools of composition.

Even so, much of the music of these other peoples has been misrepresented in interpretation. Even Dr. Muck, an uncommonly sensitive and catholic interpreter for a German, was far from grasping in an intimate and sympathetic manner the subtleties of a Franck or a Debussy. What is more astonishing, he did not even hesitate to "doctor" the scores of the latter master of orchestration, whose art and whose sense of tonal balance were at least as fine and worthy of respect as his own. And while such procedure was doubtless of great help to composers of the Boehe and Bischoff persuasion, it did not materially add to the charm and the finesse of the music of Debussy.

A change from the German to another school will be a new and valuable experience for the Symphony audiences as well as the orchestra. Suppose a Frenchman were engaged, and suppose he was as chauvinistic in his choice of music as a German and as undiluted an exponent of French traditions as his predecessors were of the Teutonic. Even so, he would bring a broadening and artistic experience to us all. We would see music itself from a different angle, and we would see farther in certain directions than we have ever seen before.

Whomever the appointment goes to, it is likely to prove artistically profitable. As we said in this place last week, there are a number of distinguished leaders available. There are men not only in America today who could direct the orchestra brilliantly, but there are conductors in allied countries whose appearance would be welcomed and enjoyed here. And now, from Russia, comes Mr. Rachmaninoff.

In a brief summary in a former study, says Jean Hure in the Musical Quarterly, I hinted at the progressive impoverishment, not of the French musical genius, but of its external manifestations, under various foreign influences during more than half of the 19th century. In perfect sincerity, many musicians and writers about music consider these influences as beneficent. French opera seems to them to have been regenerated by the Italian school and by the lucubrations, so well received in France, of the Germanic-Franco-Italian Giacomo Meyerbeer. Besides, people have wanted to "construct" fugues and symphonies after the style of Bach and Beethoven; so they killed the admirable art of the fugue by creating the school-fugue. And they brought symphonic art to its death agony by teaching the realization of the Franco-Beethoven idea of the sonata, like a horrible mixture of healthy German beer with some light but strong French wine. Vocal art, so brilliant among the Italians, so sober and so perfect in truly French works, was abandoned for Wagnerian clumsiness; chromaticism, feverish and bristling, took the place of our pure and suave "diatonicism"; either disorder or tedious symmetry, whichever chanced, pervaded the phases of an art which in former days boasted of being at once well-balanced and imaginative. In all these ways was brought about the death of the French genius—but only the apparent death.

As I have said before, our historians first brought about the rebirth of French art by their documentary studies: the public all the while in revolt, had persisted in admiring it. Then there arose a few geniuses, some a little Germanized, some tinged with Italianism, a few purely French. Their names are well known; they are justly famous.

At last, under a new and unexpected influence, the musical art of France is finding again most of the qualities of the race, which it should never have abandoned. A whole new school has been born and is growing up. Its works are composed of sweetness, of a soberly emotional charm, of discreet and contained form, of elegance without triviality. In a style quite different and wholly original, there has been a natural return to the qualities of the Couperins, of Rameau and of Charles Gounod. Even mediocre musicians and melody borrowed from antique modes, chords hitherto not used, free rhythms, varied and delicate timbres.

French musical art was born again. That it was born again is beyond all question, but it was reborn in a delicious and elegant disorder; or else it produced works full of unity, but monotonous, where variety was entirely lacking—or where lack of variety was a fault—works in a so-called "restrained" style, where the musical vocabulary, though indubitably original and ingenious, was slight.

Creators of rare and distinguished beauty vied with one another in these delicate compositions. But the most precious of the ancient qualities were either ignored or forgotten. First, the fault which appears most strikingly in these contemporary productions is the non-continuity in the contour, especially in the musical idea in general. Let me explain my point. In most works of the present day, there is found—above a harmonic murmuring the purpose of which is, according to the current expression, to create an atmosphere—a little motif of one or two measures repeated twice; then the waves of the harmony, exquisite and enchanting, persist, and another motif floats to the surface, and then another, and so on to the end of the work. . . .; these motifs bear to one another no relation either rhythmical or harmonic or melodic or tonal or expressive. . . .often the very intervals of the motifs themselves lack these very necessary relationships: the ear is repeatedly surprised and almost always shocked, by unforeseen obstacles, which in the long run fatigue the hearer. This mass of jewels, often very precious, does not form a single object—a work of art—but a strange mass "which has no name in any tongue." It doesn't "hang together," to use an accurate popular expression. There is incoherence—organized incoherence you may call it if you like, but incontestible incoherence.

This absence of harmony—I use the word in its antique sense—has numerous consequences. First, it produces a disconcerting quality which fatigues and enervates the hearer, which causes a sort of anguish and unrest even in the midst of pleasure and of which the hearer soon tires. This succession of sentiments, though lively and agreeable ones, when they are entirely disconnected, give the hearer with musical taste a constant sense of deception. It is a curious fact that in such music the unity and variety necessary to every esthetic work can be found, but the unity is neutralized by the incoherence of the varied elements which are superimposed. Further, whatever seduction these works may have is ephemeral—the ear is quickly wearied with them. As St. Augustine well said, "The sensation passes, the feeling of harmonious proportions abides."

Such, in brief, is the present state of contemporary musical art in France—or rather such is the music which, triumphant yesterday, seems today a little out of date, almost forgotten, despite its seductive qualities.

A younger school seems to be announcing itself, resplendent. It has furnished so far only attempts, but these efforts give promise of a fine future. It is not without interest to endeavor to sketch this new art, which is still stammering, but which tomorrow will perhaps be more magnificent than any other. Above all, the new art will carefully avoid the neglect of any of the marvellous elements in the musical art of preceding times. We can learn what these elements are by a profound study of the masters, romantic and classic, of the musicians of the Renaissance, of the ecclesiastical modes of the middle ages, of the modes of Greece, of the East and the Far East, and of the popular songs of all countries.

Does this mean that the works of the future will be imitations of the music of former days? Not at all. External means, musical material, will be widely used, but the works will not be copies. The modern artist will assimilate ancient methods; he will use them according to his own taste and his own temperament, and he will renew them. As was said of La Fontaine, "In taking everything he imitated nothing." The modern musician will regenerate the art of counterpoint, of canons, of the fugue; he will give the sonata a new form, more closely one, more logical, more concise, more perfect in beauty than the symphonic form of older days, ingenious but conventional as that is. He will cultivate the art of writing for voices and will bring to perfection again the refined art of instrumental composition. He will invent harmonic and melodic combinations—chords, progressions of chords, tonalities never heard before, undiscovered disposition of timbres. His work will be essentially new; it will have above all that harmony of proportions without which nothing can endure.

It will be modern. This is an important point. It is wrong to call all new music modern music. Modern music is that which corresponds to our modern mentality. Now, what actually is our modern mentality? It is a mentality which seeks every day in every field, more conciseness, more logic, more clearness. Proof of this may be found in all our social and economic organization, in our taste for the comfortable, our hatred for inconvenience and boredom, our love for agreeable sensations, our aspiration after serenity. The art of tomorrow will be an art of quiet and, as I have often said, quiet is the most esthetic of passions. The art of tomorrow will be, like the science of today, made up of logic, of deduction, of simplicity in the midst of the greatest complexity.

It will tolerate no useless element, no manifestation the expression of which could be more simple. It will detest fatiguing prolixities, tediousness, redundancy, sterile agitation, everything which can shock our sensorial eagerness and the logic which we wish to apply to that eagerness or the fancy which pleases us in that application. Like existing science, it will be bold and free, eager to dart in full flight over the highest summits, with a facility the greater because of the more perfect technical surety and esthetic logic of the artists. It will be an art of perfect realization of ideals, an art of wider scope, an art disdainful of all prejudice.

The artists of tomorrow, the musician especially, will have to guard against one danger. Composed of so many differing elements, the music of the future may easily be lacking in sobriety and in unity if, forewarned, the musician does not take especial care to fuse and weld closely together his divers parts; he must not be content to classify them in disorder or even to arrange them in a logical order, as has been done too often in very recent times, with the result that in one work elements borrowed from various styles followed one another instead of mingling in one whole.

There is, then, a great musical epoch which is destined to follow the pleasant band of present-day conquerors. We must greet this new dawn with sympathy and with hope.—Jean Hure in the Musical Quarterly: "The Immediate Future of French Music."

American Apr 7, 1918

CONCERT CALENDAR

Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Miss Braslau with the Symphony Orchestra—Messrs. McCormack and de Gogorza and Mme. Galli-Curci for Impending Singers—The Cecilia in "The Children's Crusade"

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, April 14, in Symphony Hall, the second of the two annual concerts of the Symphony Orchestra for the increase of the Pension Fund for retired or disabled members of the band. Mr. Schmidt will conduct and for new departure, miscellaneous pieces will fill the programme—among them Chaikovsky's Suite of dances, "The Nut-Cracker" and Saint-Saëns's tone-poem, "Danse Macabre" long unheard here. Mr. Gabrilowitsch, the eminent and favorite pianist, and Miss Braslau, the notable young singer of the Metropolitan Opera House have offered their services as "assisting artists." He will play a smiling Concerto by Mozart and Weber's ornate "Concert-Piece," both with orchestra.

American April 7, 1918

Nardini (1722-1793); Sonata for Violin, G major. Locatelli (1693-1764); Serenade, Vivace. Haydn Auer (1732-1809); Chaconne, Vitali.

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Final arrangements have been made for the concert to be given in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 14, in aid of the pension fund of the Symphony orchestra. Miss Sophie Braslau, the distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist, will be the soloists. The pianist will play Mozart's concert in D-Minor and Weber's concert-piece. Miss Braslau's numbers have not yet been received. The orchestral program will probably include the "Nut-Cracker" Suite of Tschaikowsky, and the "Danse Macabre" of Saint-Saens. Mr. Schmidt will conduct.

Herald Apr 4, 1918

As the World Wags

By PHILIP HALE.

We have received the following letter from Mr. E. Ondricek of Boston:

"Would it not interest your readers to know that Rachmaninoff's (the famous Russian composer) coming is practically assured through the co-operation of his friends here and in New York, who had become acquainted with the facts concerning his destitute condition brought about by the chaotic condition of his country, and had learned that he had barely escaped with his life to Stockholm? Would it not be an honor to receive him here in Boston as a possible leader of our orchestra? Would his coming not insure the further continuance of that institution and his leadership uphold its high standards of efficiency, add new inspiration, and probably change the stereotyped programs of the Symphony concerts of past years?"

American Apr 7, 1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

That very brilliant and gifted Brazilian pianist, Guiomar Novaes, will be soloist at the Symphony concerts this week. She will play Chopin's second concerto. The Symphony will be one in C-Major by Dittersdorf, the one-time rival of Mozart. Grieg's Suite for Strings, "In Holberg's Time," and Smetana's Symphonic poem, "The Moldau," will also be played.

The selection of the songs and airs for this program is due to many requests Mr. deGorgorza has received since his concert here in January.

Galli-Curci, the favorite colorature soprano, will give her last recital in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 28.

John McCormack will come back to Symphony Hall for another recital on April 21.

SJOSELIUS RECITAL

Next Tuesday afternoon, Mme. Alice Sjoselius, the American soprano, will make her bow before a Boston audience at Steinert Hall. Her program will include Italian airs by Scarlatti, Buononcini, Pergolese, two arias from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," English songs by Bartholomew, Horsman and Campbell-Tipton, Swedish folksongs, Scandinavian and Finnish songs and songs by MacDowell, Arthur Foote, George Chadwick, and Woodman. Richard Hageman will play the accompaniments.

MISS SAVAGE'S DEBUT.

Marguerite G. Savage, an active member of Brookline's younger social set, will make her stage debut with the Somerville Players, at their playhouse, Monday, appearing in George M. Cohan's musical play, "Fifty Miles from Boston."

Monitor Apr 9, 1918

MUSIC

Concert Notes

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, giving a concert for the benefit of its pension fund on the afternoon of Sunday, April 14, in Symphony Hall, will play the following program:

Berlioz, "Roman Carnival" overture; Mozart, piano concerto in D minor (Ossip Gabrilowitsch, soloist); aria (Miss Sophie Braslau); Saint-Saëns, "Danse macabre"; songs (Miss Braslau); Weber, concert piece for piano and orchestra (Mr. Gabrilowitsch); Tschaikowsky, "Nut Cracker" suite.

Record Apr 9, 1918

SPLENDID PROGRAM FOR PENSION FUND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert for its Pension Fund Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The orchestra will play Berlioz's Roman Carnival and Saint Saen's Danse Macabre. Ossip Gabrilowitsch will play two piano concertos, and Miss Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Co., will sing. The full program, which promises to be one of the most interesting of the season, will be announced later in the week.

Traveller Apr 9, 1918

SEEK DATA ON MUCK'S CITIZENSHIP

Department of Justice to Meet Claim of Switzerland

WASHINGTON, April 9—Information is being gathered by the department of justice to show Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, ordered interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, as both he and the Swiss minister assert. The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, has protested to both the state department and the department of justice against the internment.

Spent Life in Germany

Dr. Muck, according to the department of justice, was born in Germany and lived there most of his life. His father at one time moved to Switzerland and was naturalized while the son was a minor; but this fact never was made the basis of a claim of Swiss citizenship by Dr. Muck, officials say, until recently, when Germans were barred from the District of Columbia and waterfronts.

Monitor Apr 9, 1918

DR. MUCK AND SWISS CITIZENSHIP QUESTION

Monitor 4/9

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Information is being gathered by the Department of Justice to show that Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ordered interned at Ft. Oglethorpe, Ga., as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, as both he and the Swiss Minister assert. Dr. Muck, according to the Department of Justice, was born in Germany and

Advertiser Apr 10-1918

DENY DR. MUCK IS CITIZEN OF SWITZERLAND

Department of Justice Is Seeking Information to Prove Claims

SAY MUSICIAN WAS BORN IN GERMANY

Assert That Muck Never Gave Up Citizenship Like His Father

Washington, April 9.—Information is being gathered by the Department of Justice to show that Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ordered interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, as both he and the Swiss Minister assert.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, has protested to both the State Department and the Department of Justice against the internment.

Dr. Muck, according to the Department of Justice, was born in Germany and lived there most of his life. His father at one time moved to Switzerland and was naturalized while the son was a minor, but this fact never was made the basis of a claim of Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck, officials say, until recently, when Germans were barred from the District of Columbia and waterfronts.

Globe Apr 10-1918

TRYING TO PROVE DR MUCK NOT A SWISS

Department of Justice Is Gathering Information

Assert Orchestra Leader Never Made That Claim Until Recently

WASHINGTON, April 9—Information is being gathered by the Department of Justice to show that Dr Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ordered interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga, as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, though both he and the Swiss Minister so assert. The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, has protested to both the State Department and the Department of Justice against the internment.

Dr Muck, according to the Department of Justice, was born in Germany and lived there most of his life. His father at one time moved to Switzerland and was naturalized, while the son was a minor, but this fact never was made the basis of a claim of Swiss citizenship by Dr Muck, officials say, until recently, when Germans were barred from the District of Columbia and water fronts.

Record Apr 12-1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

The Pops of 1918

GOOD word indeed comes from Symphony Hall as to the Pop Concerts of 1918. They will begin as usual on the Monday—May 6—following the end of the Symphony Concerts, and, again as usual, they will continue for nine weeks ending on Saturday, July 6. So much is routine. The new promise, as it happens, comes in return to old practice. For two or three years past singers have made their way into The Pops. Some were interesting to hear; quite as many were not; all were out of place in such concerts. By many a test it is doubtful whether the audiences gained any more pleasure from them than the normal course of The Pops would have afforded. Anyhow, to that normal course The Pops of 1918 will return. If any assisting singers are heard, they will be few and far between, while the present communiqué gives no hint of any substituted innovation. Again, so much the better. The Pops established themselves in the interest and the good will of the public, spring after spring, as concerts where, seated at tables, smoking, drinking, chatting at will, "those present" could take the pleasure of light music, agreeably played. As such they flourished in the old Music Hall down town, and again in Symphony Hall up town. More recently came the tendency to make them more like formal concerts, with too numerous hushings of the audience before "serious" pieces, with intruding "soloists," with somewhat too much regard for those austere folk of the balconies whose only satisfaction in The Pops is the satisfaction of the music. If, as the communiqué foreshadows, the concerts are now to return to old ways, so much more the pleasure and—not seldom—the numbers of the audience. After all, they are primarily an entertainment at which to drop in and take one's ease.

Here in Boston

In detail, the programme for the concert of the Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon next, for the increase of its Pension Fund, stands as follows, alike in the purely orchestral numbers and in those for the "assisting artists," Mr. Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, and Miss Braslau, the singer:

Overture, "Roman Carnival" ..... Berlioz
Concerto for piano in D minor ..... Mozart
Mr. Gabrilowitsch
Air, "Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix," from "Samson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saëns
Miss Braslau
Danse Macabre ..... Saint-Saëns
Songs with Piano:
Do Not Sing, Oh Maiden ..... Rakhmaninov
The Classicist ..... Musorgsky
Elli, Elli ..... Schalitt
Miss Braslau
Concert Piece for piano in F minor ..... Weber
Mr. Gabrilowitsch
Suite from the ballet, "The Nutcracker," Chaikovsky

Preparations ...

Herald Apr 13, 1918

21ST CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

Miss Novaes, Pianist, Makes Impressive Debut with the Orchestra

PROGRAM WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE

The 21st concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Schmidt conducted. The program was as follows: Dittersdorf-Kretzschmar, Symphony in C; Chopin, Concerto in F, No. 2, for piano; Grieg, Suite for Strings, "From Holberg's Time"; Smetana, Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau."

Miss Guiomar Novaes, who played here for the first time with the orchestra, gave a beautiful performance of Chopin's concerto, beautiful because it was euphonious, lucid, irreproachable in matters of technic, musically intelligent. First of all, she did not abuse the traditional liberty in rhythm known vaguely as "Chopin's rubato." Her performance was well-rhythmed and at the same time elastic. Seldom, if ever, have we heard the recitative in the middle section of the Larghetto—the finest and most effective pages of the concerto—declaimed with so poetically dramatic authority. Her touch was delightful, whatever degree of force was demanded. There was strength enough; there was always tonal euphony. It was said recently of a pianist in London that he respected the limitations of the piano. This might well be said of Miss Novaes. It might also be said of her that she abstained from the sentimentalism that too often is applauded as "great expression." In no way did she make a cheap appeal. Her physical repose in playing was another feature of her performance.

What induced the amiable Mr. Schmidt to drag Dittersdorf's symphony from the sepulchre? Mr. Paur, who at times committed strange freaks in program-making, exhumed this symphony 21 years ago. It was then in an advanced state of decomposition. Dittersdorf was a fertile composer, but his chief work was the autobiography which he dictated shortly before his death; a book that gives a graphic description of musical conditions and musicians in the latter half of the 18th century; a book that is also interesting by reason of the personal confessions; a book that leaves one with an affectionate regard for the author. If any symphony by Dittersdorf is to be played, why not one of those suggested by Ovid's "Metamorphoses"? "The Transformation of Actaeon," for example? The second movement of it portrays Diana bathing. We should like to know how Dittersdorg pictured this in tones.

Grieg's suite in honor of Holberg had not been played here for many years. It shows what a resouceful man can do with strings only. Our young composers demand an ultra-modern orchestra to express their raging emotions: a bass clarinet, English horn, at least three trumpets, a celesta, and pulsatile instruments galore. They make a thunderous noise to the joy of the crowd. Give them merely strings—and what would they do?

"The Moldau" of honest, patriotic Smetana, is not so impressive as "Vyschrad," the first tone poem of his cycle "My Country."

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Carpenter, Symphony No. 1 (first time here); Svendsen, "Zorahayda"; two pieces for viola and orchestra—d'Indy's Lied (originally writen for violocello) and Strube's Fantastic Dance, both played by Mr. Ferir; Goldmark, overture "Sappho."

Record Apr 11

PENSION FUND CONCERT COMES ON NEXT SUNDAY

Musical Season to Die With Fortisssimo Death Rattle

By J. V. Clark

The musical season is going to be in a very vigorous, lively state when it is killed off a few weeks hence. Some years the musical season's passing is marked by a gentle dying. The season sinks into a state of semi coma. A few minor artists, who have not had the courage to venture appearances in the height of the season, muster all possible nerve and appear before concertgoers flock to mountain and shore and before reviewers go mad with too much music.

This year there will be no petering out. The most brilliant events of the musical season mark its close. There will be a season of opera for one week and although the repertoire contains practically no novelty the old works chosen will be given in the best style the Metropolitan can offer. In concert hall Mme. Galli-Curci and Mr. John McCormack, the two artists among the singers who have the biggest concert following here, will give farewell recitals. Then, too, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its final Pension Fund concert. This comes Sunday.

Some day we are going to have the composing room set up and keep in type a little article on "Why Bostonians Should Buy Tickets for the Pension Fund Concerts." Then whenever a Pension Fund Concert is announced all that would be necessary would be to yank it out and use it. The arguments are always the same. Non-subscribers have few chances of hearing America's greatest orchestra. The Pension Fund Concerts offer these opportunities. The orchestra, Boston's pride and joy, should be heard by all citizens. The programs at these special concerts are made up of the best liked numbers in the orchestra's repertoire. Generally the orchestra has the assistance of some great soloist at these concerts. The hour of the concerts Sunday afternoon is satisfactory to almost every one. Go to the Pension Fund Concert Sunday. You will hear a great orchestra, with two interesting soloists, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, and Sophie Braslau, contralto, in an exceptionally interesting program.

Dramatic Notes

"Toot-Toot," a Henry Savage musical production, will be the offering at the Colonial, starting on April 22. Berton Braley, who for a long time wrote a daily poem for this paper, wrote the lyrics, and Jerome Kern, the music. The show is based on Rupert Hughes' old farce, "Excuse Me."

"Pollyanna," with Patricia Collinge still in the title role, will open a return Boston engagement at the Tremont, April 22.

Emilio de Gorgorza, baritone, will give a request program at his concert in Jordan Hall, Saturday afternoon, April 20.

D. Thomas Curtin, lecturer and author, who appeared successfully in Symphony Hall, recently, will give a second talk on "The Decisive Year" at the same place, on April 23.

Monitor Apr 9, 1918

MUSIC

Concert Notes

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, giving a concert for the benefit of its pension fund on the afternoon of Sunday, April 14, in Symphony Hall, will play the following program:

Berlioz, "Roman Carnival" overture; Mozart, piano concerto in D minor (Ossip Gabrilowitsch, soloist); aria (Miss Sophie Braslau); Saint-Saëns, "Danse macabre"; songs (Miss Braslau); Weber, concert piece for piano and orchestra (Mr. Gabrilowitsch); Tschaikowsky, "Nut Cracker" suite.

Record Apr 9, 1918

SPLENDID PROGRAM FOR PENSION FUND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert for its Pension Fund Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The orchestra will play Berlioz's Roman Carnival and Saint Saen's Danse Macabre. Ossip Gabrilowitsch will play two piano concertos, and Miss Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Co., will sing. The full program, which promises to be one of the most interesting of the season, will be announced later in the week.

Traveller Apr 9, 1918

SEEK DATA ON MUCK'S CITIZENSHIP

Department of Justice to Meet Claim of Switzerland

WASHINGTON, April 9—Information is being gathered by the department of justice to show Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, ordered interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, as both he and the Swiss minister assert. The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, has protested to both the state department and the department of justice against the internment.

Spent Life in Germany

Dr. Muck, according to the department of justice, was born in Germany and lived there most of his life. His father at one time moved to Switzerland and was naturalized while the son was a minor; but this fact never was made the basis of a claim of Swiss citizenship by Dr. Muck, officials say, until recently, when Germans were barred from the District of Columbia and waterfronts.

Monitor Apr 9, 1918

DR. MUCK AND SWISS CITIZENSHIP QUESTION

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Information is being gathered by the Department of Justice to show that Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ordered interned at Ft. Oglethorpe, Ga., as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, as both he and the Swiss Minister assert. Dr. Muck, according to the Department of Justice, was born in Germany and

Advertiser Apr 10-1918

DENY DR. MUCK IS CITIZEN OF SWITZERLAND

Department of Justice Is Seeking Information to Prove Claims

SAY MUSICIAN WAS BORN IN GERMANY

Assert That Muck Never Gave Up Citizenship Like His Father

Washington, April 9.—Information is being gathered by the Department of Justice to show that Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ordered interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, as both he and the Swiss Minister assert.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, has protested to both the State Department and the Department of Justice against the internment.

Dr. Muck, according to the Department of Justice, was born in Germany and lived there most of his life. His father at one time moved to Switzerland and was naturalized while the son was a minor, but this fact never was made the basis of a claim of Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck, officials say, until recently, when Germans were barred from the District of Columbia and waterfronts.

Globe Apr 10-1918

TRYING TO PROVE DR MUCK NOT A SWISS

Department of Justice Is Gathering Information

Assert Orchestra Leader Never Made That Claim Until Recently

WASHINGTON, April 9—Information is being gathered by the Department of Justice to show that Dr Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ordered interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga, as an enemy alien, is not a Swiss citizen, though both he and the Swiss Minister so assert. The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, has protested to both the State Department and the Department of Justice against the internment.

Dr Muck, according to the Department of Justice, was born in Germany and lived there most of his life. His father at one time moved to Switzerland and was naturalized, while the son was a minor, but this fact never was made the basis of a claim of Swiss citizenship by Dr Muck, officials say, until recently, when Germans were barred from the District of Columbia and water fronts.

Record Apr 12-1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

The Pops of 1918

GOOD word indeed comes from Symphony Hall as to the Pop Concerts of 1918. They will begin as usual on the Monday—May 6—following the end of the Symphony Concerts, and, again as usual, they will continue for nine weeks ending on Saturday, July 6. So much is routine. The new promise, as it happens, comes in return to old practice. For two or three years past singers have made their way into The Pops. Some were interesting to hear; quite as many were not; all were out of place in such concerts. By many a test it is doubtful whether the audiences gained any more pleasure from them than the normal course of The Pops would have afforded. Anyhow, to that normal course The Pops of 1918 will return. If any assisting singers are heard, they will be few and far between, while the present communiqué gives no hint of any substituted innovation. Again, so much the better. The Pops established themselves in the interest and the good will of the public, spring after spring, as concerts where, seated at tables, smoking, drinking, chatting at will, "those present" could take the pleasure of light music, agreeably played. As such they flourished in the old Music Hall down town, and again in Symphony Hall up town. More recently came the tendency to make them more like formal concerts, with too numerous hushings of the audience before "serious" pieces, with intruding "soloists," with somewhat too much regard for those austere folk of the balconies whose only satisfaction in The Pops is the satisfaction of the music. If, as the communiqué foreshadows, the concerts are now to return to old ways, so much more the pleasure and—not seldom—the numbers of the audience. After all, they are primarily an entertainment at which to drop in and take one's ease.

Here in Boston

In detail, the programme for the concert of the Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon next, for the increase of its Pension Fund, stands as follows, alike in the purely orchestral numbers and in those for the "assisting artists," Mr. Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, and Miss Braslau, the singer:

Overture, "Roman Carnival" ..... Berlioz
Concerto for piano in D minor ..... Mozart
Mr. Gabrilowitsch
Air, "Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix," from "Samson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saëns
Miss Braslau
Danse Macabre ..... Saint-Saëns
Songs with Piano:
Do Not Sing, Oh Maiden ..... Rakhmaninov
The Classicist ..... Musorgsky
Eili, Eili ..... Schalitt
Miss Braslau
Concert Piece for piano in F minor ..... Weber
Mr. Gabrilowitsch
Suite from the ballet, "The Nutcracker." Chaikovsky

Preparations ...

Herald Apr 13, 1918

21ST CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

Miss Novaes, Pianist, Makes Impressive Debut with the Orchestra

PROGRAM WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE

The 21st concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Schmidt conducted. The program was as follows: Dittersdorf-Kretzschmar, Symphony in C; Chopin, Concerto in F, No. 2, for piano; Grieg, Suite for Strings, "From Holberg's Time"; Smetana, Symphonic Poem, "The Moldau."

Miss Guiomar Novaes, who played here for the first time with the orchestra, gave a beautiful performance of Chopin's concerto, beautiful because it was euphonious, lucid, irreproachable in matters of technic, musically intelligent. First of all, she did not abuse the traditional liberty in rhythm known vaguely as "Chopin's rubato." Her performance was well-rhythmed and at the same time elastic. Seldom, if ever, have we heard the recitative in the middle section of the Larghetto—the finest and most effective pages of the concerto—declaimed with so poetically dramatic authority. Her touch was delightful, whatever degree of force was demanded. There was strength enough; there was always tonal euphony. It was said recently of a pianist in London that he respected the limitations of the piano. This might well be said of Miss Novaes. It might also be said of her that she abstained from the sentimentalism that too often is applauded as "great expression." In no way did she make a cheap appeal. Her physical repose in playing was another feature of her performance.

What induced the amiable Mr. Schmidt to drag Dittersdorf's symphony from the sepulchre? Mr. Paur, who at times committed strange freaks in program-making, exhumed this symphony 21 years ago. It was then in an advanced state of decomposition. Dittersdorf was a fertile composer, but his chief work was the autobiography which he dictated shortly before his death; a book that gives a graphic description of musical conditions and musicians in the latter half of the 18th century; a book that is also interesting by reason of the personal confessions; a book that leaves one with an affectionate regard for the author. If any symphony by Dittersdorf is to be played, why not one of those suggested by Ovid's "Metamorphoses"? "The Transformation of Actaeon," for example? The second movement of it portrays Diana bathing. We should like to know how Dittersdorg pictured this in tones.

Grieg's suite in honor of Holberg had not been played here for many years. It shows what a resourceful man can do with strings only. Our young composers demand an ultra-modern orchestra to express their raging emotions: a bass clarinet, English horn, at least three trumpets, a celesta, and pulsatile instruments galore. They make a thunderous noise to the joy of the crowd. Give them merely strings—and what would they do?

"The Moldau" of honest, patriotic Smetana, is not so impressive as "Vyschrad," the first tone poem of his cycle "My Country."

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week is as follows: Carpenter, Symphony No. 1 (first time here); Svendsen, "Zorahayda"; two pieces for viola and orchestra—d'Indy's Lied (originally writen for violocello) and Strube's Fantastic Dance, both played by Mr. Ferir; Goldmark, overture "Sappho."

Record Apr 18

PENSION FUND CONCERT COMES ON NEXT SUNDAY

Musical Season to Die With Fortisssimo Death Rattle

By J. V. Clark

The musical season is going to be in a very vigorous, lively state when it is killed off a few weeks hence. Some years the musical season's passing is marked by a gentle dying. The season sinks into a state of semi coma. A few minor artists, who have not had the courage to venture appearances in the height of the season, muster all possible nerve and appear before concertgoers flock to mountain and shore and before reviewers go mad with too much music.

This year there will be no petering out. The most brilliant events of the musical season mark its close. There will be a season of opera for one week and although the repertoire contains practically no novelty the old works chosen will be given in the best style the Metropolitan can offer. In concert hall Mme. Galli-Curci and Mr. John McCormack, the two artists among the singers who have the biggest concert following here, will give farewell recitals. Then, too, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its final Pension Fund concert. This comes Sunday.

Some day we are going to have the composing room set up and keep in type a little article on "Why Bostonians Should Buy Tickets for the Pension Fund Concerts." Then whenever a Pension Fund Concert is announced all that would be necessary would be to yank it out and use it. The arguments are always the same. Non-subscribers have few chances of hearing America's greatest orchestra. The Pension Fund Concerts offer these opportunities. The orchestra, Boston's pride and joy, should be heard by all citizens. The programs at these special concerts are made up of the best liked numbers in the orchestra's repertoire. Generally the orchestra has the assistance of some great soloist at these concerts. The hour of the concerts Sunday afternoon is satisfactory to almost every one. Go to the Pension Fund Concert Sunday. You will hear a great orchestra, with two interesting soloists, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, and Sophie Braslau, contralto, in an exceptionally interesting program.

Dramatic Notes

"Toot-Toot," a Henry Savage musical production, will be the offering at the Colonial, starting on April 22. Berton Braley, who for a long time wrote a daily poem for this paper, wrote the lyrics, and Jerome Kern, the music. The show is based on Rupert Hughes' old farce, "Excuse Me."

"Pollyanna," with Patricia Collinge still in the title role, will open a return Boston engagement at the Tremont, April 22.

Emilio de Gorgorza, baritone, will give a request program at his concert in Jordan Hall, Saturday afternoon, April 20.

D. Thomas Curtin, lecturer and author, who appeared successfully in Symphony Hall, recently, will give a second talk on "The Decisive Year" at the same place, on April 23.

LITERARY DIGEST
ss: New York City.
MAR 30 1918

THE ANTHEM WEST AND EAST

TWO ENDS OF THE CONTINENT are troubled over the way the "Star-Spangled Banner" is played. Soldiers in Seattle object to having the national anthem played by theater orchestras, and raise the question of the proper etiquette of this observance. Whatever the etiquette may be it is but dimly apprehended by the lay portion of the people, tho the military may understand it thoroughly. In the East, on the other hand, the manner of its rendition excites comment and the suggestion that the observance of patriotic sentiment by the playing of the nation's anthem is in notable cases but an element of camouflage. The Spokesman (Spokane) observes:

"Early in the war the question of when and how the flag should be displayed was discust at great length and various sets of rules promulgated, none of them, however, with any official stamp. It is the same with the song that is generally recognized, altho not legally sanctioned, as the national air.

"The soldiers at Spokane may have a perfect right to object to hearing 'The Star-Spangled Banner' more or less perfunctorily performed by musicians in a theater. In the Army the tune is strictly set apart for stated ceremonial occasions. Respect and deference toward it are rigidly upheld. It is natural that men trained in this code should disapprove of the use of the air as part of a theatrical performance, much as they would disapprove of pseudo-patriotic flag-waving by chorus girls in a musical comedy.

"Civilians have a slightly different viewpoint. They have not been trained in ritualistic use of the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' and are likely to assert that they see no reason why it should not be played on any and all occasions. In fact, in various communities, they have made trouble for orchestras that have been reluctant to give the air as a preface to each performance.

"All this makes things confusing for the managers of theaters and other public places. As a rule they are anxious to do the right thing, if only they can be sure what the right thing is. They would much appreciate an official pronouncement on the ethics of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' and so would a good many other people."

A GUYNEMER VICTORY.

The pilot of the German plane being killed, the machine toppled and threw out the observer, who is here shown in Mr. Farré's painting falling through the air. A quick swerve by Guynemer was needed to escape being hit by the falling foe.

The New York Evening Sun is not so much troubled over the question of etiquette, but finds such a variety of manner that suggests improvement might be made in places:

"The great song is played in as many different ways, we believe, as there are orchestras and conductors. It is always fine; in spite of foolish talk the air is noble and appealing; but it varies in beauty and thrill according to the interpretation, and in an extraordinary degree.

"It would be tiresome to dwell on the rendering given by the average theater band. It is usually wholesome and sincere without any very distinguished artistry or temperamental fire. The same may be said of some of the great musical organizations. The Philharmonic, for instance, has a workmanlike arrangement which it goes through earnestly as a duty too solemn to be mixed with anything like enthusiasm. Dr. Karl Muck and his splendid group of players also do their duty to the flag with decorous restraint and conscientious accuracy, but without any notable display of emotion. The Chicago Opera Company orchestra made rather a business of it, like grace before meat.

"Two versions, however, with which the public have now become very familiar, take the playing of the National Anthem out of the range of the perfunctory and lift its vibrations from the mere atmosphere up into the realms of the ether. The Metropolitan Opera-house is happy in a score which must have been written by one who truly felt the inspiration of the flag and who loved it and all that it represents. The instrumentation, which is delicate without being in the least weak, seems to picture in harmoniously blended tone colors the blessings for which the Star-Spangled Banner stands as the symbol to mankind. The climax is reached in a screaming trumpet note of piercing sweetness, which corresponds with the word 'Free'—'the Land of the Free'—in the verbal text. It can hardly be called an eagle cry, for it is too mellow and golden in its quality; but it has in it challenge and defiance, as well as exultation; it expresses pride, contentment, thanksgiving, and at the same time an unbounded courage and resolution.

"But perhaps the best rendering of all, particularly in time of war, is that of Mr. Walter Damrosch and his Symphony Orchestra. It is full chested and full voiced, manly, soldierly, fiery, aggressive, attacking the ear with shrilling reeds and loud proclaiming brass, while the roll and beat of the drums throng the veins of the auditors with quickening pulsations. The excitement of the music and the hearers grow together to the climax . . . . . .

"This arrangement would be perfect if Mr. Damrosch could add to it the fine trumpet scream of the Metropolitan. What is more, the way he conducts it is worth witnessing. Mr. Damrosch stands facing the audience, and as he wields his baton he has the air of a high priest officiating at a great religious function—and so he is, for the moment. More people sing the anthem along with his orchestra than anywhere else in New York and the number who do grows every week."

Without diminishing the credit due to the Metropolitan, The Evening Sun is reminded that singers who can reach it have been giving the "screaming" top note ever since Mme. Parepa Rosa did it in the Boston Peace Jubilee in 1875.

ORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 31 1918

RICHARDS' REVIEW OF THE WEEK

From ENQUIRER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date APR 1 - 1918

90

Dr. Karl Muck's Resignation Accepted

In accepting the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the management of that organization, making a virtue of necessity, has belatedly and with unconcealed reluctance met the imperative demands of an inexorable situation which should have been frankly faced and resolutely settled the very moment it was presented. There was every reason why Muck's connection with the orchestra which he directed should have been severed the moment it became apparent, as it quickly did, that his public appearances had become offensive to a very large and a most respectable element of our American citizenship.

There has been a controversy over the facts in the case which has no importance and into which it is not worth while entering. It has been said and insisted upon that he never did refuse to play the national anthem, but whether he did or did not is immaterial. It is of no more consequence than the other fact that under the pressure of a public opinion too strong to be withstood the management eventually receded from the position in this respect which it originally assumed.

Nor need the question which has been raised as to Dr. Muck's political allegiance be taken seriously or its pertinence to the issue recognized. The public has been told that Muck is a Swiss citizen, and the management has been very eager in its exhibition of official documents which purport to sustain that claim. But this demonstration was too obviously an afterthought to be in the least convincing. No one had ever heard of the alleged Swiss citizenship until circumstances had rendered its disclosure and assertion convenient, and it is a safe guess that no one ever would have heard of it had it not become necessary to establish a kind of alibi for the discredited conductor's rescue. According to good authority Muck was born in the Bavarian city where the Wurzberger flows, and if he ever considered himself a Swiss there was unquestionably a time when his friends would have been greatly surprised to learn of it.

Whatever the technical truth may be, the fact is that to all intents and purposes Muck is a German, and that in the present momentous struggle all his sympathies are with his native country is something about which no one has been left in doubt. Even when discharging his official duties and acknowledging the courtesies of the unduly tolerant and too good-natured audiences by which his concerts were attended, his whole demeanor has communicated the impression of an arrogant hostility and his attitude has perfectly suited his description as an alien enemy. He has now been placed where he belongs, but the orchestra management will suffer in the public esteem by having delayed its present action until the course of events had virtually left it no choice in the matter.

om
ldress
ate
APR 1

OFFICIALS SEEK TO CONNECT MUCK WITH PROPAGANDA

Federal Agents Endeavor to Trace Musician's Relations with Dr. Karl Oscar Bertling, Said to be in U. S. as Special Emissary from Berlin.

Boston, April 1.—Officials of the Department of Justice are trying to learn whether there was any connection in the work of German propaganda between Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Osgar Bertling, both of whom are being detained as alien enemies.

Dr. Bertling has received degrees from Harvard University and is said to have been in this country as a special agent of the German Government, coming here soon after the opening of the war.

It is said that the Government is still investigating a number of fires of mysterious origin which have occurred in this State, but whether Dr. Bertling has come under suspicion in connection with them officials refuse to say.

A new system of wieless telegraphy has been used by German agents in New England and possibly in Boston, it was learned.

The system consists of indoor antennae, which, with the remainder of the apparatus, is concealed in a secret room in houses located in sequesteerd places. In this way there are no aerials for Secret Service operatives or others to discover, and the noise made by the powerful sending apparatus, is drowned out by chopping wood, running a gasoline pumping engine or other means.

The system is believed to be the latest development in wireless communication discovered by Germa nagents who have been wroking since the beginning of the war to thwart the United States Secret and the Intelligence Departmehts of the army and navy.

LITERARY DIGEST
ss: New York City.
MAR 30 1918

THE ANTHEM WEST AND EAST

TWO ENDS OF THE CONTINENT are troubled over the way the "Star-Spangled Banner" is played. Soldiers in Seattle object to having the national anthem played by theater orchestras, and raise the question of the proper etiquette of this observance. Whatever the etiquette may be it is but dimly apprehended by the lay portion of the people, tho the military may understand it thoroughly. In the East, on the other hand, the manner of its rendition excites comment and the suggestion that the observance of patriotic sentiment by the playing of the nation's anthem is in notable cases but an element of camouflage. The Spokesman (Spokane) observes:

"Early in the war the question of when and how the flag should be displayed was discust at great length and various sets of rules promulgated, none of them, however, with any official stamp. It is the same with the song that is generally recognized, altho not legally sanctioned, as the national air.

"The soldiers at Spokane may have a perfect right to object to hearing 'The Star-Spangled Banner' more or less perfunctorily performed by musicians in a theater. In the Army the tune is strictly set apart for stated ceremonial occasions. Respect and deference toward it are rigidly upheld. It is natural that men trained in this code should disapprove of the use of the air as part of a theatrical performance, much as they would disapprove of pseudo-patriotic flag-waving by chorus girls in a musical comedy.

"Civilians have a slightly different viewpoint. They have not been trained in ritualistic use of the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' and are likely to assert that they see no reason why it should not be played on any and all occasions. In fact, in various communities, they have made trouble for orchestras that have been reluctant to give the air as a preface to each performance.

"All this makes things confusing for the managers of theaters and other public places. As a rule they are anxious to do the right thing, if only they can be sure what the right thing is. They would much appreciate an official pronouncement on the ethics of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' and so would a good many other people."

The New York Evening Sun is not so much troubled over the question of etiquette, but finds such a variety of manner that suggests improvement might be made in places:

"The great song is played in as many different ways, we believe, as there are orchestras and conductors. It is always fine; in spite of foolish talk the air is noble and appealing; but it varies in beauty and thrill according to the interpretation, and in an extraordinary degree.

"It would be tiresome to dwell on the rendering given by the average theater band. It is usually wholesome and sincere without any very distinguished artistry or temperamental fire. The same may be said of some of the great musical organizations. The Philharmonic, for instance, has a workmanlike arrangement which it goes through earnestly as a duty too solemn to be mixed with anything like enthusiasm. Dr. Karl Muck and his splendid group of players also do their duty to the flag with decorous restraint and conscientious accuracy, but without any notable display of emotion. The Chicago Opera Company orchestra made rather a business of it, like grace before meat.

"Two versions, however, with which the public have now become very familiar, take the playing of the National Anthem out of the range of the perfunctory and lift its vibrations from the mere atmosphere up into the realms of the ether. The Metropolitan Opera-house is happy in a score which must have been written by one who truly felt the inspiration of the flag and who loved it and all that it represents. The instrumentation, which is delicate without being in the least weak, seems to picture in harmoniously blended tone colors the blessings for which the Star-Spangled Banner stands as the symbol to mankind. The climax is reached in a screaming trumpet note of piercing sweetness, which corresponds with the word 'Free'—'the Land of the Free'—in the verbal text. It can hardly be called an eagle cry, for it is too mellow and golden in its quality; but it has in it challenge and defiance, as well as exultation; it expresses pride, contentment, thanksgiving, and at the same time an unbounded courage and resolution.

"But perhaps the best rendering of all, particularly in time of war, is that of Mr. Walter Damrosch and his Symphony Orchestra. It is full chested and full voiced, manly, soldierly, fiery, aggressive, attacking the ear with shrilling reeds and loud proclaiming brass, while the roll and beat of the drums throng the veins of the auditors with quickening pulsations. The excitement of the music and the hearers grow together to the climax . . . . . .

"This arrangement would be perfect if Mr. Damrosch could add to it the fine trumpet scream of the Metropolitan. What is more, the way he conducts it is worth witnessing. Mr. Damrosch stands facing the audience, and as he wields his baton he has the air of a high priest officiating at a great religious function—and so he is, for the moment. More people sing the anthem along with his orchestra than anywhere else in New York and the number who do grows every week."

Without diminishing the credit due to the Metropolitan, The Evening Sun is reminded that singers who can reach it have been giving the "screaming" top note ever since Mme. Parepa Rosa did it in the Boston Peace Jubilee in 1875.

A GUYNEMER VICTORY.

The pilot of the German plane being killed, the machine toppled and threw out the observer, who is here shown in Mr. Farré's painting falling through the air. A quick swerve by Guynemer was needed to escape being hit by the falling foe.

NORTH AMERICAN
Philadelphia, Pa.

RICHARDS' REVIEW OF THE WEEK

From ENQUIRER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

Dr. Karl Muck's Resignation Accepted

In accepting the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the management of that organization, making a virtue of necessity, has belatedly and with unconcealed reluctance met the imperative demands of an inexorable situation which should have been frankly faced and resolutely settled the very moment it was presented. There was every reason why Muck's connection with the orchestra which he directed should have been severed the moment it became apparent, as it quickly did, that his public appearances had become offensive to a very large and a most respectable element of our American citizenship.

There has been a controversy over the facts in the case which has no importance and into which it is not worth while entering. It has been said and insisted upon that he never did refuse to play the national anthem, but whether he did or did not is immaterial. It is of no more consequence than the other fact that under the pressure of a public opinion too strong to be withstood the management eventually receded from the position in this respect which it originally assumed.

Nor need the question which has been raised as to Dr. Muck's political allegiance be taken seriously or its pertinence to the issue recognized. The public has been told that Muck is a Swiss citizen, and the management has been very eager in its exhibition of official documents which purport to sustain that claim. But this demonstration was too obviously an afterthought to be in the least convincing. No one had ever heard of the alleged Swiss citizenship until circumstances had rendered its disclosure and assertion convenient, and it is a safe guess that no one ever would have heard of it had it not become necessary to establish a kind of alibi for the discredited conductor's rescue. According to good authority Muck was born in the Bavarian city where the Wurzberger flows, and if he ever considered himself a Swiss there was unquestionably a time when his friends would have been greatly surprised to learn of it.

Whatever the technical truth may be, the fact is that to all intents and purposes Muck is a German, and that in the present momentous struggle all his sympathies are with his native country is something about which no one has been left in doubt. Even when discharging his official duties and acknowledging the courtesies of the unduly tolerant and too good-natured audiences by which his concerts were attended, his whole demeanor has communicated the impression of an arrogant hostility and his attitude has perfectly suited his description as an alien enemy. He has now been placed where he belongs, but the orchestra management will suffer in the public esteem by having delayed its present action until the course of events had virtually left it no choice in the matter.

om
ldress
te

OFFICIALS SEEK TO CONNECT MUCK WITH PROPAGANDA

Federal Agents Endeavor to Trace Musician's Relations with Dr. Karl Oscar Bertling, Said to be in U. S. as Special Emissary from Berlin.

Boston, April 1.—Officials of the Department of Justice are trying to learn whether there was any connection in the work of German propaganda between Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Osgar Bertling, both of whom are being detained as alien enemies.

Dr. Bertling has received degrees from Harvard University and is said to have been in this country as a special agent of the German Government, coming here soon after the opening of the war.

It is said that the Government is still investigating a number of fires of mysterious origin which have occurred in this State, but whether Dr. Bertling has come under suspicion in connection with them officials refuse to say.

A new system of wieless telegraphy has been used by German agents in New England and possibly in Boston, it was learned.

The system consists of indoor antennae, which, with the remainder of the apparatus, is concealed in a secret room in houses located in sequesteerd places. In this way there are no aerials for Secret Service operatives or others to discover, and the noise made by the powerful sending apparatus, is drowned out by chopping wood, running a gasoline pumping engine or other means.

The system is believed to be the latest development in wireless communication discovered by Germa nagents who have been wroking since the beginning of the war to thwart the United States Secret and the Intelligence Departments of the army and navy.

Baltimore, Md.

Music

In an interesting article on the performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at orchestra concerts that appeared in the New York Evening Sun not long ago it was declared that the best interpretation of the national anthem is that of the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch's direction.

"Two versions with which the public have now become familiar," the writer says, referring to New York audiences, "take the playing of the anthem out of the range of the perfunctory and lift its vibrations from the mere atmosphere up into the realms of the ether.

"The Metropolitan Opera House is happy in a score which must have been written by one who truly felt the inspiration of the flag and loved it and all that it represents. The instrumentation, which is delicate without being in the least weak, seems to picture in harmoniously blended tone colors the blessings for which "The Star-Spangled Banner" stands as a symbol to mankind.

"The climax is reached in a screaming trumpet note of piercing sweetness, which corresponds with the word 'free'—'the land of the free'—in the verbal text. It can hardly be called an eagle cry, for it is too mellow and golden in its quality, but it has in it challenge and defiance as well as exultation; it expresses pride, contentment, thanksgiving and at the same time an unbounded courage and resolution.

"But perhaps the best rendering of all, particularly in time of war, is that of Walter Damrosch and his Symphony Orchestra. It is full-chested and full-voiced, manly, soldiery, fiery, aggressive, attacking the ear with shrilling reeds and loud proclaiming brass, while the roll and beat of the drums throng the veins of the auditors with quickening pulsations."

This arrangement, the essayist concludes, "would be perfect if Mr. Damrosch would add to it the fine trumpet scream of the Metropolitan." More people, it is added, sing the anthem at Mr. Damrosch's concerts than at any other in New York.

—✣—

In dealing with the reading by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Musik Kriegsherr Muck and his "splendid group of players" are described as doing "their duty to the flag with decorous restraint and conscientious accuracy but without any display of emotion."

This strikes me as a concession made perhaps in a spirit of fairness. It differs materially from the opinion I have heard other critics express.

Some of them have declared that Dr. Muck's reading of "The Star-Spangled Banner" was so flippant and indecorous as to amount almost to indecency. But that was in the earlier days when we were all fussed up about the row over the refusal of the tactful "Swiss" director, whose loyalty to American ideals has such a delicate Berlinesque touch, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence.

Baltimore as a result of that episode set an example of aggressive patriotism in forbidding the Boston Symphony admission to its gates that shames every other city in which it was allowed to come and go as usual.

—✣—

The fact that Dr. Muck has finally been held under a warrant as an alien enemy and that his arrest is said to be regarded by Federal authorities as one of the most important since the United States entered the war in large measure vindicates the stand taken here.

There are many, including myself, who hope that "this fellow," as former Governor Warfield called him in one of his milder outbursts, will be interned for the period of the war.

This is no time for mincing words, making apologies or compromising where disloyalty, even if only a matter of suspicion, is concerned.

—✣—

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

APR 2 1918

WOULD DROP STRANSKY.

Letter Read to Directors, Who Take No Action.

At a meeting of the directors of the Philharmonic Society yesterday a letter from Richard Fletcher to Mrs. George L. Cheney was read suggesting that the society drop Josef Stransky as conductor and mentioning several men as possible successors. The writer referred to Mr. Stransky's nationality.

Mrs. Cheney, a director, was prompted to inquire why the letter was addressed to her and who the writer might be. No action was taken.

Felix Leiffels, Secretary of the society, later said that Mr. Stransky is a Czech, some of whom are fighting with the Allies. Mr. Stransky, he said, has been conducting under the service flag, has played at army camps and is on the square and is satisfactory.

Mrs. William Jay, who started an agitation against Dr. Muck of the Boston orchestra, resigned from the Philharmonic board three weeks ago. Howard Taylor was elected to fill her place. Mrs. George Cheney, Richard Arnold and Henry E. Cooper were re-elected directors for five years. No President was chosen to succeed Oswald G. Villard. Richard Arnold was re-elected Vice President, Felix Leiffels, Secre-

Address New York City

APR 2 1918

JOSEF STRANSKY AVOWS AMERICAN SYMPATHIES

PHILHARMONIC CONDUCTOR SAYS ATTACK ON HIM IS UNFAIR

A Bohemian Who Has Taken Out First Papers—Secretary of Society Supports Orchestra Leader.

Josef Stransky to-day characterized as unjustified the attempt to oust him as leader of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra on the ground of pro-Germanism. He was a Bohemian, he said, and under the President's proclamation should not be rated as an enemy alien. Besides he had taken out his first papers toward becoming an American citizen, and in so doing had renounced allegiance to Austria-Hungary. Mr. Stransky said that his record was proof of his sympathy with the cause of America and her allies.

"I am an American in my sympathies through and through," he said. "Early in the war I conducted a concert in Brooklyn for the Red Cross, and I was the first to arrange a concert for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers. I have given concerts for the soldiers at Camp Dix and Camp Upton, and been the guest of the officers there at dinner."

In regard to his social relations with Lady Speyer, Mr. Stransky said that he knew her only as an English woman, and knew nothing of her politics. He admitted that he had been photographed with Count von Bernstorff and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger, but remarked: "That was before America entered the war, when the German Ambassador was still a welcome guest at the White House."

The attempt to oust Mr. Stransky came before the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Philharmonic Society last night through a letter from Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, of this city, a "society publication." Mr. Fletcher wrote to Mrs. George L. Cheney, one of the directors, saying:

"I am actuated by no personal sentiments, and I am merely convinced that now is the time for every true American to stamp out whatever Teuton influence there remains in this country. This means winning the war, and in the wake of the case of Dr. Muck, a friend of Mr. Stransky, there can be no choice.

"I have been told that Mr. Stransky's box at the Philharmonic has been visited by Lady Speyer, whose sympathies are known to be German, and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger, whose name has been published in connection with two questionable incidents. I am also taking the liberty of saying to you that both Eugène Ysaye and Verbrugger, Belgians and allies, would be honored to lead the Philharmonic."

No action was taken upon this letter by the board of directors.

At the same meeting Mrs. William Jay, who was associated with Fletcher in the recent attempt to make trouble for Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presented her resignation as a director. Mrs. Jay did not make any allusion in her letter to Mr. Stransky, but it was assumed that this might have been one of her reasons.

Felix R. Leifels, secretary of the Philharmonic Society, said to-day that he could see no ground for criticism of Mr. Stransky. He endorsed what the orchestra leader said in regard to his nationality and sympathies, and added: "I have been with Mr. Stransky through his entire term of eighty-six concerts, and I can say that he has been conducting this season with our service flag of seventeen stars above him."

From NEWS

Address: Baltimore, Md.

MUCK OUT OF ORCHESTRA

Resignation Of Boston Orchestra Leader Accepted.

(By the Associated Press.)

Boston, March 31. — The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced last night that the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted.

Dr. Muck was arrested by Federal officers last Monday night under the enemy alien act and is at present confined in the jail at East Cambridge.

It is understood that the resignation which was offered last January when Dr. Muck was under a fire of criticism for alleged refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts will be effective at the close of the Orchestra's regulation season, May 4, when his contract expires. At present Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor, is leading the Orchestra.

AMERICAN

New York City.

New York City.

STRANSKY, IN REPLY: 'I'M LOYAL NOW'

Philharmonic Orchestra Conductor Admits His Sympathies Were with German People at First

Declares He Will Not Resign. Says He's American at Heart and Has Aided War Charities

Joseph Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, yesterday announced his definite American sympathies. He issued a statement answering Richard Fletcher's demand that he sever his connections with the orchestra because of his nationality. Stransky said in part in his own defense:

"While I readily admit that during the first part of the war my sympathies were with the German people, I was not in favor of the policies of the German Government. I opened the Philharmonic season with the playing of the 'Star Spangled Banner' without suggestion from any one. I come from Bohemia, but have renounced my native country and taken out my papers with the intention of becoming an American and of staying in America.

"Mr. Fletcher refers to the fact that at a Philharmonic concert Lady Speyer was in my box. Why doesn't he also refer to the fact that Mrs. Jay took luncheon at my home a short time ago or that the Scottish officer, Seumas, chief of Clan Shearghuis, also frequented the box? I have never discussed politics with Lady Speyer. I know Count von Bernstorff, but met him at the time he was still persona grata at the White House.

"I have contributed to war charities. It was my suggestion to the Philharmonic board that caused the elimination of compositions of living German composers from Philharmonic programmes for the duration of the war."

Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, served as Mrs. William Jay's secretary in her recent agitation to keep Dr. Muck from directing the Boston Symphony orchestra in this city. The request for the removal of Stransky was made in a letter sent to the Philharmonic Society's board of directors. Felix F. Leifels, secretary of the Philharmonic Orchestra, said yesterday that Mr. Stransky had no intention of resigning.

Mr. Fletcher, in his statement, declared that Leader Stransky is a great friend of Dr. Muck, recently seized by the Government as a dangerous enemy alien. He said there were German musical rings in every large American city now being used for purposes not pro-American.

The charges against Conductor Stransky stated that many Philharmonic subscribers have refused to attend the concerts. Mr. Fletcher said the opposition would not cease until the conductor resigned.

EVENING JOURNAL

New York.

APR 2 1918

MUCK'S PAPERS NVOLVE WOMEN

ast One Arrest for Pro-nan Activity Is Expected in Boston.

International News Service.

BOSTON, April 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is under arrest upon an espionage charge, was taken from the East Cambridge jail to be questioned by Federal District Attorney Backus, following the examination of Muck's papers.

The musician appeared humiliated when locked in the steel detention cage while awaiting the District Attorney's convenience. The prisoner had completely lost his debonnair attitude and was sullen and uncommunicative.

Information was refused as to what transpired when Muck was questioned, but it was stated that several women had been revealed, during the examination of the musician's

STRANSKY ATTACK WILL BE 'IGNORED'

Philharmonic Secretary Sure Conductor Is Pro-Ally, Despite Fletcher Charges.

ACCUSED MAN ANSWERS

Says He's American Through and Through—Has His First Papers.

Richard Fletcher, who served as the mouthpiece of Mrs. William Jay in her recent effort to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Carnegie Hall and Brooklyn's Academy of Music, has written a letter demanding the resignation or discharge of Josef Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic orchestra.

The letter, directed to Mrs. George L. Cheney, one of the directors of the Philharmonic Society, will be ignored, according to Felix F. Leifels, secretary. This letter, suggesting that a Belgian, preferably Ysaye or Verbrugger, would prove highly acceptable as a substitute for Stransky, far from being considered, is not even taken seriously, Mr. Liefels says. He adds:

"As Mr. Stransky is a Czecho-Slav and pro-Ally in sentiment, there is no reason in the world why he should resign. He has conducted under our service flag all season.

Has Played in Camps.

"He has played in the Natinal Army camps and been received by the American officers there. He is good Amrican and a pro-Czech. He applied for American citizenship some time ago and has his first papers. He was born in Bohemia and his own country is now at war with Germany."

To this Mr. Fletcher replied that the conductor, inevitably, would be forced to resign eventually, as the campaign against him "will continue and gather greater force with time." The principal complaint against Stransky seems to be that he was on friendly terms with Muck, who was arrested recently in Boston.

Mr. Fletcher says there are "German musical rings" in every large American city and that the Kaiser has begun to make use of them. In framing the indictment against Stransky, Fletcher adds this count:

"Some Philharmonic subscribers feel that Mr. Stransky is flaunting the public by having Mrs. Reisinger and Lady Speyer, who is intensely pro-German, in his box."

Mr. Stransky replied yesterday to the attempt to oust him with the claim that he is "American through and through," and recited past performances to prove it. He flatly denied his sympathies are pro-German or that he has knowingly selected friends of pro-German sentiment.

"I am an American in my sympathies through and through," he said. "Early in the war I conducted a concert in Brooklyn for the Red Cross, and I was the first to arrange a concert for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers. I have given concerts for the soldiers at Camp Dix and Camp Upton, and been the guest of the officers there at dinner."

Mr. Stransky said he knew Lady Speyer only as an English woman and had never inquired as to her politics. Regarding a charge that he had been photographed with Count von Bernstorff and Hugo Reisinger, he said:

"That was before America entered the war, when the German Ambassador was still a welcome guest at the White House."

m EVENING WORLD

dress: New York City.

U. S. TO ACT SOON AGAINST DR. MUCK

Proceedings Expected When Boston Officials Supply Information.

BOSTON, April 3.—Government action in the cases of Dr. Karl Muck, Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar von Bertling is expected within a short time, according to a statement made to-day. It is understood this action will be taken immediately upon receipt of full information concerning the two men which is to be forwarded by Federal officials in this city.

Following a two hours' questioning of Dr. Muck at the Federal Building yesterday, Assistant Prosecutor Dewey worked until a late hour last night on the mass of letters and documents that have been accumulated in connection with the case.

At the conclusion of his examination the conductor seemed much relieved and even appeared anxious to get back to the East Cambridge jail. Before his departure he was in consultation with Clift Rogers Clapp, a State Street attorney.

WESTCHESTER NOTES

RECORD

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

ACTION IN MUCK CASE SOON

Musician Again Questioned and Grows Restless in Jail.

Special to "The Record."

Boston, April 2.—Government action in the cases of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar von Bertling is expected within a short time, according to a statement made today. It is understood that this action will be taken immediately upon receipt of full information concerning the two men, which is to be forwarded by Federal officials in this city.

Following a two hours' questioning of Dr. Muck at the Federal Building, Assistant United States Attorney Dewey worked until a late hour on the mass of letters and documents that have been accumulated in connection with the case. This work was continued today, and it is considered of such importance that no attempt will be made to question Bertling until it is completed.

The replies made by Muck to questions were of such a nature that it is said a large number of notes were taken and further developments may be looked for. At the conclusion of the examination the musical director seemed much relieved, and even appeared anxious to get back to the East Cambridge jail. Before his departure he was in consultation with Cliff Rogers Clapp, an attorney.

It is said Muck is not taking kindly to his incarceration, the many restrictions chafing his temperamental disposition.

EAGLE

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. KARL MUCK QUIZZED

Boston, April 1—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been in jail at Cambridge since his arrest a week ago, as an enemy alien, was taken to the Federal Building today for further examination by officials of the Department of Justice. Much of the time was spent in the office of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, where Dr. Muck was questioned by the District Attorney and his assistants. The nature of the examination was not revealed.

om PUBLIC LEDGER

ddress Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 2 1918

DR. KARL MUCK EXAMINED

Looking Tired and Haggard From Jail Sojourn, Taken Before Federal Agents

Boston, April 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, looking haggard and worn from a week's confinement in jail under the enemy alien proclamation, was brought to the Federal Building today for a long examination.

Tonight, when he was recommitted to jail, the Federal officials said there were no new developments in the case. They indicated that there was little likelihood of any additional steps being taken until the authorities at Washington were ready for a final determination of the musician's status.

1884

Baltimore, Md.

Music

In an interesting article on the performance of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at orchestra concerts that appeared in the New York Evening Sun not long ago it was declared that the best interpretation of the national anthem is that of the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch's direction.

"Two versions with which the public have now become familiar," the writer says, referring to New York audiences, "take the playing of the anthem out of the range of the perfunctory and lift its vibrations from the mere atmosphere up into the realms of the ether.

"The Metropolitan Opera House is happy in a score which must have been written by one who truly felt the inspiration of the flag and loved it and all that it represents. The instrumentation, which is delicate without being in the least weak, seems to picture in harmoniously blended tone colors the blessings for which "The Star-Spangled Banner" stands as a symbol to mankind.

"The climax is reached in a screaming trumpet note of piercing sweetness, which corresponds with the word 'free'—'the land of the free'—in the verbal text. It can hardly be called an eagle cry, for it is too mellow and golden in its quality, but it has in it challenge and defiance as well as exultation; it expresses pride, contentment, thanksgiving and at the same time an unbounded courage and resolution.

"But perhaps the best rendering of all, particularly in time of war, is that of Walter Damrosch and his Symphony Orchestra. It is full-chested and full-voiced, manly, soldiery, fiery, aggressive, attacking the ear with shrilling reeds and loud proclaiming brass, while the roll and beat of the drums throng the veins of the auditors with quickening pulsations."

This arrangement, the essayist concludes, "would be perfect if Mr. Damrosch would add to it the fine trumpet scream of the Metropolitan." More people, it is added, sing the anthem at Mr. Damrosch's concerts than at any other in New York.

—✣—

In dealing with the reading by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Musik Kriegsherr Muck and his "splendid group of players" are described as doing "their duty to the flag with decorous restraint and conscientious accuracy but without any display of emotion."

This strikes me as a concession made perhaps in a spirit of fairness. It differs materially from the opinion I have heard other critics express.

Some of them have declared that Dr. Muck's reading of "The Star-Spangled Banner" was so flippant and indecorous as to amount almost to indecency. But that was in the earlier days when we were all fussed up about the row over the refusal of the tactful "Swiss" director, whose loyalty to American ideals has such a delicate Berlinesque touch, to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence.

Baltimore as a result of that episode set an example of aggressive patriotism in forbidding the Boston Symphony admission to its gates that shames every other city in which it was allowed to come and go as usual.

—✣—

The fact that Dr. Muck has finally been held under a warrant as an alien enemy and that his arrest is said to be regarded by Federal authorities as one of the most important since the United States entered the war in large measure vindicates the stand taken here.

There are many, including myself, who hope that "this fellow," as former Governor Warfield called him in one of his milder outbursts, will be interned for the period of the war.

This is no time for mincing words, making apologies or compromising where disloyalty, even if only a matter of suspicion, is concerned.

—✣—

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

APR 2 1918

WOULD DROP STRANSKY.

Letter Read to Directors, Who Take No Action.

At a meeting of the directors of the Philharmonic Society yesterday a letter from Richard Fletcher to Mrs. George L. Cheney was read suggesting that the society drop Josef Stransky as conductor and mentioning several men as possible successors. The writer referred to Mr. Stransky's nationality.

Mrs. Cheney, a director, was prompted to inquire why the letter was addressed to her and who the writer might be. No action was taken.

Felix Leiffels, Secretary of the society, later said that Mr. Stransky is a Czech, some of whom are fighting with the Allies. Mr. Stransky, he said, has been conducting under the service flag, has played at army camps and is on the square and is satisfactory.

Mrs. William Jay, who started an agitation against Dr. Muck of the Boston orchestra, resigned from the Philharmonic board three weeks ago. Howard Taylor was elected to fill her place. Mrs. George Cheney, Richard Arnold and Henry E. Cooper were re-elected directors for five years. No President was chosen to succeed Oswald G. Villard. Richard Arnold was re-elected Vice President. Felix Leiffels, Secre-

New York City

APR 2 1918

JOSEF STRANSKY AVOWS AMERICAN SYMPATHIES

PHILHARMONIC CONDUCTOR SAYS ATTACK ON HIM IS UNFAIR

A Bohemian Who Has Taken Out First Papers—Secretary of Society Supports Orchestra Leader.

Josef Stransky to-day characterized as unjustified the attempt to oust him as leader of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra on the ground of pro-Germanism. He was a Bohemian, he said, and under the President's proclamation should not be rated as an enemy alien. Besides he had taken out his first papers toward becoming an American citizen, and in so doing had renounced allegiance to Austria-Hungary. Mr. Stransky said that his record was proof of his sympathy with the cause of America and her allies.

"I am an American in my sympathies through and through," he said. "Early in the war I conducted a concert in Brooklyn for the Red Cross, and I was the first to arrange a concert for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers. I have given concerts for the soldiers at Camp Dix and Camp Upton, and been the guest of the officers there at dinner."

In regard to his social relations with Lady Speyer, Mr. Stransky said that he knew her only as an English woman, and knew nothing of her politics. He admitted that he had been photographed with Count von Bernstorff and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger, but remarked: "That was before America entered the war, when the German Ambassador was still a welcome guest at the White House."

The attempt to oust Mr. Stransky came before the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Philharmonic Society last night through a letter from Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, of this city, a "society publication." Mr. Fletcher wrote to Mrs. George L. Cheney, one of the directors, saying:

"I am actuated by no personal sentiments, and I am merely convinced that now is the time for every true American to stamp out whatever Teuton influence there remains in this country. This means winning the war, and in the wake of the case of Dr. Muck, a friend of Mr. Stransky, there can be no choice.

"I have been told that Mr. Stransky's box at the Philharmonic has been visited by Lady Speyer, whose sympathies are known to be German, and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger, whose name has been published in connection with two questionable incidents. I am also taking the liberty of saying to you that both Eugène Ysaye and Verbrugger, Belgians and allies, would be honored to lead the Philharmonic."

No action was taken upon this letter by the board of directors.

At the same meeting Mrs. William Jay, who was associated with Fletcher in the recent attempt to make trouble for Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presented her resignation as a director. Mrs. Jay did not make any allusion in her letter to Mr. Stransky, but it was assumed that this might have been one of her reasons.

Felix R. Leifels, secretary of the Philharmonic Society, said to-day that he could see no ground for criticism of Mr. Stransky. He endorsed what the orchestra leader said in regard to his nationality and sympathies, and added: "I have been with Mr. Stransky through his entire term of eighty-six concerts, and I can say that he has been conducting this season with our service flag of seventeen stars above him."

From NEWS

Address: Baltim

MUCK OUT OF OI

Resignation Of Boston Leader Accepte

(By the Associated Pr

Boston, March 31. — agement of the Boston Orchestra announced last the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor has been accepted.

Dr. Muck was arrested by Federal officers last Monday night under the enemy alien act and is at present confined in the jail at East Cambridge.

It is understood that the resignation which was offered last January when Dr. Muck was under a fire of criticism for alleged refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts will be effective at the close of the Orchestra's regulation season, May 4, when his contract expires. At present Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor, is leading the Orchestra.

AMERICAN

ess: New York City.

STRANSKY, IN REPLY: 'I'M LOYAL NOW'

Philharmonic Orchestra Conductor Admits His Sympathies Were with German People at First

Declares He Will Not Resign. Says He's American at Heart and Has Aided War Charities

Joseph Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, yesterday announced his definite American sympathies. He issued a statement answering Richard Fletcher's demand that he sever his connections with the orchestra because of his nationality. Stransky said in part in his own defense:

"While I readily admit that during the first part of the war my sympathies were with the German people, I was not in favor of the policies of the German Government. I opened the Philharmonic season with the playing of the 'Star Spangled Banner' without suggestion from any one. I come from Bohemia, but have renounced my native country and taken out my papers with the intention of becoming an American and of staying in America.

"Mr. Fletcher refers to the fact that at a Philharmonic concert Lady Speyer was in my box. Why doesn't he also refer to the fact that Mrs. Jay took luncheon at my home a short time ago or that the Scottish officer, Seumas, chief of Clan Shearghuis, also frequented the box? I have never discussed politics with Lady Speyer. I know Count von Bernstorff, but met him at the time he was still persona grata at the White House.

"I have contributed to war charities. It was my suggestion to the Philharmonic board that caused the elimination of compositions of living German composers from Philharmonic programmes for the duration of the war."

Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, served as Mrs. William Jay's secretary in her recent agitation to keep Dr. Muck from directing the Boston Symphony orchestra in this city. The request for the removal of Stransky was made in a letter sent to the Philharmonic Society's board of directors. Felix F. Leifels, secretary of the Philharmonic Orchestra, said yesterday that Mr. Stransky had no intention of resigning.

Mr. Fletcher, in his statement, declared that Leader Stransky is a great friend of Dr. Muck, recently seized by the Government as a dangerous enemy alien. He said there were German musical rings in every large American city now being used for purposes not pro-American.

The charges against Conductor Stransky stated that many Philharmonic subscribers have refused to attend the concerts. Mr. Fletcher said the opposition would not cease until the conductor resigned.

m EVENING JOURNAL

ress: New York.

APR 2 1918

MUCK'S PAPERS INVOLVE WOMEN

At Least One Arrest for Pro-German Activity Is Expected in Boston.

By International News Service.

BOSTON, April 2.—Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is under arrest upon an espionage charge, was taken from the East Cambridge jail to be questioned by Federal District Attorney Backus, following the examination of Muck's papers.

The musician appeared humiliated when locked in the steel detention cage while awaiting the District Attorney's convenience. The prisoner had completely lost his debonnair attitude and was sullen and uncommunicative.

Information was refused as to what transpired when Muck was questioned, but it was stated that several women had been revealed, during the examination of the musician's

STRANSKY ATTACK WILL BE 'IGNORED'

Philharmonic Secretary Sure Conductor Is Pro-Ally, Despite Fletcher Charges.

ACCUSED MAN ANSWERS

Says He's American Through and Through—Has His First Papers.

Richard Fletcher, who served as the mouthpiece of Mrs. William Jay in her recent effort to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Carnegie Hall and Brooklyn's Academy of Music, has written a letter demanding the resignation or discharge of Josef Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic orchestra.

The letter, directed to Mrs. George L. Cheney, one of the directors of the Philharmonic Society, will be ignored, according to Felix F. Leifels, secretary. This letter, suggesting that a Belgian, preferably Ysaye or Verbrugger, would prove highly acceptable as a substitute for Stransky, far from being considered, is not even taken seriously, Mr. Liefels says. He adds:

"As Mr. Stransky is a Czecho-Slav and pro-Ally in sentiment, there is no reason in the world why he should resign. He has conducted under our service flag all season.

Has Played in Camps.

"He has played in the Natinal Army camps and been received by the American officers there. He is good Amrican and a pro-Czech. He applied for American citizenship some time ago and has his first papers. He was born in Bohemia and his own country is now at war with Germany."

To this Mr. Fletcher replied that the conductor, inevitably, would be forced to resign eventually, as the campaign against him "will continue and gather greater force with time." The principal complaint against Stransky seems to be that he was on friendly terms with Muck, who was arrested recently in Boston.

Mr. Fletcher says there are "German musical rings" in every large American city and that the Kaiser has begun to make use of them. In framing the indictment against Stransky, Fletcher adds this count:

"Some Philharmonic subscribers feel that Mr. Stransky is flaunting the public by having Mrs. Reisinger and Lady Speyer, who is intensely pro-German, in his box."

Mr. Stransky replied yesterday to the attempt to oust him with the claim that he is "American through and through," and recited past performances to prove it. He flatly denied his sympathies are pro-German or that he has knowingly selected friends of pro-German sentiment.

"I am an American in my sympathies through and through," he said. "Early in the war I conducted a concert in Brooklyn for the Red Cross, and I was the first to arrange a concert for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers. I have given concerts for the soldiers at Camp Dix and Camp Upton, and been the guest of the officers there at dinner."

Mr. Stransky said he knew Lady Speyer only as an English woman and had never inquired as to her politics. Regarding a charge that he had been photographed with Count von Bernstorff and Hugo Reisinger, he said:

"That was before America entered the war, when the German Ambassador was still a welcome guest at the White House."

RECORD

ss: Philadelphia, Pa.

APR 2

ACTION IN MUCK CASE SOON

Musician Again Questioned and Grows Restless in Jail.

Special to "The Record."

Boston, April 2.—Government action in the cases of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar von Bertling is expected within a short time, according to a statement made today. It is understood that this action will be taken immediately upon receipt of full information concerning the two men, which is to be forwarded by Federal officials in this city.

Following a two hours' questioning of Dr. Muck at the Federal Building, Assistant United States Attorney Dewey worked until a late hour on the mass of letters and documents that have been accumulated in connection with the case. This work was continued today, and it is considered of such importance that no attempt will be made to question Bertling until it is completed.

The replies made by Muck to questions were of such a nature that it is said a large number of notes were taken and further developments may be looked for. At the conclusion of the examination the musical director seemed much relieved, and even appeared anxious to get back to the East Cambridge jail. Before his departure he was in consultation with Cliff Rogers Clapp, an attorney.

It is said Muck is not taking kindly to his incarceration, the many restrictions chafing his temperamental disposition.

EAGLE

: Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. KARL MUCK QUIZZED

Boston, April 1—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been in jail at Cambridge since his arrest a week ago, as an enemy alien, was taken to the Federal Building today for further examination by officials of the Department of Justice. Much of the time was spent in the office of United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, where Dr. Muck was questioned by the District Attorney and his assistants. The nature of the examination was not revealed.

om EVENING WORLD

dress: New York City.

U. S. TO ACT SOON AGAINST DR. MUCK

Proceedings Expected When Boston Officials Supply Information.

BOSTON, April 3.—Government action in the cases of Dr. Karl Muck, Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Karl Oskar von Bertling is expected within a short time, according to a statement made to-day. It is understood this action will be taken immediately upon receipt of full information concerning the two men which is to be forwarded by Federal officials in this city.

Following a two hours' questioning of Dr. Muck at the Federal Building yesterday, Assistant Prosecutor Dewey worked until a late hour last night on the mass of letters and documents that have been accumulated in connection with the case.

At the conclusion of his examination the conductor seemed much relieved and even appeared anxious to get back to the East Cambridge jail. Before his departure he was in consultation with Clift Rogers Clapp, a State Street attorney.

WESTCHESTER NOTES

'om PUBLIC LEDGER

ddress Philadelphia, Pa.

ate APR 2 1918

DR. KARL MUCK EXAMINED

Looking Tired and Haggard From Jail Sojourn, Taken Before Federal Agents

Boston, April 1.—Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, looking haggard and worn from a week's confinement in jail under the enemy alien proclamation, was brought to the Federal Building today for a long examination.

Tonight, when he was recommitted to jail, the Federal officials said there were no new developments in the case. They indicated that there was little likelihood of any additional steps being taken until the authorities at Washington were ready for a final determination of the musician's status.

1884

om PUBLIC LEDGER EVENING
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
ate APR 3 1918

THE GOWNSMAN

CLAUDE ACHILLE DEBUSSY, the noted French composer of highly original, successful and significant impressionistic music, is dead at the untimely age of fifty-six; and, by way of anticlimax, Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Orchestra, has been sent to prison. To consider the latter first, Doctor Muck's excellence as the conductor of a famous orchestra that was already made to his hand when he assumed its leadership is neither here nor there. And the question, "Shall we play enemy music?" is only subsidiary. The real issue is this: Shall we suffer art to cloak the propaganda of a relentless and unprincipled foe?

THE Germans are superior musicians. Music is the one art in which they have succeeded, in any measure, in rising above their national limitations. But the Germans are not the only musicians in the world and some of their greatest names are not quite so wholly German as we habitually think them. Beethoven was half Flemish, Mozart was a Tyrolese Austrian; in the fire and splendor of Wagner there has been suspected a tinge of the very Jewish strain which he so detested. The arts are not so much an endowment of race as the individual gift of fortune. Music flickered once in England, but that was as far back as the days of Elizabeth; painting blazed out in medieval Italy and still shines brightest in contemporary France. There was great drama in Greece, in Spain, in England in widely separated ages. And there will come a time when the arts will rise to their place beside other American achievements. Shall we give up German music? Not where it had risen out of the fogs of Germanism into the regions of universal art. Shall we give up German literature? Absolutely yes, where it is degraded into German propaganda or depraved by German insolent immorality. Shall we take this untimely time to exploit any of the Teutonic arts? Assuredly not, for there is little in their purely Teutonic elements worthy of exploitation; and the rest they had from the ancients, from the Italians, the French, and the English, elements now long since become the common heritage of mankind. But the Gownsman is getting lost in the folds of his gown.

IN THE death of Debussy the world of music has lost an extremely interesting artistic personality, one from whom the world might well have hoped that there was still much accomplishment to come. Debussy's work is at once that of a daring innovator, a craftsman of consummate skill and a poetic, at times a highly imaginative, spirit. There are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who discover for us the greater depths and riches which are inherent in the things which we now possess; and there are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who lead the way into new provinces of art. Debussy belongs to the latter daring and fascinating class, and he is problematic, as all such leaders must remain until time and the onward trend of the art of each shall justify his conquests. The association of Debussy's music with the futurists' art is natural, with impressionism, post-impressionism, cubism or whatever may be the name of the new artism with which the lagging and breathless Gownsman has failed to keep abreast. And our licensed libertine in words, the new free verse, is a fledgling of the same nest. But there is a difference, and a momentous one at that. The impatient student of art, weary of the slow academic processes of training, unwilling to try very hard or work very long, dashes off in a refractory mood a "thing," it matters not what, except that it be unlike any other "thing" in art or in life, shapeless, colorful, unsignificant, absurd. With this as his banner he marches forward with a handful of mad followers; and the further he goes, the further his distance from art. Or "the poet," unable to undergo the discipline of his sister art, unwilling to knead the intractable qualities of words into the ductility of verse, remembers that fine old rebel, Walt Whitman, and, following in his difficult path, whose large ideas sustained his stumbling feet, the poetling throws away rhyme, verse, beauty, significance, and in a jumble or sound imitates his friend the cubist in art.

DEBUSSY is not of this dilettante kind. He mastered the accepted laws of his art before he attempted to make new ones. He did not so much transgress the acknowledged conventions as he essayed to stretch their possibilities into the discovery of new harmonic combinations and progressions. And he informed all that he did with a rare creative impulse which, however delicate and difficult at times, is far from the vagueness, uncertainty and indecision of the seekers after novelty, whether in music, poetry or art.

WE ARE becoming inured rather than accustomed to the German claim of everything in sight. These shameless claims extend even to the invisible empire of the arts. When an author, a painter, a sculptor or poet rises to eminence in his art, he becomes, by reason of his excellence, a world-poet, a world-painter a world-author, and therefore German. Germany long since appropriated Shakespeare, Moliere and Dante. She had the impertinence last year to condole with France in the death of the eminent sculptor, Rodin, and she will doubtless perpetrate a like impertinence now that Debussy is gone. A German submarine blew up the channel steamer Sussex, laden with harmless civilians in travel to and fro; and among their victims was Enrique Granados, the famous Spanish composer, returning to Spain from America, where he had attended the successful presentation in New York of an opera of his. After lying about this crime like a schoolboy in a scrape, and being caught in the lie to add to the crime, the Imperial Government of the German Empire condescended to express regret for this "accident," and it has now offered to pay the family of Senor Granados 666,000 pesetas that the world may know how Kultur esteems music, even though it be only Spanish music.

THE Gownsman remembers to have sat at table once, some time before America entered this war, with the world's great pianist, Paderewski, and the eminent violinist, Kreisler. The latter, an Austrian, had served his country against Russia, it will be remembered, and had written a little book about his experiences in which there is no word of rancor and unkindness. M. Paderewski is a Pole and, like every true Pole, a patriot. These great artists, on either side of a charming American hostess, discussed the war with candor, with courtesy and without heat, though one had been maimed by it, and the other, M. Paderewski, told of the beautiful estate which he had loved, tended and planted, "its very trees reduced to matchsticks." These men lived in a higher atmosphere than that of controversy and politics. And yet it is right that Herr Kreisler keep his violin in its case until a time more fitting in which to forget that he has been an alien enemy.

BUT though art must rise above politics and controversy to be art, and though in the highest sense to be an artist is to be a citizen of the world; yet even the arts must yield to supreme necessity of the moment; and we pay our tribute of admiration to the bandmaster who is sacrificing "big pay" to train musicians for our army, to the painters of landscapes and portraits who are camouflaging by sea and on land, to artists like Paderewski and Ernest Schelling who have sunk the pianist in the patriot and are now, each in his own way, serving against that monster Kultur which would lead even the arts, so many shackled slaves, behind its hideous chariot of war.

THE GOWNSMAN.

Public Ledger
Phila Pa
Ap 3, 1918

TRIBUNE
New York City
APR 4 1918

German Music Aids Propaganda In Neutral Lands

Krupps, Munition Makers, Supplying Musicians, Singers and Conductors

Europe Is Overrun

"Spring Offensive" in This Line Now On, Says Paris Journal

The suspicion that the German government had not overlooked the value of German music and musicians in its plans for world conquest finds corroboration in an article published recently in "Le Courrier Musical," a Paris journal devoted to musical affairs.

From the beginning of the war, according to this French publication, music has been utilized systematically by the German war lords in peaceful but pervasive campaigns conducted in all the neutral countries of Europe. During the first year of the great war the German government spent 24,000,000 marks—about $6,000,000—in this music propaganda, but now, in order to insure better effect in organization and efficiency, the Krupps, Germany's munitions trust, has taken over this branch of the service and is supplying the product of musicians, orchestra conductors, singers and other artists, just as it provides torpedoes, gas shells, aerial bombs and the long-distance cannons which have been shelling Paris.

Campaign in Neutral Countries

"Le Courrier Musical" does not dwell, however, on a German propaganda fostered by music in the United States, but takes up only the artistic campaigns in Switzerland, Spain, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, now said to be overrun by German orchestras, singers and virtuosi, liberally stocked with German war arguments and complimentary tickets.

The article in "Le Courrier Musical" is reproduced in substance in last week's issue of "Musical America," published in this city. It was pointed out by persons in New York who have been active in trying to purge musical organizations here of pro-Germanism as justifying their opposition to Dr. Karl Muck and Josef Stransky, leader of the Philharmonic Orchestra, of New York.

According to the version published in "Musical America," "Le Courrier Musical" states that the Krupps have just begun a "spring offensive" in Switzerland and other neutral countries of Europe, where German musicians are recognized as the official "commercial travellers" of the Kaiser.

Effect Is Questioned

"Is there, after all, fundamental cause for consternation on the part of Germany's enemies?" "Musical America" asks. "The world's most notorious and detested traffickers in munitions have made a compact with German music. Does the transaction increase the stature of German musical art one cubit? Does it instill veneration for Teutonic music or musicians in the hearts of right thinking neutrals? Or does the liberty loving Dutchman, Swede, Swiss or Spaniard, aware of se which his Kultur-dispensing have espoused, regard these and their wares with disdain?"

n EVENING GLOBE
ress New York City
APR 5

KARL MUCK IS SUBJECT TO IMPRISONMENT

WASHINGTON, April 5.—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

STANDARD UNION,
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
APR 4 1918

Now that Muck has been rounded up, it is about time that the Department of Justice stopped fooling with secret enemies of the country in high places, who have gone scot-free too long. It is an outrage that any section should feel forced to local violence, tar and feathers and threats of lynch law to control persons and a situation for which there has been ample warning for a period of three years or more. The days of pussyfooting and mollycoddling ought to be over for good and all. Stop sedition and alien spying at the source.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

n SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK NO LONGER

Billy Garth Will Give Ral Parr's Race Horse An American Name.

Dr. Muck has been barred for life on the Maryland turf. In fact, his banishment will cover every race course in the world.

Billy Garth, the Virginian, who trains Capt. Ral Parr's thoroughbreds, declared with vehemence that the horse's name will be changed.

Dr. Muck, the thoroughbred, was named after Dr. Karl Muck, the German, who recently was arrested in Boston by Federal authorities.

Captain Parr was an admirer of Dr. Muck when the latter was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That was more than two years ago. But times have changed since then, and Dr. Muck has run his last race.

When Dr. Muck again parades before Americans he will have an American name. Although the horse still is known officially in turf circles as Dr. Muck, Garth and his stable employes never call him by that.

Garth has requested the registrar of the Jockey Club to rub Dr. Muck off the books. It will cost $50 to have this done, but what's $50?

It is probable that only one or two, if any, of the Whitney 2-year-olds will start under silks at Bowie. They were taken ill at Benning and are just recovering from a cough. A year ago they took down the majority of the purses and performed just as well as Clyde's are doing now.

Raymond Ball, the Baltimore jockey who rode in Cuba during the winter, will be a free lance when he arrives at Bowie. He broke into the spotlight a couple of seasons ago and showed great ability. But he put on weight and could not ride frequently, and his boom blew up as quickly as it began.

TOWN TOPICS
New York City
APR 4 - 1918

MRS. JACK GARDNER's inordinate craze for posing in the limelight is again shown since Dr. Muck's arrest. Mrs. Gardner has championed the German musical director, and was the first unofficial person to arrive at the jail after his incarceration, but she was unable to get any farther than a half-open door, which permitted only a friendly wave of her hand in silent sympathy. Later, after pulling every possible wire, Mrs. Jack, loaded down with delicacies of all kinds, gained admittance to his cell, and endeavored to cheer the Doctor up a bit. Her activities in thus rendering "comfort and aid to the enemy," have turned her most loyal friends, as well as the public, much against the lady. One of her once steadfast friends said after this latest exploit, "Well! It looks like Belle's last Muck drive, so let her get all the [illegible] she can."

om PUBLIC LEDGER
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
APR 4 - 1918

PROBLEM OF DOCTOR MUCK

Should Not His Erstwhile Supporters Admit Their Mistake?

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—If one of our largest States thinks it proper to say "no teacher in its schools unless a citizen," it is time Boston said "no orchestra shall contain enemy aliens." As to the right of the public to criticize, so long as Doctor Muck kept to his professional duties, the ticket-holders were the only ones concerned in criticizing or applauding him. If he has gone outside his professional work and done things detrimental to the public good, the public has a right to express itself, not only as to him, but also his sponsors, especially after a charge has been made by the Government. And as giving "comfort" to an enemy is in the same category as "aid," the line should be drawn sharply against comfort from both sexes, including jellies and cakes.

There have been rumors and gossip and suspicion for some months about this orchestra leader. How much better it might have been to have shut up shop at once and charged any financial loss to the fortunes of war rather than to have allowed the freedom of this leader and now offender, to perhaps work incalculable mischief against our interest and the lives of our boys!

If the Government sustains its charge against the doctor, the least the public can expect is that the sponsors of this individual shall emulate the action of the skipper Disko Troop in that well-known story of Kipling's "Captains Courageous," who, when he found he was mistaken, threw up his hands and exclaimed: "I wuz mistook, I wuz mistook in my jedgements; don't rub it in, boys; I wuz mistook."

No one wants to rub it in, for we want to believe that the parties directly involved feel more keenly than any one any betrayal of confidence; but we do expect they also will be as manly as the captain. Boston's "distinguished and patriotic citizen" is first of all a man and can be depended on to make a manly acknowledgment when he has seen the evidence.

om PUBLIC LEDGER
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
ate EVENING

THE GOWNSMAN

CLAUDE ACHILLE DEBUSSY, the noted French composer of highly original, successful and significant impressionistic music, is dead at the untimely age of fifty-six; and, by way of anticlimax, Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Orchestra, has been sent to prison. To consider the latter first, Doctor Muck's excellence as the conductor of a famous orchestra that was already made to his hand when he assumed its leadership is neither here nor there. And the question, "Shall we play enemy music?" is only subsidiary. The real issue is this: Shall we suffer art to cloak the propaganda of a relentless and unprincipled foe?

THE Germans are superior musicians. Music is the one art in which they have succeeded, in any measure, in rising above their national limitations. But the Germans are not the only musicians in the world and some of their greatest names are not quite so wholly German as we habitually think them. Beethoven was half Flemish, Mozart was a Tyrolese Austrian; in the fire and splendor of Wagner there has been suspected a tinge of the very Jewish strain which he so detested. The arts are not so much an endowment of race as the individual gift of fortune. Music flickered once in England, but that was as far back as the days of Elizabeth; painting blazed out in medieval Italy and still shines brightest in contemporary France. There was great drama in Greece, in Spain, in England in widely separated ages. And there will come a time when the arts will rise to their place beside other American achievements. Shall we give up German music? Not where it had risen out of the fogs of Germanism into the regions of universal art. Shall we give up German literature? Absolutely yes, where it is degraded into German propaganda or depraved by German insolent immorality. Shall we take this untimely time to exploit any of the Teutonic arts? Assuredly not, for there is little in their purely Teutonic elements worthy of exploitation; and the rest they had from the ancients, from the Italians, the French, and the English, elements now long since become the common heritage of mankind. But the Gownsman is getting lost in the folds of his gown.

IN THE death of Debussy the world of music has lost an extremely interesting artistic personality, one from whom the world might well have hoped that there was still much accomplishment to come. Debussy's work is at once that of a daring innovator, a craftsman of consummate skill and a poetic, at times a highly imaginative, spirit. There are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who discover for us the greater depths and riches which are inherent in the things which we now possess; and there are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who lead the way into new provinces of art. Debussy belongs to the latter daring and fascinating class, and he is problematic, as all such leaders must remain until time and the onward trend of the art of each shall justify his conquests. The association of Debussy's music with the futurists' art is natural, with impressionism, post-impressionism, cubism or whatever may be the name of the new artism with which the lagging and breathless Gownsman has failed to keep abreast. And our licensed libertine in words, the new free verse, is a fledgling of the same nest. But there is a difference, and a momentous one at that. The impatient student of art, weary of the slow academic processes of training, unwilling to try very hard or work very long, dashes off in a refractory mood a "thing," it matters not what, except that it be unlike any other "thing" in art or in life, shapeless, colorful, unsignificant, absurd. With this as his banner he marches forward with a handful of mad followers; and the further he goes, the further his distance from art. Or "the poet," unable to undergo the discipline of his sister art, unwilling to knead the intractable qualities of words into the ductility of verse, remembers that fine old rebel, Walt Whitman, and, following in his difficult path, whose large ideas sustained his stumbling feet, the poetling throws away rhyme, verse, beauty, significance, and in a jumble or sound imitates his friend the cubist in art.

DEBUSSY is not of this dilettante kind. He mastered the accepted laws of his art before he attempted to make new ones. He did not so much transgress the acknowledged conventions as he essayed to stretch their possibilities into the discovery of new harmonic combinations and progressions. And he informed all that he did with a rare creative impulse which, however delicate and difficult at times, is far from the vagueness, uncertainty and indecision of the seekers after novelty, whether in music, poetry or art.

WE ARE becoming inured rather than accustomed to the German claim of everything in sight. These shameless claims extend even to the invisible empire of the arts. When an author, a painter, a sculptor or poet rises to eminence in his art, he becomes, by reason of his excellence, a world-poet, a world-painter a world-author, and therefore German. Germany long since appropriated Shakespeare, Moliere and Dante. She had the impertinence last year to condole with France in the death of the eminent sculptor, Rodin, and she will doubtless perpetrate a like impertinence now that Debussy is gone. A German submarine blew up the channel steamer Sussex, laden with harmless civilians in travel to and fro; and among their victims was Enrique Granados, the famous Spanish composer, returning to Spain from America, where he had attended the successful presentation in New York of an opera of his. After lying about this crime like a schoolboy in a scrape, and being caught in the lie to add to the crime, the Imperial Government of the German Empire condescended to express regret for this "accident," and it has now offered to pay the family of Senor Granados 666,000 pesetas that the world may know how Kultur esteems music, even though it be only Spanish music.

Public Ledger
Phila Pa
Ap 5. 1918

THE Gownsman remembers to have sat at table once, some time before America entered this war, with the world's great pianist, Paderewski, and the eminent violinist, Kreisler. The latter, an Austrian, had served his country against Russia, it will be remembered, and had written a little book about his experiences in which there is no word of rancor and unkindness. M. Paderewski is a Pole and, like every true Pole, a patriot. These great artists, on either side of a charming American hostess, discussed the war with candor, with courtesy and without heat, though one had been maimed by it, and the other, M. Paderewski, told of the beautiful estate which he had loved, tended and planted, "its very trees reduced to matchsticks." These men lived in a higher atmosphere than that of controversy and politics. And yet it is right that Herr Kreisler keep his violin in its case until a time more fitting in which to forget that he has been an alien enemy.

BUT though art must rise above politics and controversy to be art, and though in the highest sense to be an artist is to be a citizen of the world; yet even the arts must yield to supreme necessity of the moment; and we pay our tribute of admiration to the bandmaster who is sacrificing "big pay" to train musicians for our army, to the painters of landscapes and portraits who are camouflaging by sea and on land, to artists like Paderewski and Ernest Schelling who have sunk the pianist in the patriot and are now, each in his own way, serving against that monster Kultur which would lead even the arts, so many shackled slaves, behind its hideous chariot of war.

THE GOWNSMAN.

TRIBUNE
New York City

German Music Aids Propaganda In Neutral Lands

Krupps, Munition Makers, Supplying Musicians, Singers and Conductors

Europe Is Overrun

"Spring Offensive" in This Line Now On, Says Paris Journal

The suspicion that the German government had not overlooked the value of German music and musicians in its plans for world conquest finds corroboration in an article published recently in "Le Courrier Musical," a Paris journal devoted to musical affairs.

From the beginning of the war, according to this French publication, music has been utilized systematically by the German war lords in peaceful but pervasive campaigns conducted in all the neutral countries of Europe. During the first year of the great war the German government spent 24,000,000 marks—about $6,000,000—in this music propaganda, but now, in order to insure better effect in organization and efficiency, the Krupps, Germany's munitions trust, has taken over this branch of the service and is supplying the product of musicians, orchestra conductors, singers and other artists, just as it provides torpedoes, gas shells, aerial bombs and the long-distance cannons which have been shelling Paris.

Campaign in Neutral Countries

"Le Courrier Musical" does not dwell, however, on a German propaganda fostered by music in the United States, but takes up only the artistic campaigns in Switzerland, Spain, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, now said to be overrun by German orchestras, singers and virtuosi, liberally stocked with German war arguments and complimentary tickets.

The article in "Le Courrier Musical" is reproduced in substance in last week's issue of "Musical America," published in this city. It was pointed out by persons in New York who have been active in trying to purge musical organizations here of pro-Germanism as justifying their opposition to Dr. Karl Muck and Josef Stransky, leader of the Philharmonic Orchestra, of New York.

According to the version published in "Musical America," "Le Courrier Musical" states that the Krupps have just begun a "spring offensive" in Switzerland and other neutral countries of Europe, where German musicians are recognized as the official "commercial travellers" of the Kaiser.

Effect Is Questioned

"Is there, after all, fundamental cause for consternation on the part of Germany's enemies?" "Musical America" asks. "The world's most notorious and detested traffickers in munitions have made a compact with German music. Does the transaction increase the stature of German musical art one cubit? Does it instill veneration for Teutonic music or musicians in the hearts of right thinking neutrals? Or does the liberty loving Dutchman, Swede, Swiss or Spaniard, aware of se which his Kultur-dispensing have espoused, regard these and their wares with disdain?"

m EVENING GLOBE
ress New York City

KARL MUCK IS SUBJECT TO IMPRISONMENT

WASHINGTON, April 5.—After investigating the record of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under arrest in Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

aper Cutting Bureau in the World
STANDARD UNION,
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
APR 4 1918

Now that Muck has been rounded up, it is about time that the Department of Justice stopped fooling with secret enemies of the country in high places, who have gone scot-free too long. It is an outrage that any section should feel forced to local violence, tar and feathers and threats of lynch law to control persons and a situation for which there has been ample warning for a period of three years or more. The days of pussyfooting and mollycoddling ought to be over for good and all. Stop sedition and alien spying at the source.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

n SUN
lress: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK NO LONGER

Billy Garth Will Give Ral Parr's Race Horse An American Name.

Dr. Muck has been barred for life on the Maryland turf. In fact, his banishment will cover every race course in the world.

Billy Garth, the Virginian, who trains Capt. Ral Parr's thoroughbreds, declared with vehemence that the horse's name will be changed.

Dr. Muck, the thoroughbred, was named after Dr. Karl Muck, the German, who recently was arrested in Boston by Federal authorities.

Captain Parr was an admirer of Dr. Muck when the latter was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That was more than two years ago. But times have changed since then, and Dr. Muck has run his last race.

When Dr. Muck again parades before Americans he will have an American name. Although the horse still is known officially in turf circles as Dr. Muck, Garth and his stable employes never call him by that.

Garth has requested the registrar of the Jockey Club to rub Dr. Muck off the books. It will cost $50 to have this done, but what's $50?

It is probable that only one or two, if any, of the Whitney 2-year-olds will start under silks at Bowie. They were taken ill at Benning and are just recovering from a cough. A year ago they took down the majority of the purses and performed just as well as Clyde's are doing now.

Raymond Ball, the Baltimore jockey who rode in Cuba during the winter, will be a free lance when he arrives at Bowie. He broke into the spotlight a couple of seasons ago and showed great ability. But he put on weight and could not ride frequently, and his boom blew up as quickly as it began.

TOWN TOPICS
New York City
APR 4 1918

MRS. JACK GARDNER'S inordinate craze for posing in the limelight is again shown since Dr. Muck's arrest. Mrs. Gardner has championed the German musical director, and was the first unofficial person to arrive at the jail after his incarceration, but she was unable to get any farther than a half-open door, which permitted only a friendly wave of her hand in silent sympathy. Later, after pulling every possible wire, Mrs. Jack, loaded down with delicacies of all kinds, gained admittance to his cell, and endeavored to cheer the Doctor up a bit. Her activities in thus rendering "comfort and aid to the enemy," have turned her most loyal friends, as well as the public, much against the lady. One of her once steadfast friends said after this latest exploit, "Well! It looks like Belle's last Muck drive, so let her get all the [illegible] she can."

om PUBLIC LEDGER
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.

PROBLEM OF DOCTOR MUCK

Should Not His Erstwhile Supporters Admit Their Mistake?

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—If one of our largest States thinks it proper to say "no teacher in its schools unless a citizen," it is time Boston said "no orchestra shall contain enemy aliens." As to the right of the public to criticize, so long as Doctor Muck kept to his professional duties, the ticket-holders were the only ones concerned in criticizing or applauding him. If he has gone outside his professional work and done things detrimental to the public good, the public has a right to express itself, not only as to him, but also his sponsors, especially after a charge has been made by the Government. And as giving "comfort" to an enemy is in the same category as "aid," the line should be drawn sharply against comfort from both sexes, including jellies and cakes.

There have been rumors and gossip and suspicion for some months about this orchestra leader. How much better it might have been to have shut up shop at once and charged any financial loss to the fortunes of war rather than to have allowed the freedom of this leader and now offender, to perhaps work incalculable mischief against our interest and the lives of our boys!

If the Government sustains its charge against the doctor, the least the public can expect is that the sponsors of this individual shall emulate the action of the skipper Disko Troop in that well-known story of Kipling's "Captains Courageous," who, when he found he was mistaken, threw up his hands and exclaimed: "I wuz mistook, I wuz mistook in my jedgements; don't rub it in, boys; I wuz mistook."

No one wants to rub it in, for we want to believe that the parties directly involved feel more keenly than any one any betrayal of confidence; but we do expect they also will be as manly as the captain. Boston's "distinguished and patriotic citizen" is first of all a man and can be depended on to make a manly acknowledgment when he has seen the evidence.

om PUBLIC LEDGER EVENING
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
ate APR 3 1918

THE GOWNSMAN

CLAUDE ACHILLE DEBUSSY, the noted French composer of highly original, successful and significant impressionistic music, is dead at the untimely age of fifty-six; and, by way of anticlimax, Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Orchestra, has been sent to prison. To consider the latter first, Doctor Muck's excellence as the conductor of a famous orchestra that was already made to his hand when he assumed its leadership is neither here nor there. And the question, "Shall we play enemy music?" is only subsidiary. The real issue is this: Shall we suffer art to cloak the propaganda of a relentless and unprincipled foe?

THE Germans are superior musicians. Music is the one art in which they have succeeded, in any measure, in rising above their national limitations. But the Germans are not the only musicians in the world and some of their greatest names are not quite so wholly German as we habitually think them. Beethoven was half Flemish, Mozart was a Tyrolese Austrian; in the fire and splendor of Wagner there has been suspected a tinge of the very Jewish strain which he so detested. The arts are not so much an endowment of race as the individual gift of fortune. Music flickered once in England, but that was as far back as the days of Elizabeth; painting blazed out in medieval Italy and still shines brightest in contemporary France. There was great drama in Greece, in Spain, in England in widely separated ages. And there will come a time when the arts will rise to their place beside other American achievements. Shall we give up German music? Not where it had risen out of the fogs of Germanism into the regions of universal art. Shall we give up German literature? Absolutely yes, where it is degraded into German propaganda or depraved by German insolent immorality. Shall we take this untimely time to exploit any of the Teutonic arts? Assuredly not, for there is little in their purely Teutonic elements worthy of exploitation; and the rest they had from the ancients, from the Italians, the French, and the English, elements now long since become the common heritage of mankind. But the Gownsman is getting lost in the folds of his gown.

IN THE death of Debussy the world of music has lost an extremely interesting artistic personality, one from whom that world might well have hoped that there was still much accomplishment to come. Debussy's work is at once that of a daring innovator, a craftsman of consummate skill and a poetic, at times a highly imaginative, spirit. There are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who discover for us the greater depths and riches which are inherent in the things which we now possess; and there are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who lead the way into new provinces of art. Debussy belongs to the latter daring and fascinating class, and he is problematic, as all such leaders must remain until time and the onward trend of the art of each shall justify his conquests. The association of Debussy's music with the futurists' art is natural, with impressionism, post-impressionism, cubism or whatever may be the name of the new artism with which the lagging and breathless Gownsman has failed to keep abreast. And our licensed libertine in words, the new free verse, is a fledgling of the same nest. But there is a difference, and a momentous one at that. The impatient student of art, weary of the slow academic processes of training, unwilling to try very hard or work very long, dashes off in a refractory mood a "thing," it matters not what, except that it be unlike any other "thing" in art or in life, shapeless, colorful, unsignificant, absurd. With this as his banner he marches forward with a handful of mad followers; and the further he goes, the further his distance from art. Or "the poet," unable to undergo the discipline of his sister art, unwilling to knead the intractable qualities of words into the ductility of verse, remembers that fine old rebel, Walt Whitman, and, following in his difficult path, whose large ideas sustained his stumbling feet, the poetling throws away rhyme, verse, beauty, significance, and in a jumble or sound imitates his friend the cubist in art.

DEBUSSY is not of this dilettante kind. He mastered the accepted laws of his art before he attempted to make new ones. He did not so much transgress the acknowledged conventions as he essayed to stretch their possibilities into the discovery of new harmonic combinations and progressions. And he informed all that he did with a rare creative impulse which, however delicate and difficult at times, is far from the vagueness, uncertainty and indecision of the seekers after novelty, whether in music, poetry or art.

WE ARE becoming inured rather than accustomed to the German claim of everything in sight. These shameless claims extend even to the invisible empire of the arts. When an author, a painter, a sculptor or poet rises to eminence in his art, he becomes, by reason of his excellence, a world-poet, a world-painter a world-author, and therefore German. Germany long since appropriated Shakespeare, Moliere and Dante. She had the impertinence last year to condole with France in the death of the eminent sculptor, Rodin, and she will doubtless perpetrate a like impertinence now that Debussy is gone. A German submarine blew up the channel steamer Sussex, laden with harmless civilians in travel to and fro; and among their victims was Enrique Granados, the famous Spanish composer, returning to Spain from America, where he had attended the successful presentation in New York of an opera of his. After lying about this crime like a schoolboy in a scrape, and being caught in the lie to add to the crime, the Imperial Government of the German Empire condescended to express regret for this "accident," and it has now offered to pay the family of Senor Granados 666,000 pesetas that the world may know how Kultur esteems music, even though it be only Spanish music.

Public Ledger
Phila Pa
Ap 3, 1918

THE Gownsman remembers to have sat at table once, some time before America entered this war, with the world's great pianist, Paderewski, and the eminent violinist, Kreisler. The latter, an Austrian, had served his country against Russia, it will be remembered, and had written a little book about his experiences in which there is no word of rancor and unkindness. M. Paderewski is a Pole and, like every true Pole, a patriot. These great artists, on either side of a charming American hostess, discussed the war with candor, with courtesy and without heat, though one had been maimed by it, and the other, M. Paderewski, told of the beautiful estate which he had loved, tended and planted, "its very trees reduced to matchsticks." These men lived in a higher atmosphere than that of controversy and politics. And yet it is right that Herr Kreisler keep his violin in its case until a time more fitting in which to forget that he has been an alien enemy.

BUT though art must rise above politics and controversy to be art, and though in the highest sense to be an artist is to be a citizen of the world; yet even the arts must yield to supreme necessity of the moment; and we pay our tribute of admiration to the bandmaster who is sacrificing "big pay" to train musicians for our army, to the painters of landscapes and portraits who are camouflaging by sea and on land, to artists like Paderewski and Ernest Schelling who have sunk the pianist in the patriot and are now, each in his own way, serving against that monster Kultur which would lead even the arts, so many shackled slaves, behind its hideous chariot of war.

THE GOWNSMAN.

IBUNE
New York City
APR 4 1918

German Music Aids Propaganda In Neutral Lands

Krupps, Munition Makers, Supplying Musicians, Singers and Conductors

Europe Is Overrun

"Spring Offensive" in This Line Now On, Says Paris Journal

The suspicion that the German government had not overlooked the value of German music and musicians in its plans for world conquest finds corroboration in an article published recently in "Le Courrier Musical," a Paris journal devoted to musical affairs.

From the beginning of the war, according to this French publication, music has been utilized systematically by the German war lords in peaceful but pervasive campaigns conducted in all the neutral countries of Europe. During the first year of the great war the German government spent 24,000,000 marks—about $6,000,000—in this music propaganda, but now, in order to insure better effect in organization and efficiency, the Krupps, Germany's munitions trust, has taken over this branch of the service and is supplying the product of musicians, orchestra conductors, singers and other artists, just as it provides torpedoes, gas shells, aerial bombs and the long-distance cannons which have been shelling Paris.

Campaign in Neutral Countries

"Le Courrier Musical" does not dwell, however, on a German propaganda fostered by music in the United States, but takes up only the artistic campaigns in Switzerland, Spain, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, now said to be overrun by German orchestras, singers and virtuosi, liberally stocked with German war arguments and complimentary tickets.

The article in "Le Courrier Musical" is reproduced in substance in last week's issue of "Musical America," published in this city. It was pointed out by persons in New York who have been active in trying to purge musical organizations here of pro-Germanism as justifying their opposition to Dr. Karl Muck and Josef Stransky, leader of the Philharmonic Orchestra, of New York.

According to the version published in "Musical America," "Le Courrier Musical" states that the Krupps have just begun a "spring offensive" in Switzerland and other neutral countries of Europe, where German musicians are recognized as the official "commercial travellers" of the Kaiser.

Effect Is Questioned

"Is there, after all, fundamental cause for consternation on the part of Germany's enemies?" "Musical America" asks. "The world's most notorious and detested traffickers in munitions have made a compact with German music. Does the transaction increase the stature of German musical art one cubit? Does it instill veneration for Teutonic music or musicians in the hearts of right thinking neutrals? Or does the liberty loving Dutchman, Swede, Swiss or Spaniard, aware of the cause which his Kultur-dispensing guests have espoused, regard these gentry and their wares with disdain?"

n EVENING GLOBE
ress New York City

KARL MUCK IS SUBJEC TO IMPRISONM

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Afte vestigating the record of Dr. Muck, former leader of the B Symphony Orchestra, under arre Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

STANDARD UNION,
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
APR 4 1918

Now that Muck has been rounded up, it is about time that the Department of Justice stopped fooling with secret enemies of the country in high places, who have gone scot-free too long. It is an outrage that any section should feel forced to local violence, tar and feathers and threats of lynch law to control persons and a situation for which there has been ample warning for a period of three years or more. The days of pussyfooling and mollycoddling ought to be over for good and all. Stop sedition and alien spying at the source.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

n SUN
ress: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK NO LONGER

Billy Garth Will Give Ral Parr's Race Horse An American Name.

Dr. Muck has been barred for life on the Maryland turf. In fact, his banishment will cover every race course in the world.

Billy Garth, the Virginian, who trains Capt. Ral Parr's thoroughbreds, declared with vehemence that the horse's name will be changed.

Dr. Muck, the thoroughbred, was named after Dr. Karl Muck, the German, who recently was arrested in Boston by Federal authorities.

Captain Parr was an admirer of Dr. Muck when the latter was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That was more than two years ago. But times have changed since then, and Dr. Muck has run his last race.

When Dr. Muck again parades before Americans he will have an American name. Although the horse still is known officially in turf circles as Dr. Muck, Garth and his stable employes never call him by that.

Garth has requested the registrar of the Jockey Club to rub Dr. Muck off the books. It will cost $50 to have this done, but what's $50?

It is probable that only one or two, if any, of the Whitney 2-year-olds will start under silks at Bowie. They were taken ill at Benning and are just recovering from a cough. A year ago they took down the majority of the purses and performed just as well as Clyde's are doing now.

Raymond Ball, the Baltimore jockey who rode in Cuba during the winter, will be a free lance when he arrives at Bowie. He broke into the spotlight a couple of seasons ago and showed great ability. But he put on weight and could not ride frequently, and his boom blew up as quickly as it began.

TOWN TOPICS
New York City
APR 4 - 1918

MRS. JACK GARDNER's inordinate craze for posing in the limelight is again shown since Dr. Muck's arrest. Mrs. Gardner has championed the German musical director, and was the first unofficial person to arrive at the jail after his incarceration, but she was unable to get any farther than a half-open door, which permitted only a friendly wave of her hand in silent sympathy. Later, after pulling every possible wire, Mrs. Jack, loaded down with delicacies of all kinds, gained admittance to his cell, and endeavored to cheer the Doctor up a bit. Her activities in thus rendering "comfort and aid to the enemy," have turned her most loyal friends, as well as the public, much against the lady. One of her once steadfast friends said after this latest exploit, "Well! It looks like Belle's last Muck drive, so let her get all the comfort out of it she can."

Philadelp...
APR 4 - 19..

PROBLEM OF DOCTOR MUCK

Should Not His Erstwhile Supporters Admit Their Mistake?

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—If one of our largest States thinks it proper to say "no teacher in its schools unless a citizen," it is time Boston said "no orchestra shall contain enemy aliens." As to the right of the public to criticize, so long as Doctor Muck kept to his professional duties, the ticket-holders were the only ones concerned in criticizing or applauding him. If he has gone outside his professional work and done things detrimental to the public good, the public has a right to express itself, not only as to him, but also his sponsors, especially after a charge has been made by the Government. And as giving "comfort" to an enemy is in the same category as "aid," the line should be drawn sharply against comfort from both sexes, including jellies and cakes.

There have been rumors and gossip and suspicion for some months about this orchestra leader. How much better it might have been to have shut up shop at once and charged any financial loss to the fortunes of war rather than to have allowed the freedom of this leader and now offender, to perhaps work incalculable mischief against our interest and the lives of our boys!

If the Government sustains its charge against the doctor, the least the public can expect is that the sponsors of this individual shall emulate the action of the skipper Disko Troop in that well-known story of Kipling's "Captains Courageous," who, when he found he was mistaken, threw up his hands and exclaimed: "I wuz mistook, I wuz mistook in my jedgements; don't rub it in, boys; I wuz mistook."

No one wants to rub it in, for we want to believe that the parties directly involved feel more keenly than any one any betrayal of confidence; but we do expect they also will be as manly as the captain. Boston's "distinguished and patriotic citizen" is first of all a man and can be depended on to make a manly acknowledgment when he has seen the evidence.

om PUBLIC LEDGER EVENING
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
ate

THE GOWNSMAN

CLAUDE ACHILLE DEBUSSY, the noted French composer of highly original, successful and significant impressionistic music, is dead at the untimely age of fifty-six; and, by way of anticlimax, Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Orchestra, has been sent to prison. To consider the latter first, Doctor Muck's excellence as the conductor of a famous orchestra that was already made to his hand when he assumed its leadership is neither here nor there. And the question, "Shall we play enemy music?" is only subsidiary. The real issue is this: Shall we suffer art to cloak the propaganda of a relentless and unprincipled foe?

THE Germans are superior musicians. Music is the one art in which they have succeeded, in any measure, in rising above their national limitations. But the Germans are not the only musicians in the world and some of their greatest names are not quite so wholly German as we habitually think them. Beethoven was half Flemish, Mozart was a Tyrolese Austrian; in the fire and splendor of Wagner there has been suspected a tinge of the very Jewish strain which he so detested. The arts are not so much an endowment of race as the individual gift of fortune. Music flickered once in England, but that was as far back as the days of Elizabeth; painting blazed out in medieval Italy and still shines brightest in contemporary France. There was great drama in Greece, in Spain, in England in widely separated ages. And there will come a time when the arts will rise to their place beside other American achievements. Shall we give up German music? Not where it had risen out of the fogs of Germanism into the regions of universal art. Shall we give up German literature? Absolutely yes, where it is degraded into German propaganda or depraved by German insolent immorality. Shall we take this untimely time to exploit any of the Teutonic arts? Assuredly not, for there is little in their purely Teutonic elements worthy of exploitation; and the rest they had from the ancients, from the Italians, the French, and the English, elements now long since become the common heritage of mankind. But the Gownsman is getting lost in the folds of his gown.

IN THE death of Debussy the world of music has lost an extremely interesting artistic personality, one from whom that world might well have hoped that there was still much accomplishment to come. Debussy's work is at once that of a daring innovator, a craftsman of consummate skill and a poetic, at times a highly imaginative, spirit. There are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who discover for us the greater depths and riches which are inherent in the things which we now possess; and there are musicians, as there are poets and painters, who lead the way into new provinces of art. Debussy belongs to the latter daring and fascinating class, and he is problematic, as all such leaders must remain until time and the onward trend of the art of each shall justify his conquests. The association of Debussy's music with the futurists' art is natural, with impressionism, post-impressionism, cubism or whatever may be the name of the new artism with which the lagging and breathless Gownsman has failed to keep abreast. And our licensed libertine in words, the new free verse, is a fledgling of the same nest. But there is a difference, and a momentous one at that. The impatient student of art, weary of the slow academic processes of training, unwilling to try very hard or work very long, dashes off in a refractory mood a "thing," it matters not what, except that it be unlike any other "thing" in art or in life, shapeless, colorful, unsignificant, absurd. With this as his banner he marches forward with a handful of mad followers; and the further he goes, the further his distance from art. Or "the poet," unable to undergo the discipline of his sister art, unwilling to knead the intractable qualities of words into the ductility of verse, remembers that fine old rebel, Walt Whitman, and, following in his difficult path, whose large ideas sustained his stumbling feet, the poetling throws away rhyme, verse, beauty, significance, and in a jumble or sound imitates his friend the cubist in art.

DEBUSSY is not of this dilettante kind. He mastered the accepted laws of his art before he attempted to make new ones. He did not so much transgress the acknowledged conventions as he essayed to stretch their possibilities into the discovery of new harmonic combinations and progressions. And he informed all that he did with a rare creative impulse which, however delicate and difficult at times, is far from the vagueness, uncertainty and indecision of the seekers after novelty, whether in music, poetry or art.

WE ARE becoming inured rather than accustomed to the German claim of everything in sight. These shameless claims extend even to the invisible empire of the arts. When an author, a painter, a sculptor or poet rises to eminence in his art, he becomes, by reason of his excellence, a world-poet, a world-painter, a world-author, and therefore German. Germany long since appropriated Shakespeare, Moliere and Dante. She had the impertinence last year to condole with France in the death of the eminent sculptor, Rodin, and she will doubtless perpetrate a like impertinence now that Debussy is gone. A German submarine blew up the channel steamer Sussex, laden with harmless civilians in travel to and fro; and among their victims was Enrique Granados, the famous Spanish composer, returning to Spain from America, where he had attended the successful presentation in New York of an opera of his. After lying about this crime like a schoolboy in a scrape, and being caught in the lie to add to the crime, the Imperial Government of the German Empire condescended to express regret for this "accident," and it has now offered to pay the family of Senor Granados 666,000 pesetas that the world may know how Kultur esteems music, even though it be only Spanish music.

Public Ledger
Philadelphia Pa
Apr 5, 1918

THE Gownsman remembers to have sat at table once, some time before America entered this war, with the world's great pianist, Paderewski, and the eminent violinist, Kreisler. The latter, an Austrian, had served his country against Russia, it will be remembered, and had written a little book about his experiences in which there is no word of rancor and unkindness. M. Paderewski is a Pole and, like every true Pole, a patriot. These great artists, on either side of a charming American hostess, discussed the war with candor, with courtesy and without heat, though one had been maimed by it, and the other, M. Paderewski, told of the beautiful estate which he had loved, tended and planted, "its very trees reduced to matchsticks." These men lived in a higher atmosphere than that of controversy and politics. And yet it is right that Herr Kreisler keep his violin in its case until a time more fitting in which to forget that he has been an alien enemy.

BUT though art must rise above politics and controversy to be art, and though in the highest sense to be an artist is to be a citizen of the world; yet even the arts must yield to supreme necessity of the moment; and we pay our tribute of admiration to the bandmaster who is sacrificing "big pay" to train musicians for our army, to the painters of landscapes and portraits who are camouflaging by sea and on land, to artists like Paderewski and Ernest Schelling who have sunk the pianist in the patriot and are now, each in his own way, serving against that monster Kultur which would lead even the arts, so many shackled slaves, behind its hideous chariot of war.

THE GOWNSMAN.

IBUNE
New York City

German Music Aids Propaganda In Neutral Lands

Krupps, Munition Makers, Supplying Musicians, Singers and Conductors

Europe Is Overrun

"Spring Offensive" in This Line Now On, Says Paris Journal

The suspicion that the German government had not overlooked the value of German music and musicians in its plans for world conquest finds corroboration in an article published recently in "Le Courrier Musical," a Paris journal devoted to musical affairs.

From the beginning of the war, according to this French publication, music has been utilized systematically by the German war lords in peaceful but pervasive campaigns conducted in all the neutral countries of Europe. During the first year of the great war the German government spent 24,000,000 marks—about $6,000,000—in this music propaganda, but now, in order to insure better effect in organization and efficiency, the Krupps, Germany's munitions trust, has taken over this branch of the service and is supplying the product of musicians, orchestra conductors, singers and other artists, just as it provides torpedoes, gas shells, aerial bombs and the long-distance cannons which have been shelling Paris.

Campaign in Neutral Countries

"Le Courrier Musical" does not dwell, however, on a German propaganda fostered by music in the United States, but takes up only the artistic campaigns in Switzerland, Spain, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, now said to be overrun by German orchestras, singers and virtuosi, liberally stocked with German war arguments and complimentary tickets.

The article in "Le Courrier Musical" is reproduced in substance in last week's issue of "Musical America," published in this city. It was pointed out by persons in New York who have been active in trying to purge musical organizations here of pro-Germanism as justifying their opposition to Dr. Karl Muck and Josef Stransky, leader of the Philharmonic Orchestra, of New York.

According to the version published in "Musical America," "Le Courrier Musical" states that the Krupps have just begun a "spring offensive" in Switzerland and other neutral countries of Europe, where German musicians are recognized as the official "commercial travellers" of the Kaiser.

Effect Is Questioned

"Is there, after all, fundamental cause for consternation on the part of Germany's enemies?" "Musical America" asks. "The world's most notorious and detested traffickers in munitions have made a compact with German music. Does the transaction increase the stature of German musical art one cubit? Does it instill veneration for Teutonic music or musicians in the hearts of right thinking neutrals? Or does the liberty loving Dutchman, Swede, Swiss or Spaniard, aware of the cause which his Kultur-dispensing guests have espoused, regard these gentry and their wares with disdain?"

m EVENING GLOBE
ress New York City

KARL MUCK IS SUBJEC TO IMPRISONM

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Afte vestigating the record of Dr. Muck, former leader of the Bo Symphony Orchestra, under arre Boston, the Department of Justice has decided that he is subject to imprisonment regardless of his claims of Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss legation. A decision on whether he is to be interned will be made within a few days.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

STANDARD UNION,
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
APR 4 1918

Now that Muck has been rounded up, it is about time that the Department of Justice stopped fooling with secret enemies of the country in high places, who have gone scot-free too long. It is an outrage that any section should feel forced to local violence, tar and feathers and threats of lynch law to control persons and a situation for which there has been ample warning for a period of three years or more. The days of pussyfooting and mollycoddling ought to be over for good and all. Stop sedition and alien spying at the source.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

n SUN
lress: Baltimore, Md.

DR. MUCK NO LONGER

Billy Garth Will Give Ral Parr's Race Horse An American Name.

Dr. Muck has been barred for life on the Maryland turf. In fact, his banishment will cover every race course in the world.

Billy Garth, the Virginian, who trains Capt. Ral Parr's thoroughbreds, declared with vehemence that the horse's name will be changed.

Dr. Muck, the thoroughbred, was named after Dr. Karl Muck, the German, who recently was arrested in Boston by Federal authorities.

Captain Parr was an admirer of Dr. Muck when the latter was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That was more than two years ago. But times have changed since then, and Dr. Muck has run his last race.

When Dr. Muck again parades before Americans he will have an American name. Although the horse still is known officially in turf circles as Dr. Muck, Garth and his stable employes never call him by that.

Garth has requested the registrar of the Jockey Club to rub Dr. Muck off the books. It will cost $50 to have this done, but what's $50?

It is probable that only one or two, if any, of the Whitney 2-year-olds will start under silks at Bowie. They were taken ill at Benning and are just recovering from a cough. A year ago they took down the majority of the purses and performed just as well as Clyde's are doing now.

Raymond Ball, the Baltimore jockey who rode in Cuba during the winter, will be a free lance when he arrives at Bowie. He broke into the spotlight a couple of seasons ago and showed great ability. But he put on weight and could not ride frequently, and his boom blew up as quickly as it began.

TOWN TOPICS
New York City
APR 11 1918

MRS. JACK GARDNER's inordinate craze for posing in the limelight is again shown since Dr. Muck's arrest. Mrs. Gardner has championed the German musical director, and was the first unofficial person to arrive at the jail after his incarceration, but she was unable to get any farther than a half-open door, which permitted only a friendly wave of her hand in silent sympathy. Later, after pulling every possible wire, Mrs. Jack, loaded down with delicacies of all kinds, gained admittance to his cell, and endeavored to cheer the Doctor up a bit. Her activities in thus rendering "comfort and aid to the enemy," have turned her most loyal friends, as well as the public, much against the lady. One of her once steadfast friends said after this latest exploit, "Well! It looks like Belle's last Muck drive, so let her get all the comfort out of it she can."

Philadelp...

PROBLEM OF DOCTOR MUCK

Should Not His Erstwhile Supporters Admit Their Mistake?

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—If one of our largest States thinks it proper to say "no teacher in its schools unless a citizen," it is time Boston said "no orchestra shall contain enemy aliens." As long as Doctor Muck kept to his professional duties, the ticket-holders were the only ones concerned in criticizing or applauding him. If he has gone outside his professional work and done things detrimental to the public good, the public has a right to express itself, not only as to him, but also his sponsors, especially after a charge has been made by the Government. And as giving "comfort" to an enemy is in the same category as "aid," the line should be drawn sharply against comfort from both sexes, including jellies and cakes.

There have been rumors and gossip and suspicion for some months about this orchestra leader. How much better it might have been to have shut up shop at once and charged any financial loss to the fortunes of war rather than to have allowed the freedom of this leader and now offender, to perhaps work incalculable mischief against our interest and the lives of our boys!

If the Government sustains its charge against the doctor, the least the public can expect is that the sponsors of this individual shall emulate the action of the skipper Disko Troop in that well-known story of Kipling's "Captains Courageous," who, when he found he was mistaken, threw up his hands and exclaimed: "I wuz mistook. I wuz mistook in my jedgements; don't rub it in, boys; I wuz mistook."

No one wants to rub it in, for we want to believe that the parties directly involved feel more keenly than any one any betrayal of confidence; but we do expect they also will be as manly as the captain. Boston's "distinguished and patriotic citizen" is first of all a man and can be depended on to make a manly acknowledgment when he has seen the evidence.

Address: New York City.

Date APR 6

ALL GERMANS AT METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE TO GO

Teutonic Blood to Be Eliminated Entirely at End of This Season.

SOME CLAIM LOYALTY

Directors Said to Believe Appearance of Evil Must Be Avoided.

While not officially announced, there is no doubt but that the last vestige of Teutonism is to be swept out of the Metropolitan Opera House at the end of this season, and next Fall there will not be a singer or conduotor or employee of any kind around the temple of song who can even be suspected of pro-German inclination.

When German opera was dropped from the repertoire, before the beginning of this season, most of the German singers, including such rampant and outspoken upholders of Prussianism as Johanna Gadski, Margarete Ober, Otto Goritz and others, as well as less militant Germans, such as Karl Braun, Herman Weil, Johannis Sembach and Melanie Kurt were dropped from the roster. Others who professed Americanism, such as Frieda Hempel, Margarete Matzenauer, Artur Bodansky, Max Bloch, Robert Leonhardt, Carl Schlegel and Albert Reiss, were retained.

Next season, however, it is understood to be the purpose of the management not to retain any of the foregoing, so that the personnel of the company will be drawn entirely from the nations comprising the entente allies.

Frieda Hempel is a Prussian by birth, but recently announced her intention to wed an American, William B. Kahn, and she has taken considerable pains to have it understood that she is entirely American in her sympathies. In fact, she brought suit against a musical paper in Chicago which cast doubts upon her Americanism.

Mme. Matzenauer is an Austro-Hungarian by birth, but she was married to the Italian tenor, Ferrari Fontana, and has taken out American citizenship papers, in addition to which she has sung for many patriotic affairs.

Artur Bodansky, the conductor, is a native of Austria, and is said to have become a Swiss citizen, and to contemplate changing again to citizenship in this country.

Albert Reiss is German by birth, but has a French wife, and has made application to become an American citizen.

It is said that while the loyalty to the United States of those above mentioned may not be seriously open to question, it is believed by Mr. Gatti Casazza and the Metropolitan directorate that the time has come to draw the line sharply and to avoid the very appearance of anything which may smack of Teutonism.

This is in line with the growing conviction throughout the United States that Germanic influences here are so varied, subtle and insidious that everybody who ever had Prussian connections or inclinations should be suspected until after the war.

The development with regard to Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is pointed out as an example. Dr. Muck, of German birth and Swiss citizenship, was supported by strong influences in Boston until the government officials came to the conclusion that he was an active alien enemy and properly placed him under arrest.

Within the last week Josef Stransky leader of the Philharmonic Society, has had his loyalty to this country brought into question, and has put in an elaborate defense, the most important points of which is that he is of Bohemian birth, being of Czecho-Slavic blood and not Teutonic, and that all his utterances and acts have been in support of this country since it entered the war.

Whether such a crusade against Mr. Stransky will be made as that against Dr. Muck remains to be seen. There is no doubt about there being in the Philharmonic Society, and among the subscribers to its concerts, a strong feeling that this oldest orchestra in America should be under the baton of an out-and-out American leader.

Dr. Muck at last has resigned as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He did not resign, though, until after his arrest, and even then Major Higginson, owner of that organization, accepted it to take effect not until May 4, when the present series of concerts ends, although Dr. Muck is in jail and cannot officiate as director again.

Major Higginson apparently still believes in the Kaiser's favorite director, for ever since the latter was jailed he has been trying to have him re-

---

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date APR 6

SOME PERISCOPICS ON TIMELY TOPICS

It was, as has been noted, to the Order of Teutonic Knights to whom the Hohenzollerns were indebted for gaining possession of East Prussia. Of course, most of the accounts one reads of the order are laudatory, such for instance, as that given in the Sunday magazine section of the "Citizen" (March 10). But that is all camouflage, it appears. Posing as soldiers of the Cross, they got credit for being noble, virtuous, chivalous because "they were Germans." That guarantee seemed to be sufficient to mark them out as all that was honorable and chivalric, as would become them. But as we read: "They were not true representatives of the best instincts of German society and their last hours were passed not in the valiant use of the arts which had once won them renown, but in the abuse of cruel powers which had been tolerable in the past only because they were regulated by splendid military virtue." Their earlier career, however, did not justify these words. "There must have been something satanic about them that made of their pretentions a jest, a mockery." The order adopted a white robe with a Maltese cross in black, which to-day is the flag that the Prussian pirate hoists when he has stolen close to his unsuspecting prey. The title, Hospitallers of Mary of Jerusalem was a lie. They were not true Crusaders. They never fought for the redemption of the Holy Land. They never saved Jerusalem. Soon they found work much more suited to their tastes, and the poor barbarians of the Baltic coasts offered an easy conquest." They were a lie! They busied themselves not in crusading in the Holy Lands to rescue the Holy Sepulchre from the desecrating hands of the Mahomedans, but in "carrying fire and sword" among weaker people, easy of conquest.

In East Prussia their detestable work began during the opening of the thirteenth century. "The robe of purity was soon stained with crime on crime. The Cross of Christ again and again was made a hissing and a by-word. The rape of Belgium may be full of horrors, but the rape of the Baltic lands is almost as ghastly. They butchered in one day more than 5,000, from which surfeit they "returned with joy praising the Saviour's name."

Nauseating and sacriligious was their hypocracy and blasphemy. The record of "fire and rapine" is lost in the general blur of horror that remained. The writer of the article quoted "Prussian Frightfulness and the Savage Mind" gives unbelievable examples of the barbarisms perpetrated by the "sacred" order on its helpless victims—all of which have been, however, outdone by their descendants in Belgium and elsewhere to-day!

"The German sword, wielded by our great army leaders, has brought peace to Russia," declares the Kaiser.

"The sword of the Kaiser" will become one of the greatest historical exhibits in the museum of the League of Nations—wherever that may be located—for the gaze of future generations as the abhorred symbol of all that was atrocious in war that was abolished with his defeat.

Well, the stench from that offensive Muck-heap has been killed, anyway—by being carted off to a deordorizing dump—unfortunately not an interment field.

TELEGRAM

ss: New York City.

SWISS INQUIRE U. S. REASON FOR MUCK INTERNMENT

WASHINGTON, Saturday.—The Swiss government inquired to-day of the State Department the American government's reasonings for interning Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth. Dr. Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is classed as an enemy alien. He was arrested in Boston two weeks ago.

Dr. Muck bases his assertion to Swiss citizenship on the fact that when he was eight years of age his father, who was a native of Bavaria and a subject of that kingdom, obtained naturalization papers in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland. The Department of Justice asserts that he made no profession of Swiss citizenship,

---

m NEW YORK CITY

dress New York City

DOKTOR KARL MUCK ORDERED SENT TO INTERNMENT CAMP

Department of Justice Overrules His Claim to Freedom Based on Swiss Citizenship.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday.—Internment of Doktor Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war was ordered to-day by the Department of Justice. Doktor Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claim to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Doktor Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Doktor Muck was arrested two weeks ago and held on a Presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents who have followed the orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permisison from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest he has resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

Will Be Taken to Internment Camp Next Week.

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—Orders for the internment of Doktor Karl Muck were received by federal agents here to-night. It was said that no arrangements for Doktor Muck's transfer to the military authorities for internment, or for his removal from the East Cambridge jail, where he is now confined, would be made until some time next week probably.

Names Appraisers

n TIMES

ress: New York City

MUCK TO BE INTERNED FOR PERIOD OF THE WAR

Washington Orders the Orchestra Leader Confined as an Enemy of the Country.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war, was ordered today by the Department of Justice. Dr. Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spits of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr. Muck was arrested about two weeks ago and held on a Presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents who had followed his movements for several years since he obtained special permission from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest he resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

Address: New York City

Date APR 6 - 1918

ISSUES ORDER TO INTERN DR. MUCK

Action Taken Covering Period of the War by the Department of Justice at Washington.

HELD TO BE AN ENEMY ALIEN

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., April 5.

Orders were issued to-day by the Department of Justice to intern Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war.

Dr. Muck was arrested in Boston several days ago and his case has been under consideration by the Federal authorities since. His name came into prominence this season through his refusal to lead the Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert. Subsequently several cities refused to permit him to conduct at the concerts booked there, and later he was forced to lead his orchestra in the anthem.

Upon his arrest Dr. Muck resigned as leader of the musical organization.

Dr. Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

It is probable that Dr. Muck sent to Fort Oglethorpe.

---

om SUN

dress: New York City.

ate

DR. KARL MUCK TO BE INTERNED

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Leader Probably Will Go to Fort Oglethorpe.

GREGORY ISSUES ORDER

Charges Against Conductor, German Born Swiss Citizen, Not Revealed.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was arrested on a Presidential warrant by local agents of the Department of Justice in Cambridge, Mass., almost two weeks ago, to-day was ordered interned as an alien enemy. Dr. Muck probably will be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where several hundred German nationals are interned for the period of the war as dangerous alien enemies.

Dr. Muck's case has been under consideration by Department of Justice Officials and the Attorney-General for several days. His internment was ordered on reports of the Department's agents in Boston. The charges were not revealed.

For several months, while touring the country at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck was the storm centre of agitation over the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the orchestra. He at first refused to lead during the playing of the national anthem, but under pressure receded from this position.

Dr. Muck asserts he is of Swiss citizenship and this is not disputed by the Department of Justice. It is held, however, that his Swiss citizenship does not disbar his internment under the espionage act as a native-born German.

BOSTON, April 5.—An order for the internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was received by Federal agents here to-night.

It was said that no arrangements for Dr. Muck's transfer to the military authorities for internment, or for his removal from the East Cambridge jail, where he is now confined, would be made until next week probably.

EVENING JOURNAL

ss: New York.

APR 6 - 1918

DR. MUCK WILL BE INTERNED DURING WAR

Military Authorities to Designate Camp to Which He Will Be Taken as Enemy Alien.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Following the action of the Department of Justice in ordering the internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war, the military authorities are preparing to designate the place of his detention.

The Department of Justice after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claim of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, was overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr. Muck was arrested about two weeks ago. The Department of Justice received reports of secret agents who have followed the former orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permission from the Kaiser to remain in this country. He resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

Da

Dr. Muck Interned; Said To Be Involved In Sabotage Plot

Boston Symphony Leader Is Turned Over to Army; Swiss Consul Files an Appeal

[Staff Correspondence]

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The Department of Justice to-night ordered the internment of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war. Following the customary procedure, it was stated at the Attorney General's office to-day, Dr. Muck will be turned over to the military authorities for internment in such place as they may designate.

The Department of Justice declined to make public the evidence on which action against Dr. Muck was taken. It was stated, however, that the internment order followed the development of new evidence, confirmed by the department since the original arrest of Dr. Muck by Federal authorities in Boston. In this connection there is an unconfirmed rumor to the effect that the Boston Symphony leader was involved in a nation-wide sabotage plot to obstruct and to hinder the movement of war supplies over railroads here.

The Swiss Legation, at the request of Dr. Muck, has made representations to the State Department of his Swiss citizenship. The Department of Justice, however, has accumulated so much evidence against Dr. Muck that it is not anticipated the Swiss Legation will press these representations.

He will probably be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Address: New York City.

Date APR 6 19

ALL GERMANS AT METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE TO GO

Teutonic Blood to Be Eliminated Entirely at End of This Season.

SOME CLAIM LOYALTY

Directors Said to Believe Appearance of Evil Must Be Avoided.

While not officially announced, there is no doubt but that the last vestige of Teutonism is to be swept out of the Metropolitan Opera House at the end of this season, and next Fall there will not be a singer or conductor or employee of any kind around the temple of song who can even be suspected of pro-German inclination.

When German opera was dropped from the repertoire, before the beginning of this season, most of the German singers, including such rampant and outspoken upholders of Prussianism as Johanna Gadski, Margarete Ober, Otto Goritz and others, as well as less militant Germans, such as Karl Braun, Herman Weil, Johannis Sembach and Melanie Kurt were dropped from the roster. Others who professed Americanism, such as Frieda Hempel, Margarete Matzenauer, Artur Bodansky, Max Bloch, Robert Leonhardt, Carl Schlegel and Albert Reiss, were retained.

Next season, however, it is understood to be the purpose of the management not to retain any of the foregoing, so that the personnel of the company will be drawn entirely from the nations comprising the entente allies.

Frieda Hempel is a Prussian by birth, but recently announced her intention to wed an American, William B. Kahn, and she has taken considerable pains to have it understood that she is entirely American in her sympathies. In fact, she brought suit against a musical paper in Chicago which cast doubts upon her Americanism.

Mme. Matzenauer is an Austro-Hungarian by birth, but she was married to the Italian tenor, Ferrari Fontana, and has taken out American citizenship papers, in addition to which she has sung for many patriotic affairs.

Artur Bodansky, the conductor, is a native of Austria, and is said to have become a Swiss citizen, and to contemplate changing again to citizenship in this country.

Albert Reiss is German by birth, but has a French wife, and has made application to become an American citizen.

It is said that while the loyalty to the United States of those above mentioned may not be seriously open to question, it is believed by Mr. Gatti Casazza and the Metropolitan directorate that the time has come to draw the line sharply and to avoid the very appearance of anything which may smack of Teutonism.

This is in line with the growing conviction throughout the United States that Germanic influences here are so varied, subtle and insidious that everybody who ever had Prussian connections or inclinations should be suspected until after the war.

The development with regard to Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is pointed out as an example. Dr. Muck, of German birth and Swiss citizenship, was supported by strong influences in Boston until the government officials came to the conclusion that he was an active alien enemy and properly placed him under arrest.

Within the last week Josef Stransky leader of the Philharmonic Society, has had his loyalty to this country brought into question, and has put in an elaborate defense, the most important points of which is that he is of Bohemian birth, being of Czecho-Slavic blood and not Teutonic, and that all his utterances and acts have been in support of this country since it entered the war.

Whether such a crusade against Mr. Stransky will be made as that against Dr. Muck remains to be seen. There is no doubt about there being in the Philharmonic Society, and among the subscribers to its concerts, a strong feeling that this oldest orchestra in America should be under the baton of an out-and-out American leader.

Dr. Muck at last has resigned as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He did not resign, though, until after his arrest, and even then Major Higginson, owner of that organization, accepted it to take effect not until May 4, when the present series of concerts ends, although Dr. Muck is in jail and cannot officiate as director again.

Major Higginson apparently still believes in the Kaiser's favorite director, for ever since the latter was jailed he has been trying to have him re-

---

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date APR 6 19

SOME PERISCOPICS ON TIMELY TOPICS

It was, as has been noted, to the Order of Teutonic Knights to whom the Hohenzollerns were indebted for gaining possession of East Prussia. Of course, most of the accounts one reads of the order are laudatory, such for instance, as that given in the Sunday magazine section of the "Citizen" (March 10). But that is all camouflage, it appears. Posing as soldiers of the Cross, they got credit for being noble, virtuous, chivalous because "they were Germans." That guarantee seemed to be sufficient to mark them out as all that was honorable and chivalric, as would become them. But as we read: "They were not true representatives of the best instincts of German society and their last hours were passed not in the valiant use of the arts which had once won them renown, but in the abuse of cruel powers which had been tolerable in the past only because they were regulated by splendid military virtue." Their earlier career, however, did not justify these words. "There must have been something satanic about them that made of their pretentions a jest, a mockery." The order adopted a white robe with a Maltese cross in black, which to-day is the flag that the Prussian pirate hoists when he has stolen close to his unsuspecting prey. The title, Hospitallers of Mary of Jerusalem was a lie. They were not true Crusaders. They never fought for the redemption of the Holy Land. They never saved Jerusalem. Soon they found work much more suited to their tastes, and the poor barbarians of the Baltic coasts offered an easy conquest." They were a lie! They busied themselves not in crusading in the Holy Lands to rescue the Holy Sepulchre from the desecrating hands of the Mahomedans, but in "carrying fire and sword" among weaker people, easy of conquest.

In East Prussia their detestable work began during the opening of the thirteenth century. "The robe of purity was soon stained with crime on crime. The Cross of Christ again and again was made a hissing and a by-word. The rape of Belgium may be full of horrors, but the rape of the Baltic lands is almost as ghastly. They butchered in one day more than 5,000, from which surfeit they "returned with joy praising the Saviour's name."

Nauseating and sacriligious was their hypocracy and blasphemy. The record of "fire and rapine" is lost in the general blur of horror that remained. The writer of the article quoted "Prussian Frightfulness and the Savage Mind" gives unbelievable examples of the barbarisms perpetrated by the "sacred" order on its helpless victims—all of which have been, however, outdone by their descendants in Belgium and elsewhere to-day!

"The German sword, wielded by our great army leaders, has brought peace to Russia," declares the Kaiser.

"The sword of the Kaiser" will become one of the greatest historical exhibits in the museum of the League of Nations—wherever that may be located—for the gaze of future generations as the abhorred symbol of all that was atrocious in war that was abolished with his defeat.

Well, the stench from that offensive Muck-heap has been killed, anyway—by being carted off to a deordorizing dump—unfortunately not an interment field.

TELEGRAM

ss: New York City.

SWISS INQUIRE U. S. REASON FOR MUCK INTERNMENT

WASHINGTON, Saturday.—The Swiss government inquired to-day of the State Department the American government's reasonings for interning Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth. Dr. Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is classed as an enemy alien. He was arrested in Boston two weeks ago.

Dr. Muck bases his assertion to Swiss citizenship on the fact that when he was eight years of age his father, who was a native of Bavaria and a subject of that kingdom, obtained naturalization papers in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland. The Department of Justice asserts that he made no profession of Swiss citizenship,

---

m NEW YORK HERALD

dress New York City

DOKTOR KARL MUCK ORDERED SENT TO INTERNMENT CAMP

Department of Justice Overrules His Claim to Freedom Based on Swiss Citizenship.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday.—Internment of Doktor Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war was ordered to-day by the Department of Justice. Doktor Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claim to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Doktor Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Doktor Muck was arrested two weeks ago and held on a Presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents who have followed the orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permisison from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest he has resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

Will Be Taken to Internment Camp Next Week.

BOSTON, Mass., Friday.—Orders for the internment of Doktor Karl Muck were received by federal agents here to-night. It was said that no arrangements for Doktor Muck's transfer to the military authorities for internment, or for his removal from the East Cambridge jail, where he is now confined, would be made until some time next week probably.

Names Appraisers

n TIMES

ress: New York City

MUCK TO BE INTERNED FOR PERIOD OF THE WAR

Washington Orders the Orchestra Leader Confined as an Enemy of the Country.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war, was ordered today by the Department of Justice. Dr. Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spits of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice, after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claims of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, were overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr. Muck was arrested about two weeks ago and held on a Presidential warrant while the Department of Justice reviewed reports of secret agents who had followed his movements for several years since he obtained special permission from Emperor William to remain in this country. Since his arrest he resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

---

ddress: New York City

ate APR 6 - 1918

ISSUES ORDER TO INTERN DR. MUCK

Action Taken Covering Period of the War by the Department of Justice at Washington.

HELD TO BE AN ENEMY ALIEN

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., April 5.

Orders were issued to-day by the Department of Justice to intern Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war.

Dr. Muck was arrested in Boston several days ago and his case has been under consideration by the Federal authorities since. His name came into prominence this season through his refusal to lead the Symphony Orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert. Subsequently several cities refused to permit him to conduct at the concerts booked there, and later he was forced to lead his orchestra in the anthem.

Upon his arrest Dr. Muck resigned as leader of the musical organization.

Dr. Muck, held to be an enemy alien in spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The department holds that under the espionage law a "denizen" of Germany may be regarded as an enemy alien. Under this interpretation the fact that Dr. Muck's father, a German, was naturalized in Switzerland while Dr. Muck was a minor, would be outweighed by Dr. Muck's record as a native of Germany and a resident of that country most of his life.

It is probable that Dr. Muck will be sent to Fort Oglethorpe.

---

om SUN

dress: New York City.

ate

DR. KARL MUCK TO BE INTERNED

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Leader Probably Will Go to Fort Oglethorpe.

GREGORY ISSUES ORDER

Charges Against Conductor, German Born Swiss Citizen, Not Revealed.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was arrested on a Presidential warrant by local agents of the Department of Justice in Cambridge, Mass., almost two weeks ago, to-day was ordered interned as an alien enemy. Dr. Muck probably will be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where several hundred German nationals are interned for the period of the war as dangerous alien enemies.

Dr. Muck's case has been under consideration by Department of Justice Officials and the Attorney-General for several days. His internment was ordered on reports of the Department's agents in Boston. The charges were not revealed.

For several months, while touring the country at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck was the storm centre of agitation over the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the orchestra. He at first refused to lead during the playing of the national anthem, but under pressure receded from this position.

Dr. Muck asserts he is of Swiss citizenship and this is not disputed by the Department of Justice. It is held, however, that his Swiss citizenship does not disbar his internment under the espionage act as a native-born German.

BOSTON, April 5.—An order for the internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was received by Federal agents here to-night.

It was said that no arrangements for Dr. Muck's transfer to the military authorities for internment, or for his removal from the East Cambridge jail, where he is now confined, would be made until next week probably.

EVENING JOURNAL

ss: New York.

APR 6 - 1918

DR. MUCK WILL BE INTERNED DURING WAR

Military Authorities to Designate Camp to Which He Will Be Taken as Enemy Alien.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Following the action of the Department of Justice in ordering the internment of Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war, the military authorities are preparing to designate the place of his detention.

The Department of Justice after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claim of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, was overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

Dr. Muck was arrested about two weeks ago. The Department of Justice received reports of secret agents who had followed the former orchestra leader's movements for several years since he obtained special permission from the Kaiser to remain in this country. He resigned his leadership of the orchestra.

TRIBUNE

New York City

Muck Interned; Said To Be Involved In Sabotage Plot

Boston Symphony Leader Is Turned Over to Army; Swiss Consul Files an Appeal

[Staff Correspondence]

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The Department of Justice to-night ordered the internment of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the period of the war. Following the customary procedure, it was stated at the Attorney General's office to-day, Dr. Muck will be turned over to the military authorities for internment in such place as they may designate.

The Department of Justice declined to make public the evidence on which action against Dr. Muck was taken. It was stated, however, that the internment order followed the development of new evidence, confirmed by the department since the original arrest of Dr. Muck by Federal authorities in Boston. In this connection there is an unconfirmed rumor to the effect that the Boston Symphony leader was involved in a nation-wide sabotage plot to obstruct and to hinder the movement of war supplies over railroads here.

The Swiss Legation, at the request of Dr. Muck, has made representations to the State Department of his Swiss citizenship. The Department of Justice, however, has accumulated so much evidence against Dr. Muck that it is not anticipated the Swiss Legation will press these representations.

He will probably be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

New York City

APR 6 - 1918

DR. MUCK INTERNED UNTIL END OF WAR

Orchestra Leader Is to Be Imprisoned in Fort Oglethorpe by Order of Attorney General Gregory.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was ordered interned during the war by the Attorney General to-day. He probably will be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in a few days.

Dr. Muck was arrested by Department of Justice officials more than a week ago, and has been in jail at Cambridge, Mass. In spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss Legation, he is held to be an enemy alien. After investigation of his record of pro-German sympathies and statements, and his close association with state leaders in Germany in the past, it was decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.

His claim to Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving there from Germany, was ov ruled under the Espionage Act whi permits interment of a "denizen" : an enemy country. He came here b special permission from the Kaiser Since his arrest he resigned his leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Before his arrest he was barred from several cities where the orchestra was scheduled to play, but in New York he was received warmly and by crowded houses more than once this season. Attention was first attracted to his German sympathies when he announced that "The Star Spangled Banner" was not played by his orchestra because art was "greater than any nationality."

EVENING SUN

New York City

ORCHESTRA LEADER SENT TO AN INTERNMENT CAMP

Dr. KARL MUCK
© by GARO

AMERICAN

New York City

APR 6 - 1918

Dr. Muck Ordered Interned for War as an Enemy Alien

Department of Justice Acts Under Espionage Law Against "Denizen" of Germany.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Internment of Dr. Carl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as an enemy alien for period of the war, was ordered to-day by the Department of Justice. Dr. Muck, whose claims of Swiss citizenship were supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.. His claim of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, was overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

ORDER TO INTERN MUCK IS ISSUED

Orchestra Leader Going to Camp as Dangerous Enemy.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—On orders of the Department of Justice Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is awaiting internment for the rest of the war as a dangerous enemy alien.

The order followed after two weeks of investigation after the arrest of the musician at his home in Boston. He is now in the East Cambridge jail, and the agents of the department in Boston say he will probably be sent to an internment camp, possibly Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, next week.

The orchestra leader, who is a personal friend of the Kaiser and lead of the Royal Opera of Berlin, becam director of the Boston Symphony Or chestra with the permission of th War Lord. He has put forth a clai that he is a citizen of Switzerlan This claim, however, will be of n avail, it was said at the Attorne General's office, for Dr Muck was bor in Germany and therefore comes un der the dangerous enemy clause of th espionage act. He has appealed to th Swiss Legation here, but the evidenc which the Secret Service men hav gathered is so great the appeal canno be recognized.

Since his arrest on a Presidentia warrant, Dr. Muck has resigned as th leader of the Boston organization For many months he has been the centre of a storm of protests, because at the outbreak of the war between the United States and Germany he refused to lead the orchestra when it played "The Star Spangled Banner." Later he was prevailed upon to do this by Major Henry L. Higginson sponsor of the organization.

From STANDARD UNION BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Address

Date APR 6 1918

Ending the Muck Controversy.

The internment of Karl Muck till the conclusion of the war at least ends a dispute which has torn a number of communities. The public seemed to be about equally divided between letting the leader of the Boston Symphony continue to swing his baton and summarily shutting him off from his accustomed duties.

It is made plain by the decision that the authorities have some evidence showing that this enemy alien has not carefully observed all the rules. What there is against Muck is not disclosed, but friends of the noted musician need have no fear he is being interned merely because a howl was made against his public appearances.

NORTH AMERICAN

Philadelphia, Pa.

Interning Muck

TO THE EDITOR—It's a joy to see that Mr. Muck, musician and Swiss citizen, is interned as an enemy alien. He's only one, but he helps. Now let's intern some more and let's have a few death penalties on espionage charges and then we'll realize we're making some progress in the war even if we don't have many ships or airplanes.

Philadelphia, April 6. J. B.

ork 1884

POST

ess: Washington, D. C.

APR

The Nation's Guest.

Under orders from the Department of Justice, which appear to have been a long time coming, Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to be interned for the period of the war. This eminent artist will soon be transferred to a concentration camp, probably at Fort Oglethorpe, after which he will be relieved of the annoyances of suspicion of pro-German activities and the people of the United States will experience a similar relief.

Dr. Muck's case first came into public notice when he declined to follow the example of other orchestra leaders and incorporate "The Star-Spangled Banner" in his programs. He took the position that the national anthem was not artistic and did not belong in a program of a classical nature. In peace times he might have prevailed, but with war on and the patriotic sentiment of the nation aroused to the highest pitch, "The Star-Spangled Banner" sounded appropriate to the mass of the people upon any occasion. Such a row was raised about it that Dr. Muck reversed himself, and his later concerts always led off with this patriotic air.

But even then the feeling against Dr. Muck did not subside. The fact that he was born in Germany and that he had shown no desire to avail himself of American citizenship made it very inappropriate that he should be permitted to move about at will in the country that was at war with the country of his birth. Department of Justice agents carefully investigated him and his activities and the result has been the order for his internment. What these agents found has not been disclosed, but evidently they discovered enough to warrant his detention while the war is in progress.

It is stated in his behalf that though he was born in Germany his parents were Swiss, but this furnishes no excuse for giving him the freedom of the country during the war. A nice perception of the proprieties would have led him to leave the United States while the war was going on, but since he did not take that view of the matter it remained for the government to act. It has acted wisely. If Dr. Muck insists upon staying in America he should remain as the nation's guest.

EAGLE

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

APR

DR. MUCK TAKEN TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Will Be Interned There for Period of the War.

Boston, Mass., April 6—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra up to the time of his arrest two weeks ago as an enemy alien, started today in the custody of Federal deputy marshals for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned. Before leaving the city, Dr. Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to his home, to pack up a few personal belongings and to say goodby to his wife.

Since the conductor's arrest the orchestra has been led by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. Dr. Muck's resignation as leader has been accepted to be effective next month when the concert season closes.

SUN

s: New York City.

DR. MUCK STARTS FOR FORT OGLETHORPE

Symphony Conductor to Be Interned There.

BOSTON, Mass., April 6.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra up to the time of his arrest two weeks ago as an enemy alien, started to-day in the custody of Federal Deputy Marshals for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned.

Before leaving the city Dr. Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to his home to pack up a few personal belongings and to say good-by to his wife.

n EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Whatever the decision as to Dr. Karl Muck may be his connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was definitely ended with the acceptance of his resignation after his arrest.

Music lovers are far more concerned as to the future of the orchestra than as to that of its leader. When the excitement over Dr. Muck first broke out Major Higginson said that the orchestra could not go on without Dr. Muck and that there was nobody to replace him in this country. When the leader was arrested, however, he permitted the performance of Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion," difficult music, employing both the orchestra and a chorus, to go on under an assistant and there is no indication that the performance was not at least reasonably satisfactory.

If Dr. Muck had been suddenly killed in the course of the season, there is little doubt that a leader would have been found to fill the dates contracted for. Now that there is a whole summer in which to select a new leader and to enable him to conduct rehearsals, it is greatly to be hoped that the orchestra may continue to be the great national institution which it has long been. Major Higginson has been much hurt by some of the comments which have been made on Dr. Muck's retention, but the future of the orchestra, to which he has devoted years of his life and much of his fortune, is more important than any question of personal feeling. However well founded his personal resentment may be, it is to be hoped that Major Higginson will continue the very great service he has done to his countrymen and women by the maintenance of this unrivaled orchestra.

New York City

APR 6 - 1918

DR. MUCK INTERNED UNTIL END OF WAR

Orchestra Leader Is to Be Imprisoned in Fort Oglethorpe by Order of Attorney General Gregory.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was ordered interned during the war by the Attorney General to-day. He probably will be sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in a few days.

Dr. Muck was arrested by Department of Justice officials more than a week ago, and has been in jail at Cambridge, Mass. In spite of his claims to Swiss citizenship, which are supported by the Swiss Legation, he is held to be an enemy alien. After investigation of his record of pro-German sympathies and statements, and his close association with state leaders in Germany in the past, it was decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large.

His claim to Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving there from Germany, was overruled under the Espionage Act which permits interment of a "denizen" of an enemy country. He came here by special permission from the Kaiser. Since his arrest he resigned his leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Before his arrest he was barred from several cities where the orchestra was scheduled to play, but in New York he was received warmly and by crowded houses more than once this season. Attention was first attracted to his German sympathies when he announced that "The Star Spangled Banner" was not played by his orchestra because art was "greater than any nationality."

ORCHESTRA LEADER SENT TO AN INTERNMENT CAMP

Dr. KARL MUCK
© by GARO

AMERICAN

New York City.

APR 6 - 1918

Dr. Muck Ordered Interned for War as an Enemy Alien

Department of Justice Acts Under Espionage Law Against "Denizen" of Germany.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Internment of Dr. Carl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as an enemy alien for period of the war, was ordered to-day by the Department of Justice. Dr. Muck, whose claims of Swiss citizenship were supported by the Swiss Legation, will be turned over to the military authorities, who will decide where he shall be imprisoned.

The Department of Justice after an extensive investigation of Dr. Muck's record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with State leaders in Germany, decided it would be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. His claim of Swiss citizenship, based on the fact that his father was naturalized in Switzerland after moving from Germany, was overruled under the Espionage act, which permits the internment of a "denizen" of an enemy country.

From STANDARD UNION BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Address

Date APR 6 1918

Ending the Muck Controversy.

The internment of Karl Muck till the conclusion of the war at least ends a dispute which has torn a number of communities. The public seemed to be about equally divided between letting the leader of the Boston Symphony continue to swing his baton and summarily shutting him off from his accustomed duties.

It is made plain by the decision that the authorities have some evidence showing that this enemy alien has not carefully observed all the rules. What there is against Muck is not disclosed, but friends of the noted musician need have no fear he is being interned merely because a howl was made against his public appearances.

NORTH AMERICAN

Philadelphia, Pa.

Interning Muck

TO THE EDITOR—It's a joy to see that Mr. Muck, musician and Swiss citizen, is interned as an enemy alien. He's only one, but he helps. Now let's intern some more and let's have a few death penalties on espionage charges and then we'll realize we're making some progress in the war even if we don't have many ships or airplanes.

Philadelphia, April 6. J. B.

ORDER TO INTERN MUCK IS ISSUED

Orchestra Leader Going to Camp as Dangerous Enemy.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—On orders of the Department of Justice Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is awaiting internment for the rest of the war as a dangerous enemy alien.

The order followed after two weeks of investigation after the arrest of the musician at his home in Boston. He is now in the East Cambridge jail, and the agents of the department in Boston say he will probably be sent to an internment camp, possibly Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, next week.

The orchestra leader, who is a personal friend of the Kaiser and leader of the Royal Opera of Berlin, became director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the permission of the War Lord. He has put forth a claim that he is a citizen of Switzerland. This claim, however, will be of no avail, it was said at the Attorney General's office, for Dr. Muck was born in Germany, and therefore comes under the dangerous enemy clause of the espionage act. He has appealed to the Swiss Legation here, but the evidence which the Secret Service men have gathered is so great the appeal cannot be recognized.

Since his arrest on a Presidential warrant, Dr. Muck has resigned as the leader of the Boston organization. For many months he has been the centre of a storm of protest, because at the outbreak of the war between the United States and Germany he refused to lead the orchestra when it played "The Star Spangled Banner." Later he was prevailed upon to do this by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor of the organization.

ork 1884

POST

ess: Washington, D. C.

APR

The Nation's Guest.

Under orders from the Department of Justice, which appear to have been a long time coming, Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to be interned for the period of the war. This eminent artist will soon be transferred to a concentration camp, probably at Fort Oglethorpe, after which he will be relieved of the annoyances of suspicion of pro-German activities and the people of the United States will experience a similar relief.

Dr. Muck's case first came into public notice when he declined to follow the example of other orchestra leaders and incorporate "The Star-Spangled Banner" in his programs. He took the position that the national anthem was not artistic and did not belong in a program of a classical nature. In peace times he might have prevailed, but with war on and the patriotic sentiment of the nation aroused to the highest pitch, "The Star-Spangled Banner" sounded appropriate to the mass of the people upon any occasion. Such a row was raised about it that Dr. Muck reversed himself, and his later concerts always led off with this patriotic air.

But even then the feeling against Dr. Muck did not subside. The fact that he was born in Germany and that he had shown no desire to avail himself of American citizenship made it very inappropriate that he should be permitted to move about at will in the country that was at war with the country of his birth. Department of Justice agents carefully investigated him and his activities and the result has been the order for his internment. What these agents found has not been disclosed, but evidently they discovered enough to warrant his detention while the war is in progress.

It is stated in his behalf that though he was born in Germany his parents were Swiss, but this furnishes no excuse for giving him the freedom of the country during the war. A nice perception of the proprieties would have led him to leave the United States while the war was going on, but since he did not take that view of the matter it remained for the government to act. It has acted wisely. If Dr. Muck insists upon staying in America he should remain as the nation's guest.

EAGLE

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

APR

DR. MUCK TAKEN TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Will Be Interned There for Period of the War.

Boston, Mass., April 6—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra up to the time of his arrest two weeks ago as an enemy alien, started today in the custody of Federal deputy marshals for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned. Before leaving the city, Dr. Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to his home, to pack up a few personal belongings and to say goodby to his wife.

Since the conductor's arrest the orchestra has been led by Ernest Schmidt, assistant conductor. Dr. Muck's resignation as leader has been accepted to be effective next month when the concert season closes.

SUN

s: New York City.

APR

DR. MUCK STARTS FOR FORT OGLETHORPE

Symphony Conductor to Be Interned There.

BOSTON, Mass., April 6.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra up to the time of his arrest two weeks ago as an enemy alien, started to-day in the custody of Federal Deputy Marshals for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned.

Before leaving the city Dr. Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to his home to pack up a few personal belongings and to say good-by to his wife.

n EAGLE

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Whatever the decision as to Dr. Karl Muck may be his connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was definitely ended with the acceptance of his resignation after his arrest.

Music lovers are far more concerned as to the future of the orchestra than as to that of its leader. When the excitement over Dr. Muck first broke out Major Higginson said that the orchestra could not go on without Dr. Muck and that there was nobody to replace him in this country. When the leader was arrested, however, he permitted the performance of Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion," difficult music, employing both the orchestra and a chorus, to go on under an assistant and there is no indication that the performance was not at least reasonably satisfactory.

If Dr. Muck had been suddenly killed in the course of the season, there is little doubt that a leader would have been found to fill the dates contracted for. Now that there is a whole summer in which to select a new leader and to enable him to conduct rehearsals, it is greatly to be hoped that the orchestra may continue to be the great national institution which it has long been. Major Higginson has been much hurt by some of the comments which have been made on Dr. Muck's retention, but the future of the orchestra, to which he has devoted years of his life and much of his fortune, is more important than any question of personal feeling. However well founded his personal resentment may be, it is to be hoped that Major Higginson will continue the very great service he has done to his countrymen and women by the maintenance of this unrivaled orchestra.

EVENING TELEGRAM

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

Not only will the beautiful notes of "The Star Spangled Banner" ring in the ears of Dr. Karl Muck for some time to come, but in a few days he will vividly be reminded of another popular air, that of "Marching Through Georgia."

SUN

ess: New York City.

With Dr. Muck interned at Fort Oglethorpe there should be no difficulty in organizing a highly successful orchestra in that abode of musical genius.

ablished. London, 1881; New York, 1884

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date.....

When Karl Muck starts for detention camp ahead of Karl Buenz it almost looks as if Justice's bandage had slipped.

om EVENING STAR

dress: Washington, D. C.

te.....

Internment for Enemies.

Formal orders have been issued for the internment of Dr. Karl Muck, the former orchestra leader, for the period of the war. He will be turned over to the military authorities and placed in safe keeping. The Department of Justice has decided, after investigating his record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with German state leaders, that it will be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. Muck has only himself to blame for his present predicament. Had he restrained his antagonism to America, and, as a musician, observed the strict proprieties and raised no issue over the rendering of the national anthem, in all likelihood he would not have been arrested. His attempt to deny German citizenship aggravated the public feeling in the matter. There are many others who are in the same position, who are enjoying personal freedom at present through courtesy, but who, if strict justice were done, would be confined.

In this connection the decision of the German-American Alliance to disband, doubtless in anticipation of the passage of the King bill repealing the charter of that organization, is to be noted as a wise acceptance of conditions. The time is not propitious for "German-Americanism." It is not a good season for persistent manifestation of divided national sympathy. The hyphen is distinctly out of favor today, and those who are singing German songs and urging the study of German literature, and seeking to promote the maintenance of German customs in the midst of American life, are risking their liberty and possibly, as the tragedy in Illinois has suggested, their lives.

In Chicago a socialist meeting has been arranged for tomorrow night in honor of the people who have been recently indicted under the espionage act. A program of German music has been arranged. This is a most dangerous thing to do. The temper of the people is running high. As a mere measure of precaution, to prevent further mob violence, that meeting in Chicago should be prohibited. Today hundreds of Americans who are of the most law-abiding class, who normally deprecate mob rule, and who fear the consequences of indulgence in punitive passions, are applauding the act of the mob in Illinois, simply because of the long suffering of impudent pro-German manifestations openly in this country.

Their approval of this shameful proceeding, so dangerous to the stability of the law, so likely to have been a monstrous injustice to the victim, is a shocking admonition of the necessity of the speedy enactment and the sharp inforcement of a law covering all displays of hostility to the United States. The perpetrators of the Illinois outrage should be punished if they can be identified. However offensive disloyalty may be, it cannot by any stretch of impatience justify lynching or the approval of mob violence. If that spirit prevails no man is safe. The cure for both evils, that of lynching and that of disloyalty, lies in a sedition law, fully and vigorously

s: New York City.

KARL MUCK ON WAY TO ALIEN CAMP

Fingerprinted and Photographed for "Rogues' Gallery," Boston Symphony's Leader Interned.

WIFE BIDS HIM A TEARFUL FAREWELL.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING TELEGRAM.]

BOSTON, Mass., Sunday.—Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is speeding southward by train to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in custody of Arthur J. Shinners, Deputy United States Marshal, and a guard. The party left Boston Saturday and by noon it is expected that the alien enemy will be formally interned for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck was apparently in a cheerful frame of mind, during his last day in Boston. The musician was taken to the Federal Building and officially photographed. While at the Federal Building he conferred privately with Assistant United States Attorney Judd Dewey, and was permitted to talk with C. J. Foley, secretary to Mr. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck was later taken back to the East Cambridge jail by Deputy Marshal Shinners, after bidding officials in the office of Marshal Mitchell goodby. He expressed his delight over the manner in which he has been treated since he was arrested two weeks ago. He made list as comfortable as possible at and is likely to be provided with m- forts by friends while a Fe

Dr. and Mrs. Muck took of one another on the steps of the Cambridge jail.

Sheriff Fairbairn, of Middlesex count, broke the news to Dr. Muck that the federal officials had determined upon interning him, until peace is restored in Europe. The musician was greatly surprised and expressed himself as having been confident from the time of his arrest that the government at Washington would regard him as a neutral Swiss citizen and order his release.

A few minutes later Mrs. Muck appeared at the jail. Sheriff Fairbairn left them alone in his office for more than an hour.

Mrs. Muck was still talking to her husband when a taxicab came to take Mr. Muck to the United States Marshal's office in the Federal Building for the last time.

She followed him to the steps of the jail, both weeping, and stood waving her handkerchief and blowing kisses to her husband.

Before leaving the jail Dr. Muck's finger prints were taken and his other Bertillion record made. He offered no objection to the process. On the way to the Federal Building a stop was made at a photographer's studio and the usual police gallery photographs taken, showing full face and side views of the prisoner. He posed willingly and showed no impatience, but was evidently pleased when the order was concluded.

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

TELEGRAM

: New York City.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Deport or Intern Germans.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

I AM wholly in accord with every word of the letter published yesterday—Sunday—in your patriotic paper, signed "Loyal American," and I hope those other twenty-two aliens will not rest in peace in this country but speedily be sent to keep company with Dr. Muck, where they can give concerts to their fellow aliens. * * *

Our government is entirely too generous for its own protection. * * *

German theatres, German and Austrian bakeries and lunch rooms, German newspapers and even the German language ought to be suppressed in public places.

Imagine what it would mean to them if Americans and French were to audaciously take these liberties in Germany or Austria at this time.

These who can't speak and read American ought to be either interned or deported.

A LOYAL AMERICAN MUSICIAN.

New York, April 8, 1918.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

Dr. Carl Muck will be interned under an order issued by Attorney General Gregory. Next!—EVENING TELEGRAM.

Otto Goritz. G. C. S.

New York, April 8, 1918.

Thinks More Law Is Needed.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

In your editorial in to-day's EVENING TELEGRAM on "Cut Out the German" * * * you ask, "What is the national government waiting for?" It is waiting for Congress to pass the law necessary to control and punish, which President Wilson asked for one year ago to-day.

GERMAN LIFELONG REPUBLICAN

New York, April 6, 1918.

TELEGRAM

: New York City.

Muck Incident Forgotten Too Soon.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

WELL, we have said our little say about the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Jay is a woman we should erect a monument to for her loyal patriotism. She helped to spread the truth about this organization and tried to arouse the public. Now what are we going to do? Well, I suppose we will let the twenty-two aliens rest in peace, amen.

Are we going to drop the matter? That organization is a hotbed of Germanism. It would reveal some doings if the places these people visit were investigated. We are asleep. Why are not these twenty-two German aliens fired back to the Vaterland? Why not let them give all the concerts they want down in Atlanta, Ga.? * * *

If the Americans could hear them * * * they would learn a great deal. I know not whether it would be the way the Hun says it or what he says would hurt more. Expressions like these are mild:—

"The Americans know nothing. They are not educated. They have no culture. The Americans are fools."

And I say we are. We are proving it. I tell you that these twenty-two aliens are saying it and also their American friends in New York. There was a mild scare among these Huns when the war broke out. They wanted to become citizens to save their pelts. * * *

Let us be up in arms against everything the Hun is in. Wake up, Americans, you are asleep, but the Hun is busy.

LOYAL AMERICAN.

New York, April 4, 1918

EVENING SUN

ss: New York City

Muck-Racing.

This clean sweep of patriotism has gone far beyond the arts: the sports have it now. From the South comes the announcement that "Dr. Muck has been barred for life from the Maryland turf. In fact his banishment will cover every racecourse in the world." Thus the Baltimore Evening Sun, which goes on to say that:

"Dr. Muck, the thoroughbred, was named after Dr. Karl Muck, the German who recently was arrested in Boston by Federal authorities.

"Capt. Parr was an admirer of Dr. Muck when the latter was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That was more than two years ago. But times have changed since then, and Dr. Muck has run his last race.

"When Dr. Muck again parades before Americans he will have an American name. Although the horse still is known officially in turf circles as Dr. Muck, Garth and his stable employees never call him by that."

om TRIBUNE

ldress: New York City

te.....

An Ovation

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: The Department of Justice having found good and sufficient reasons for the internment of Muck, Mr. Higginson and the rest of his loyal American group may well be proud of their successful effort to give this impudent representative of Prussianism an ovation at the last New York concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

IRVING PUTNAM.

New York, April 7, 1918.

SWISS ASK AMERICA WHY MUCK HAS BEEN INTERNED

WASHINGTON, D. C., Saturday.—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer to-day inquired of the State Department the American government's reasons for interning Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

Dr. Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is classed as an enemy alien. He was arrested in Boston two weeks ago.

Dr. Muck bases his claim to Swiss citizenship on the fact that when he was eight years of age, his father, who was a native of Bavaria and a subject of that kingdom, obtained naturalization papers in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland. The Department of Justice asserts that he made no profession of Swiss citizenship, however, until recently.

DOKTOR MUCK STARTS FOR INTERNMENT CAMP

Doktor Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra up to the time of his arrest two weeks ago as an enemy alien, started to-day in the custody of federal deputy marshals for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned. Before leaving the city Doktor Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to his home to pack up a few personal belongings and to say goodby to his wife.

rom BULLETIN

ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.

ite.....

THE CASE OF DR. MUCK

Many people are unnecessarily exercised for fear that this country has done an injustice to Dr. MUCK, conductor of the Boston Sympohny Orchestra, in sending him to the South for internment until after the war. Even Switzerland has asked an explanation, which will be given diplomatically, and will doubtless satisfy that nation.

The people of this country will be perfectly willing to think that the Administration has acted wisely for the very reason that we have moved so slowly and have permitted so much wrong to be done rather than risk making a mistake. Dr. MUCK may be a technical citizen of Switzerland, but that is not at all to the point. That he has been using his high position against the interests of the United States may be taken for granted; otherwise he would not have been sent to Georgia.

We certainly cannot be accused of being heretofore rigorous or even vigorous in our pursuit of German spies or Ger-

EVENING TELEGRAM

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

Not only will the beautiful notes of "The Star Spangled Banner" ring in the ears of Dr. Karl Muck for some time to come, but in a few days he will vividly be reminded of another popular air, that of "Marching Through Georgia."

SUN

ess: New York City.

With Dr. Muck interned at Fort Oglethorpe there should be no difficulty in organizing a highly successful orchestra in that abode of musical genius.

ished. London, 1881; New York, 1884

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date

When Karl Muck starts for ahead of Karl Buenz it almost tice's bandage had slipped.

EVENING STAR

om

dress: Washington, D. ork, 1884

te

Internment for Enemies.

Formal orders have been issued fo internment of Dr. Karl Muck, the mer orchestra leader, for the period the war. He will be turned over to military authorities and placed in sa keeping. The Department of Justice has decided, after investigating his record of pro-German sympathies and utterances and his close associations in the past with German state leaders, that it will be dangerous to permit him to remain at large. Muck has only himself to blame for his present predicament. Had he restrained his antagonism to America, and, as a musician, observed the strict proprieties and raised no issue over the rendering of the national anthem, in all likelihood he would not have been arrested. His attempt to deny German citizenship aggravated the public feeling in the matter. There are many others who are in the same position, who are enjoying personal freedom at present through courtesy, but who, if strict justice were done, would be confined.

In this connection the decision of the German-American Alliance to disband, doubtless in anticipation of the passage of the King bill repealing the charter of that organization, is to be noted as a wise acceptance of conditions. The time is not propitious for "German-Americanism." It is not a good season for persistent manifestation of divided national sympathy. The hyphen is distinctly out of favor today, and those who are singing German songs and urging the study of German literature, and seeking to promote the maintenance of German customs in the midst of American life, are risking their liberty and possibly, as the tragedy in Illinois has suggested, their lives.

In Chicago a socialist meeting has been arranged for tomorrow night in honor of the people who have been recently indicted under the espionage act. A program of German music has been arranged. This is a most dangerous thing to do. The temper of the people is running high. As a mere measure of precaution, to prevent further mob violence, that meeting in Chicago should be prohibited. Today hundreds of Americans who are of the most law-abiding class, who normally deprecate mob rule, and who fear the consequences of indulgence in punitive passions, are applauding the act of the mob in Illinois, simply because of the long suffering of impudent pro-German manifestations openly in this country.

Their approval of this shameful proceeding, so dangerous to the stability of the law, so likely to have been a monstrous injustice to the victim, is a shocking admonition of the necessity of the speedy enactment and the sharp inforcement of a law covering all displays of hostility to the United States. The perpetrators of the Illinois outrage should be punished if they can be identified. However offensive disloyalty may be, it cannot by any stretch of impatience justify lynching or the approval of mob violence. If that spirit prevails no man is safe. The cure for both evils, that of lynching and that of disloyalty, lies in a [illegible] law, fully and vigorously

s: New York City.

KARL MUCK ON WAY TO ALIEN CAMP

Fingerprinted and Photographed for "Rogues' Gallery," Boston Symphony's Leader Interned.

WIFE BIDS HIM A TEARFUL FAREWELL.

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING TELEGRAM.]

BOSTON, Mass., Sunday.—Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is speeding southward by train to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in custody of Arthur J. Shinners, Deputy United States Marshal, and a guard. The party left Boston Saturday and by noon it is expected that the alien enemy will be formally interned for the duration of the war.

Dr. Muck was apparently in a cheerful frame of mind, during his last day in Boston. The musician was taken to the Federal Building and officially photographed. While at the Federal Building he conferred privately with Assistant United States Attorney Judd Dewey, and was permitted to talk with C. J. Foley, secretary to Mr. Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck was later taken back to the East Cambridge jail by Deputy Marshal Shinners, after bidding officials in the office of Marshal Mitchell goodby. He expressed his delight over the manner in which he has been treated since he was arrested two weeks ago. He made as comfortable as possible at and is likely to be provided wit m- forts by friends while a Fe

Dr. and Mrs. Muck took of one another on the steps of the Cambridge jail.

Sheriff Fairbairn, of Middlesex county, broke the news to Dr. Muck that the federal officials had determined upon interning him, until peace is restored in Europe. The musician was greatly surprised and expressed himself as having been confident from the time of his arrest that the government at Washington would regard him as a neutral Swiss citizen and order his release.

A few minutes later Mrs. Muck appeared at the jail. Sheriff Fairbairn left them alone in his office for more than an hour.

Mrs. Muck was still talking to her husband when a taxicab came to take Mr. Muck to the United States Marshal's office in the Federal Building for the last time.

She followed him to the steps of the jail, both weeping, and stood waving her handkerchief and blowing kisses to her husband.

Before leaving the jail Dr. Muck's finger prints were taken and his other Bertillion record made. He offered no objection to the process. On the way to the Federal Building a stop was made at a photographer's studio and the usual police gallery photographs taken, showing full face and side views of the prisoner. He posed willingly and showed no impatience, but was evidently pleased when the order was concluded.

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

TELEGRAM

New York City.

Muck Incident Forgotten Too Soon.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

WELL, we have said our little say about the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Jay is a woman we should erect a monument to for her loyal patriotism. She helped to spread the truth about this organization and tried to arouse the public. Now what are we going to do? Well, I suppose we will let the twenty-two aliens rest in peace, amen.

Are we going to drop the matter? That organization is a hotbed of Germanism. It would reveal some doings if the places these people visit were investigated. We are asleep. Why are not these twenty-two German aliens fired back to the Vaterland? Why not let them give all the concerts they want down in Atlanta, Ga.? * * *

If the Americans could hear them * * * they would learn a great deal. I know not whether it would be the way the Hun says it or what he says would hurt more. Expressions like these are mild:—

"The Americans know nothing. They are not educated. They have no culture. The Americans are fools."

And I say we are. We are proving it. I tell you that these twenty-two aliens are saying it and also their American friends in New York. There was a mild scare among these Huns when the war broke out. They wanted to become citizens to save their pelts. * * *

Let us be up in arms against everything the Hun is in. Wake up, Americans, you are asleep, but the Hun is busy.

LOYAL AMERICAN.

New York, April 4, 1918

SWISS ASK AMERICA WHY MUCK HAS BEEN INTERNED

WASHINGTON, D. C., Saturday.—The Swiss government, through Minister Sulzer to-day inquired of the State Department the American government's reasons for interning Dr. Karl Muck, who is technically a Swiss citizen, though of German birth.

Dr. Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is classed as an enemy alien. He was arrested in Boston two weeks ago.

Dr. Muck bases his claim to Swiss citizenship on the fact that when he was eight years of age, his father, who was a native of Bavaria and a subject of that kingdom, obtained naturalization papers in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland. The Department of Justice asserts that he made no profession of Swiss citizenship, however, until recently.

DOKTOR MUCK STARTS FOR INTERNMENT CAMP

Doktor Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra up to the time of his arrest two weeks ago as an enemy alien, started to-day in the custody of federal deputy marshals for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will be interned. Before leaving the city Doktor Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to his home to pack up a few personal belongings and to say goodby to his wife.

rom BULLETIN

ddress: Philadelphia, Pa.

te APR 9 - 191

THE CASE OF DR. MUCK

Many people are unnecessarily exercised for fear that this country has done an injustice to Dr. MUCK, conductor of the Boston Sympohny Orchestra, in sending him to the South for internment until after the war. Even Switzerland has asked an explanation, which will be given diplomatically, and will doubtless satisfy that nation.

The people of this country will be perfectly willing to think that the Administration has acted wisely for the very reason that we have moved so slowly and have permitted so much wrong to be done rather than risk making a mistake. Dr. MUCK may be a technical citizen of Switzerland, but that is not at all to the point. That he has been using his high position against the interests of the United States may be taken for granted; otherwise he would not have been sent to Georgia.

We certainly cannot be accused of being heretofore rigorous or even vigorous in our pursuit of German spies or Germ- [illegible]

TELEGRAM

New York City.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Deport or Intern Germans.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

I AM wholly in accord with every word of the letter published yesterday—Sunday—in your patriotic paper, signed "Loyal American," and I hope those other twenty-two aliens will not rest in peace in this country but speedily be sent to keep company with Dr. Muck, where they can give concerts to their fellow aliens. * * *

Our government is entirely too generous for its own protection. * * *

German theatres, German and Austrian bakeries and lunch rooms, German newspapers and even the German language ought to be suppressed in public places.

Imagine what it would mean to them if Americans and French were to audaciously take these liberties in Germany or Austria at this time.

These who can't speak and read American ought to be either interned or deported.

A LOYAL AMERICAN MUSICIAN.

New York, April 8, 1918.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

Dr. Carl Muck will be interned under an order issued by Attorney General Gregory. Next!—EVENING TELEGRAM.

Otto Goritz. G. C. S.

New York, April 8, 1918.

Thinks More Law Is Needed.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

In your editorial in to-day's EVENING TELEGRAM on "Cut Out the German" * * * you ask, "What is the national government waiting for?" It is waiting for Congress to pass the law necessary to control and punish, which President Wilson asked for one year ago to-day.

GERMAN LIFELONG REPUBLICAN

New York, April 6, 1918.

EVENING SUN

ss: New York City

Muck-Racing.

This clean sweep of patriotism has gone far beyond the arts: the sports have it now. From the South comes the announcement that "Dr. Muck has been barred for life from the Maryland turf. In fact his banishment will cover every racecourse in the world." Thus the Baltimore Evening Sun, which goes on to say that:

"Dr. Muck, the thoroughbred, was named after Dr. Karl Muck, the German who recently was arrested in Boston by Federal authorities.

"Capt. Parr was an admirer of Dr. Muck when the latter was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. That was more than two years ago. But times have changed since then, and Dr. Muck has run his last race.

"When Dr. Muck again parades before Americans he will have an American name. Although the horse still is known officially in turf circles as Dr. Muck, Garth and his stable employees never call him by that."

om TRIBUNE

dress: New York City

te

An Ovation

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: The Department of Justice having found good and sufficient reasons for the internment of Muck, Mr. Higginson and the rest of his loyal American group may well be proud of their successful effort to give this impudent representative of Prussianism an ovation at the last New York concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

IRVING PUTNAM.

New York, April 7, 1918.

Transcript Apr 15-1918

Post April 15-1918

Monitor April 15-1918

Herald 100 April 15-1918

Globe Apr 15-1918

here of the work of one of its rising composers.

Rare Miss Novaes

Repeating Chopin's Concerto in F minor at the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening, Miss Novaes confirmed the impression of Friday afternoon and of her recent recital here with Mr. Thibaud—that she is one of the remarkable pianists of the younger generation, musician, perhaps, above all the rest. Only such a virtuosa, with both intuitive and practised ear for the unflecked quality and the undimmed beauty of musical sound could draw such tone as did she from the upper ranges of the piano. Frequently in the Concerto Chopin's measures seek them and not once with any lessening of the roundness, the resiliency, the transparency of Miss Novaes's tone. The higher the music ran toward the treble, the more surely she sang it with scarcely a hint of the piano as an instrument of wires and hammers sounding the notes in which it is most liable to self-betrayal. Scarcely a pianist of the younger the middle, the elder generation may match her in this quality of upper tones. Again, only an intuitive, practised, studious and poised musician could give such light and various propulsive power to the first and last movements of the Concerto as did she. Steadily the music advanced, quickened, warmed under her adroit modulations of pace, inflections of rhythm, distribution of accent, but never came suggestion of manipulation or distortion of the appointed course of the pattern. What Chopin may have heard in the ear of his imagination, Miss Novaes divined and transmitted to the ears of his and her hearers. Dr. Muck's long and artfully ordered gradients in the progress of a symphonic movement are not the least memory of him; Miss Novaes's in her Concerto compared with them, while in the one as in the other, there was no sign to the audience of process, willed and prepared.

This keen sense of music as beautiful ordered expressive sound pervades all that Miss Novaes does, is highest present praise of her, is surest warrant of her future. She is in her twenty-third year only; for no more than four has she played in public; yet already she holds herself, her music, her instrument, her audience—whether it is coolly inquiring as on Friday afternoon or highly expectant as on Saturday evening—in the hollow of her hand. From this sense of music as music, from this poise remarkable, indeed, in so young a woman and of Latin blood to boot, spring her perception and sensibility, alike in ear and touch, with the piano. She does not regard it as a pseudo-orchestra to be pitted against the actual orchestra behind; but she does search out its manifold beauty and power of tone, its most sensitive range of accents, its finest diversities of color. Not Mr. Kreisler is more responsive to the violin than she to the piano. In her playing appears the music as in a mirror, but never in suggestion of rigid, studied, meticulous reflection. From the first time, no less on Saturday than on Friday, she might have been playing, eager, responsive, yet always self-controlled, this Concerto of Chopin. Through the Maestoso of the beginning, she moved in rounded phrase and marshalled period with a mingling of sumptuous tone and spacious progress. The hearer felt the nobility of Chopin stirred. From the Larghetto she called the radiance of his melody, the iridenscence, of his ornament, the glow of his feeling and the listener heard the Chopin of romantic vision and emotion. From Miss Novaes's hands the Finale danced upon the air as in idealized pace, rhythms, colors. Hardly since Pachmann's time has this Concerto been played here—or for that matter any other of Chopin's music—with such loveliness of voice and fineness of insight.

For the Pension Fund

With a single exception, all things went excellently well—some indeed beyond expectation—at the concert of the Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon for the increase of its Pension Fund. Since the programme was a miscellany, the conductor of merit but without prestige and only one of "the assisting artists"—Mr. Gabrilowitsch—well and widely known, there was little anticipation of a numerous audience. Yet in spite of these handicaps and other circumstances of the hour that need not be particularized, the listeners filled nearly two-thirds of Symphony Hall, were excellently representative of the various publics of the orchestra, and lavished applause upon it and all concerned, especially when Mr. Schmidt, at the end of Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre" called the band to its feet and a little reluctantly it answered. Then, for nearly two minutes, the house rang with clapping by almost every pair of hands from those nearest the edge of the tsage to those that cluster under Apollo of the second balcony. These plaudits spoke for the audience and hardly less for the whole public, absent or present, numerous and devoted that cherishes the Boston Symphony Orchestra above all else that opera house or concert-hall in this town or anywhere else may yield. It is a public that should be Mr. Higginson's very present prop and reward in a time of new departures and new decisions. For it, whoever the conductor, the orchestra endures.

The more the pity, then, that a single mischance should have marred the concert and that it should have befallen Miss Braslau, young singer, still in measure with her way to make in Boston, generously giving her services, eagerly plying her powers. At a concert for the Pension Fund, still within memory, Mr. Fiedler undertook to accompany Mme. Sembrich in an air from Verdi's old opera of "Ernani." Now Mr. Fiedler was unpractised as an operatic conductor; he knew next to nothing of the matter and the manner of these Italian operas of the forties and the fifties; he was perversely determined to take his own way with the music regardless of the singer. Since that half-merry, half-mournful day, no such accompaniment to an operatic air has been heard in Symphony Hall until Mr. Schmidt yesterday, and incidentally Miss Braslau, essayed the music of Delilah in which in the second act of Saint-Saëns's music-drama, she ensnares Samson. Clearly, the conductor regarded it as a symphonic poem in which the composer had added a voice to his other instruments. Try as she might, the singer could seldom pierce, especially at the climax of her strophes, the thickness of the orchestral envelope. Vigor Miss Braslau did not lack, but Mr. Schmidt was more vigorous still. Where she phrased in one fashion, he phrased in another; as seldom could they agree in accent. Between, Saint-Saëns's music lost not a little of quality as a superbly sensuous and propulsive melody, and Miss Braslau's tones—and possibly her temper—turned hard and dry. Her opportunity came in the songs of Musorgsky, Rakhmaninov and out of the Hebrew liturgy in which she ended. Then she stood forth as the singer she is—an alto in young prime, resonant, warm and colorful of voice, keenly intelligent, quick with feeling answering and transmitted, mistress of the sensuous beauty of song as in the expanding and expressively modulated melody of Rakhmaninov, capable no less of the breadth of design, the sustained power, the exaltation of mood that the "Eili! Eili!" of Hebrew lament and supplicating exacts. There sang the true Miss Braslau.

In contrast, Mr. Gabrilowitsch, as usual when he plays with the Symphony Orchestra, outshone himself. Not often here has he played with such opulence of tone, flourish of ornament, energy of rhythm, ardor of progress and contrast of voice and mood as he poured upon Weber's Concert-Piece. So played an intrinsically flamboyant music became tapestried, magnificent. For complement as though he would set in array the full range of his powers, he played Mozart's Concerto in D minor, with a limpidity of tone, a finesse of phrase and articulation, a grace of ornament and transition, a roundness and evenness, a serene play of tonal fancy anl poetizing sentiment that were as truly characteristic of a delicate and artful music as had been his splendors of march and bravura with Weber. Generously come to the concert, fortune, his audience and the orchestra blessed him. As for the band, familiar are its sonorities, its suppleness, its energies of rhythm and color in Berlioz's overture of the "Roman Carnival"; its lightness of touch and tone and felicities of inflection in Chaikovsky's dances of "The Nutcracker"; while for the first time in years, it essayed and easily accomplished the mildly spectral, the neatly phantasmal "Danse Macabre" of Saint-Saëns. It was good to feel Mr. Schmidt's energy with the orchestra, but he and it may advisedly heed an audible tendency to coarsen tone.

H. T. P.

SECOND PENSION CONCERT

Gabrilowitsch and Braslau Soloists With Symphony

BY OLIN DOWNES

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, and Sofie Brasiau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, were the soloists at the Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernst Schmidt conducting, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Gabrilowitsch played the D minor concerto of Mozart and Weber's "Concert-Piece" for orchestra. Miss Braslau sang the familiar aria, "Mon couer," from Saint-Saens' "Samson and Dalilah," and these songs: "Do Not Sing, Oh, Maiden," Rachmaninoff; "The Classicist," Moussorgsky; "Eili, Eili," Schalitt. The orchestral compositions were Berlioz' overture, "Carnaval Romain"; Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre," and Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker" suite.

BERLIOZ'S BRILLIANCY

The brilliancy and spirit of Berlioz's music made an admirable opening of the concert, and this music, under Mr. Schmidt's baton, was played with gusto. Saint-Saens' music was called by an unkind young Frenchman "a graveyard farce." It is not to be taken seriously, so far as its meaning is concerned. The music is petty and frivolous by the side of such a fresco, for instance, as Liszt's "Todtentanz" for piano and orchestra.

But that is beside the question. Saint-Saens had no intention of being serious in this music. He did not set out to prove that the spirits of those who die may be seen on dark and windy nights leaping about in their shrouds over graves. He merely flirts ingeniously with this thought, and with the form—novel when the "Danse Macabre" was composed—of the symphonic poem established by Berlioz and Liszt. His easy mastery of the new form almost seems disdainful—as if the composer said, "Look here. I don't think two cents of your much-vaunted 'symphonic poem.' But if you think I can't do that sort of thing myself—I'll show you!" This ingenious but already old-fashioned music, the wit and humor of Tschaikowsky's "Nut-Cracker Suite," and before all the maddening rhythm and the blazing color of Berlioz's music made a more than interesting orchestral background for the efforts of the soloists.

Gabrilowitsch's Artistry

Mr. Gabrilowitsch has played both the Mozart concerto and the Weber concert-piece before this at subscription Symphony concerts. In the Mozart concerto he is well nigh incomparable. This was certainly true of the slow movement and the finale. The first movement was surprisingly virile and dramatic. Perhaps it was tonally on a little bigger scale than the music Mozart wrote for the harpsichord would deserve.

Perhaps there was a thought in the mind of Mr. Gabrilowitsch that this was Symphony Hall, with an audience that must be reached and convinced of the beauty and greatness of Mozart. Because there were passages in the first movement when the music might perhaps have been allowed to speak for itself instead of being conveyed with evidence of well directed physical effort to the listener. The romantic and showy music of Weber was played with magnificent dash and fire. No wonder the audience was swept away with the power and beauty of the playing.

There was a large audience. There were many recalls for the soloists.

Pension Fund Concert

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

Concert in aid of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, as soloists; Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, April 14, 1918. The program: Overture, "Roman Carnival," op. 9, Berlioz; concerto for piano in D minor (K. 466), Mozart; aria from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saëns; symphonic poem No. 3, "Danse macabre," op. 40, Saint-Saëns; songs with piano (Charles A. Baker, accompanist), Rachmaninoff's "Do Not Sing, O Maiden"; Moussorgsky's "The Classicist," and Schalitt's "Eili, Eili"; concert piece for piano and orchestra, op. 79, Weber; "Nutcracker" suite, Tschaikowsky.

The program of the pension fund concert was all well performed, but perhaps the Weber concert piece, the second solo number of Mr. Gabrilowitsch, would be regarded by most listeners as giving the occasion its greatest distinction. The technical difficulties of this work, and they are by no means few or slight, were so completely mastered that they disappeared; and the artist played the various movements with dignity, vigor and brilliance. He was also heard to great advantage in the Mozart concerto.

Miss Braslau is the possessor of a rich and full contralto voice, which she uses with ease and great ability. Her singing of the aria from "Samson and Delilah" showed that she was fully equipped for dramatic interpretations. The three songs with piano accompaniment were rendered with simplicity, breadth of understanding and invigorating grace. The second of the two is particularly interesting because, as she explained in a few words herself, Moussorgsky had been subjected to no little censure by the critics, who charged him with not being able to write songs so melodious as Beethoven's or Mozart's, and this song was his answer and his challenge to their doubts.

As for the orchestral part of the performance, the overture of Berlioz was played with careful regard to opportunities for tone coloring; the "Danse macabre" of Saint-Saëns, with attention to every descriptive point; and the Tschaikowsky "Nutcracker" suite, with heed for the composer's many touches of romance and humor.

CONCERT FOR PENSION FUND

Performance of Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Great Pleasure

MISS BRASLAU'S SINGING APPLAUDED

At Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon the second concert of the season was given in aid of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The assisting artists were Miss Sophie Braslau, contralto, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist. Charles Albert Baker was accompanist. Mr. Schmidt conducted the orchestra. The program was:

Overture, "Roman Carnival," Berlioz; concerto for piano and orchestra in D minor, Mozart, Mr. Gabrilowitsch; aria, "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix," from "Samson et Dalila," Saint-Saens, Miss Braslau; symphonic poem No. 3, "Danse Macabre," Saint-Saens; songs with piano, "Do Not Sing, Oh Maiden" (Rachmaninoff), "The Classicist" (Moussorgsky), "Eili, Eili" (Schalitt), Miss Braslau; concert piece for pianoforte in F minor, Op. 79, Weber, Mr. Gabrilowitsch; suite for full orchestra taken from the ballet, "Nutcracker," Tschaikowsky.

The varied and popular appeal of all these selections with the orchestra playing in its best form and with the artistry of singer and pianist beyond reproach called from the moderate-sized audience quick and lively response throughout. The enthusiasm more than made up in its fervor for the lack of the assemblage in numbers.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch, by his exquisite delicacy and refinement in the Mozart concerto and by the alternating emotional tracery and fire in the Weber piece, won warm approval.

The beauty and richness of Miss Braslau's voice, coupled with the sincerity and directness of method, gave unusual force to the "Samson and Delilah" aria. The tenderness and depth of her emotional expression in the Rachmaninoff and Schalitt selections and the classic limpidity of her singing of Moussorgsky's song stirred her hearers to lively desire for more, as well as regret that the Symphony ban on extra numbers ruled also at the Pension Fund concerts.

She prefaced "The Classicist" with a brief explanation that Moussorgsky composed it as an answer to the taunt of his critics that he could not produce a melodious composition. Her singing distinctly aided the audience to realize how complete his reply was.

SYMPHONY PENSION FUND CONCERT

It may have been a demonstration of the regard in which the orchestra is held; perhaps it was the lure of an especially attractive program; maybe it was because Boston long ago contracted the habit of attending in large numbers this particular annual affair—but whatever it was, the Boston Symphony Orchestra had the pleasure yesterday afternoon of playing to a houseful in Symphony Hall, and an exceedingly appreciative and cordial houseful, too. Assisting the orchestra were Sophie Braslau and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, contralto and pianist.

As is the custom at these concerts the selections were what are called popular; perhaps semipopular would be more nearly accurate. Mostly modern, also, were they, Saint-Saens and Tschaikowsky prevailing, and Berlioz, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Schalitt, Weber and Mozart completing the list of composers.

Miss Braslau's contributions to the afternoon's pleasure were "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" from "Samson and Dalila," Rachmaninoff's "Do Not Sing, O Maiden," Moussorgsky's "The Classicist," and Schalitt's "Eili, Eili," sung in Hebrew. This charming, girlish daughter of a Russian physician—herself born in New York—never sang more acceptably for a Boston audience, her full, rich voice being at its best.

Mr Gabrilowitsch played a Mozart concerto and a concert piece for pianoforte by Weber, in each instance accompanied by the orchestra. The orchestra played the Carnival Romaine, by Berlioz; Saint-Saens' rather grisly "Danse Macabre," and Tschaikowsky's exquisite Casse Noisette, taken from Hoffman's little girl's Christmas night dream, in which dolls and toys disport themselves under the leadership of the lively Prince Nutcracker.

TIMES
New York City
10

ENEMY ARTISTS IN GERMANY

They Get No Such Consideration as Was Accorded Dr. Muck.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It may be appropriate at this time, in connection with the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, to recall the treatment accorded to artists of enemy citizenship by Germany during the war.

At the outbreak of the war, a great many foreign artists were resident or traveling in Germany. With few exceptions they were seized and placed in internment camps. Later they were concentrated in Ruhleben. These men were not seized for cause, but merely because they were citizens of countries against which Germany had declared war. Dr. Muck was arrested for cause early one year after declaration of war against Germany.

The writer surveyed the Ruhleben camp in 1916, and was never able to understand why the general conditions of this wretched camp did not arouse protest on the part of German artists against such treatment of fellow-artists. The Ruhleben internment camp is located in a race track to the west of Berlin. Here were thrown together painters, sculptors, musicians, singers, actors, university professors and a great many business men, to whom were gradually added the crews of merchant ships and trawlers captured at sea. Here were also gamblers, jockeys, and prize fighters; and criminals from England and France, who had found a haven in Germany before the war. These men were of all ages, from boys of 16 to men of over 65. The quarters were crowded, dirty, inadequately heated; the roofs leaked and were never repaired; all of the equipment was of the crudest and most primitive type; the men were literally herded in. Ambassador Gerard upon repeated occasions in diplomatic documents, and later in public, protested against the conditions, which were carefully surveyed and described in a report by the Boston lawyer, Ellis Loring Dresel, now attached to the American Legation in Berne. The food conditions were entirely inadequate, both from the standpoint of quality and quantity, although this made less difference with the men since most of the interned men were supplied with food from the outside. In the camp were hundreds of so-called pro-German Englishmen, whose fathers were British subjects who living in Germany had married German women, and the children born in Germany were technically British subjects, though most of them had never been outside of Germany and could not speak a word of English. These men were given relief from the conditions of their own camp through the aid of a fund raised by Prince Max of Baden. The camp was also liberally sprinkled with German spies.

The British organized the camp in the most energetic fashion, and made life as bearable as possible. George Ferguson, the well known vocal teacher, gave lessons to aspiring voices that he had discovered in the camp, and was one of the kitchen managers.

Most of these men were of no military value whatsoever. Nothing was gained to Germany by keeping them in Germany; no military gain could have come to the enemy by permitting their release. Practically speaking, every artist of enemy citizenship in Germany was interned, and interned under conditions that bespoke no consideration of his antecedents or qualities. With this must be contrasted the situation in the United States. Except when arrested for cause, German artists have been permitted freely to continue their normal lives in our midst. To what extent they have abused this very exceptional privilege, the writer is unable to state. To what extent Karl Muck has violated the trust reposed in his honor is for determination by competent authorities. When interned, alien enemies are assigned adequate, comfortable, and well-equipped quarters in agreeable and sanitary surroundings, and are provided with proper subsistence. The distinction in treatment of artists, simply on the basis of enemy citizenship, has certainly been striking enough to convince one, if that were still necessary, that the point of view of the military authorities in Germany and in the United States is as far apart as our respective conceptions of the rôle of war in its relation to civilization.

A. E. TAYLOR.

Washington, April 8, 1918.

TELEGRAM
New York City.
APR 13 19

MUSICAL SOCIETY MAY DISBAND ON ALIENS' ACCOUNT

Philharmonic to Pass on Question of Enemy Membership at Meeting on April 18.

OLDEST ORGANIZATION OF KIND IN AMERICA.

The Philharmonic Society may quietly drop out of existence for the period of the war, in order to solve the question of enemy alien membership. This action, it has become known, will be decided upon at a meeting to beheld April 18. The society is the oldest of its kind in America.

Although officers of the organization Friday refused to admit that this was the purpose of the meeting, it was learned that at least one of the music lovers asked to attend the meeting was told that such was the case. Even this request failed to arouse the favorable action of the orchestra's patron, who had withdrawn from attendance at its concerts because of the continued presence of enemy aliens in its ranks.

"No, I will not attend any of the orchestra's meetings until it has purged itself of the presence of enemy aliens in its membership," was the reply.

Felix F. Leifels, secretary of the society, said that the meeting was called to act upon arrangements for the organization's future. He said that the season depended upon the arrangement of its finances in advance and that this subject would be taken up. When asked whether the question of suspending until the conclusion of the war would not be voted upon he was non-committal.

"I can't say that it will," he said.

According to one supporter of the society, which is third in the world in point of age and considered the most successful of its kind in America, it is probable that a vote to suspend will be favored instead of choosing the simpler course of eliminating the enemy aliens.

Demand for decided action against the aliens is said to have become more insistent since the final barring of Doktor Muck, head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from half a dozen cities and the prosecution of the Prussian leader by federal authorities.

The society is seventy-six years old and has grown steadily from the first year of its organization, although its career has not been without numerous stormy incidents. It has had many famous directors at its head and has attracted, at least on one occasion, an audience of more than twelve thousand persons to its concerts.

From TIMES
Address: New York City
Date

LIKELY TO SUCCEED MUCK.

Understood That Ossip Gabrilowitsch Is to Lead Boston Symphony.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., April 13.—Although it has been well understood in Boston musical circles that Ossip Gabrilowitsch is to be the successor to Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, those in control at the Back Bay concert headquarters still refuse to make definite announcement.

Charles E. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said tonight that Mr. Schmidt, who has been conducting the concerts since Dr. Muck's arrest, would continue to do so for the rest of the season, now drawing to a close. He added that Mr. Gabrilowitsch will play in two concerts in Boston next week, but that his future plans could not be discussed at this time.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, son-in-law of the late Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) and distinguished as both a pianist and conductor, in which latter capacity he will reappear in New York next week, has for some time been mentioned as a likely successor to Dr. Muck in Boston. Another candidate for the place, according to report, was Leopold Stokowski, leader of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch is a Russian, born Jan. 26, 1878, in Petrograd, where he was a pupil of Anton Rubinstein, taking the Rubinstein prize at the Imperial Conservatory when he was 16 years old. He later studied at Vienna with Leschetizky. In 1900 he made his first American tour as pianist, and since his marriage to Clara Clemens he has spent most of his time in this country.

During the last season he was among the guest conductors of symphony organizations at Cincinnati and Detroit. In 1912 he first conducted an orchestra with the Koncertverein of Munich, Germany, and for some years he made his Summer home in the Austrian Tyrol.

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City

PHILHARMONIC MAY SUSPEND TO GET RID OF ALIENS IN RANKS

Meeting To Be Held April 18 to Settle Future During War.

Whether the Philharmonic Society, the oldest orchestra in America, will solve the problem of enemy aliens within its ranks by suspending for the period of the war will be discussed at a meeting of the society to be held April 18.

Although officers of the organization yesterday refused to admit that this was the purpose of the meeting, it was learned that at least one of the music lovers asked to attend the meeting was told that such was the case. Even this request failed to arouse the favorable action of the orchestra's patron, who had withdrawn from attendance at its concerts because of the continued presence of enemy aliens in its ranks.

"No, I will not attend any of the orchestra's meetings until it has purged itself of the presence of enemy aliens in its membership," was the reply.

Felix F. Leifels, secretary of the society, said that the meeting was called to act upon arrangements for the organization's future. He said that the season depended upon the arrangement of its finances in advance and that this subject would be taken up. When asked whether the question of suspending until the conclusion of the war would not be voted upon he was non-committal.

"I can't say that it will," he said.

According to one supporter of the society, which is third in the world in point of age and considered the most successful of its kind in America, it is probable that a vote to suspend will be favored instead of choosing the simpler course of eliminating the enemy aliens.

Demand for decided action against the aliens is said to have become more insistent since the final barring of Doktor Muck, head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from half a dozen cities and the prosecution of the Prussian leader by federal authorities.

The society is seventy-six years old and has grown steadily from the first year of its organization, although its career has not been without numerous stormy incidents. It has had many famous directors at its head and has attracted, at least on one occasion, an audience of more than twelve thousand persons to its concerts.

WILL LET AMERICANS

BLANK PAGE

Advertiser Apr 20, 1918

Advertiser Apr 20-1918

Transcript — April 20 - 1918

Herald Apr 20-1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM IS VERY PLEASING

Modern List, with Carpenter's the Most Advanced Work of the Afternoon

WORK IS EXCELLENT; NOT WILD OR VAGUE

Themes Are Good and Clear with Continuity and Logic Prevalent

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Carpenter. Symphony in C major.
Svendsen. "Zorahayda." Legende.
D'Indy. Chanson.
Strube. Fantastic Dance. Two pieces for Viola. Soloist, Emil Ferir.
Goldmark. "Sappho" overture.

A modern program, but not of ultra-radical character, the opening symphony, in C major, by the Chicago composer, being the most advanced work of the list. Browning, in his "Abt Vogler," comes to this key at the end of things—

"My resting-place is found,
The C major of this Life."

But Carpenter, like Beethoven, begins his symphonic career with it. The work has a motto—"Sermons in Stones"—which is part of the beautiful passage, in "As You Like It," beginning, "Sweet are the uses of adversity," and ending—

"Finds tongues in Trees, Books in the running Brooks, Sermons in Stones, and good in everything."

Which a delightfully prosaic Scotch clergyman once thought might be a misprint for "Sermons in Books, Stones in the running Brooks."

The only evident application of the Shakespearian text is in the fact that the work is the opposite of despairing, and ends with a triumphant climax.

The work is not wild or vague, althougt it is very intricate in some of its development. The opening phrase of the work is used in other movements with interesting changes. It is at first contrasted with a striking oboe melody, which was charmingly played, and then comes much evolution of the two themes. A strong contrast is made by a four-noted figure, balefully blared out on the muted horns and given with attractive reiteration thereafter. It is made as prominent as Wagner makes his four-noted bell-theme in "Parsifal." There is much earnest and masterly contrapuntal combination of themes, a fine development, and a clear although incomplete return, showing that Mr. Carpenter does not deem it necessary to abolish all symmetry even in a modern symphony.

IS BIZARRE.

The Scherzo here comes second (its normal place is third) and has also its exhibitions of contrapuntal skill, even to some fugal work, and the chief phrase of the first movement enters again here as also in the final movement. It is bizarre, but not playful.

In the third movement there is a striking figure (in a double sense) which is given entirely to the kettle-drums, which becomes a continued ground bass. It is derived from the important four-noted figure of the muted horns above mentioned, and is much treated both here and in the Finale. The chief theme is given to that unusual instrument, the bass clarinette. The Finale gives many reminiscences of the preceding movements, leading to a great climax, a most powerful ending.

The themes are good and clear, their interweaving masterly, the scoring modern in tone color, and there is continuity and logic in almost every part of this work. We doubt if its ingenuity can be grasped at a single hearing even by an expert auditor, and we also doubt if every point was made as clear in the performance as it might have been. One thing is certain, the composer is not of the iconoclasts, even if he is modern in his expression. We believe the symphony to be a work worth repeating and studying.

It has but three indicated movements, although the changes of tempo and style suggest five, in the free architecture of a "poeme symphonique." Its continuous development and complexity makes it rather too intellectual, perhaps fatiguing to some, but it is a great and important work nevertheless. The composer was twice called to the stage at its end.

HAS HAD SUCCESS.

Years ago, in Copenhagen, Svendsen played "Zorahayde" to the present writer, and told him how he had studied Arabic and Spanish music in order to give something of the true atmosphere to the tone-poem. He has succeeded very well, considering that he had never been in Spain, and the glowing fervor of this southern tone-picture (taken from Washington Irving) made a good foil to the complexity of the symphony. Its Oriental melancholy and its final climax were especially effective.

The chief popular success of the afternoon was the viola-playing of Emile Ferir. The viola is the Cinderella of the orchestra. It seems to be crushed between the brilliancy of the violin and the expressiveness of the violincello. Yet it has its own peculiar melancholy and brooding tone-color, if it is not pushed into the upper register, when it becomes dry and dull-toned.

The "Sappho" overture is not one of Goldmark's great compositions, but it is worth hearing now and then. It gives great opportunities for the harp, but Sappho's Kithara was to the modern harp about as a wheelbarrow to an automobile, and she would have been astonished at the brilliancy of Mr. Holy's work. But Symphony Hall is not the chosen spot to display a harp obligato, even when the harps are doubled. We heard Mr. Holy to better advantage in Jordan Hall, a few days before. The solo violin work in this overture ought also to be commended. Mr. Witek and Mr. Holy shared the honors in this work.

Traveller Apr 20-1918

NEW SYMPHONY WELL RECEIVED

Carpenter's Composition Is Heard for First Time

The first hearing of John Alden Carpenter's Symphony No. 1 was the feature of the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernst Schmidt conducting, yesterday afternoon. The program was:

Carpenter, Symphony No. 1 (first time here); Svendsen, "Zorahayda"; two pieces for viola and orchestra; d'Indy, Lied; Strube, Fantastic Dance; Goldmark, overture, "Sappho."

One hearing of a work, particularly if that work be of the dimensions of Mr. Carpenter's symphony, is hardly sufficient basis for passing judgment on its merits. This is all the more true when that hearing leaves the impression of considerable in the work not brought out. Nobody questions the composer's sincerity, ability or love for his work. In this particular number, however, he seems to be playing upon the various choirs of the orchestra rather than giving expression to an inspiration.

The work was received by enthusiasm by the audience and the composer called to the platform to return his thanks for the approval.

If the Carpenter number was not altogether satisfying, no charge could be laid at the door of Mr. Ferir, the eminent viola player. He made the d'Indy and Strube numbers the most interesting of the afternoon.

The program of next week is as follows: Davison, Tragic overture (first time); Italian Serenade; Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

NEW AND NOTABLE MUSIC FROM MR. CARPENTER

Circumstances Once More Conquered—A Symphony Seeming to Translate the American Temperament Into Tones — Freedom of Form and Process—Imagination, Invention, Impulse—Harmonic and Instrumental Richness—The Vitalizing Power and Clear Individuality That Set the Composer Above Most of His Fellows

AGAIN, yesterday afternoon, the Symphony Orchestra mastered circumstances with the elasticity and endurance that are best augury of its future. It is near the end of a season troubled by controversies, vicissitudes, uncertainties, such as it had never previously known. Much remains to be resolved and determined before it begins another year. Yet there it was, on Friday, playing for the first time in public a new and intricate symphony by the most individual and expert of the younger generation of American composers. For three weeks the music had been in rehearsal, to be made ready, according to the high tradition of the band, to the hilt. Mr. Schmidt, the conductor, had spared neither study nor industry; Mr. Carpenter, the composer, had ventured suggestions helpful in the disclosing of his intent. Performance happened to fall on a holiday in the full tide of a parade of troops. Inevitably the audience was smaller than usual on a Friday afternoon; came hindered and late to its seats. Yet the symphony was played and heard as though for the time there was naught else in the world, near or distant, than what the four walls of Symphony Hall contained. Possibly the performance might have unfolded more luminously the progress of a music that, episodic as it may seem to some ears, is yet ingeniously, even subtly knit, flowing from period into period, expanding from division to division. Possibly it might have gained more verve in the lighter measures of the Scherzo; a more pulsating, ascendant power, a richer color at the very end. Yet, as a whole and especially in the first movement, the symphony stood well revealed; while the composer, twice called to the stage, testified his satisfaction by a first bow to the orchestra and a second to the audience. Clearly his music had quickened both.

As Mr. Carpenter had full right to do, he has elected to cast his symphony in the form of a symphonic poem or, perhaps more accurately, in a mould and progress that curiously resemble Liszt's in his concertos for piano. The more the reason, then, in some ears, that the music should be played without pause, as it was at Norfolk last June and in Chicago last October, than in the three movements into which the composer has now sectioned it. Like the Lisztian concertos, the symphony advances from division to division in the order and according to the contrasts and the necessities of the moods that Mr. Carpenter would release and cumulate. These divisions are unified, again Lisztian-wise, by the recurring presence of a principal, clearly profiled and easily remembered motive, sounded at the very beginning and insistent, though never obtruded by main force, to the end. They are further bound together by returns, according to the impulse and the advance of the music, of other distinctive motives. Nowhere, moreover, does the composer merely lay measures and periods side by side in arbitrary succession. Not for nothing did the learned and expert Ziehn instruct him in the intricacies of musical continuity, in the means to symyphonic progress; nor carelessly has he himself studied them. Moody and changeful as Mr. Carpenter's music may seem, as indeed he willed and designed, it, fine links bind period to period and close strands hold division to divison. After all, the couplings of freight cars are not the only bonds known to human usage. They are seldom employed, for example, in the interbinding of adroit mechanisms.

The truth is that Mr. Carpenter, as becomes a composer of intelligence, imagination, technical resource, chooses his form, conducts his procedure according to the impulses and intents underlaying his music, according to creative necessities and promptings as his work advances. The verses from "As You Like It"—"Sweet are the uses of adversity" and so forth through "Sermons in stones" may signify much or little; but from two hearings of the symphony comes impression of certain moods, of a certain poetizing design informing and emotionally animating the music. Recall the gayeties of matter, motion, color in the long middle division that may pass for a scherzo. Soon they cloud into more pensive mood; next for a time they give place to dreamy brooding; thence they spring into themselves again. Remember, again, the progress of the finale—the nervous energy with which in substance, pace, rhythmic beat, harmonic and instrumental color, it steadily expands, deepens, advances, brightens until in almost the last measures, it glows with high energy and radiant resolve, to close with a tonal hint that has haunted the symphony of reflection within. Note also that, firm-set as this ascent seems, there are also fitful moments—returns to the more careless mood of the scherzo, to the troubled and pondering mood of the adagio-like passages; yet quickly innate vitality rings and strides anew. Pass now to the long first movemenrt, a various music of many voices and moods. Again matter and progress, line and color are nervous and fitful. There is tonal tumult and stress, tonal striving and struggle, at the end glowing intensity, as it were, of will and achievement, tonal sportiveness, brooding, visioning.

Now what else may this be but the translation, the incarnation even, in tones and in symphonic crucible, of our blessed American temperament in characteristic—and therefore diversified—play? Mr. Carpenter is no composer of routine disposed to take the ready, the fashionable way. No more is he either simple or cloudy minded. To pick at negro melodies, Indian tunes, Fosterian ballads, at folk material in general, may reasonably have seemed to him to write but a half modish, half conventional and altogether easy American music. Moreover, is it so much American as expression of racial impulses of isolated folk in another day than ours? Far more tempting the venture, far finer the possible achievement, to infuse into music the American temperament as it may be distilled out of our finer mental and spiritual impulses and accomplishments in this very day. No wonder the quest stirred Mr. Carpenter; with reason the deed applauds him.

So, without a hint from the composer, other than his music imparts, may be conjectured the informing intent, the implicated and revealed moods, the characterizing matter, the heightening color of his symphony. Yet, first of all, the hearer heeds it as a music engrossing in itself as a pattern and a progress in tones. As such the motives sound firm and clear. They have not only profile, but character. They remain in ear and mind. No sooner do they begin to deepen into melody, to pass from guise to guise, from relation to relation, than they stir answering interest, responsive feeling. Mr. Carpenter is fertile with them, yet neither abstruse, which is to be unAmerican, nor over-calculating, which is to fall into our national sin of self-consciousness. An inner impulse of the imagination, as well as faculty of musical invention, a prompting of the spirit as well as of counterpoint orders Mr. Carpenter's transformation, manipulation, development of his themes. He is abundant in resource, but they are resources of music-making become expression. A spiritual design conceived and fructified, emotion sustaining itself as mood, direct, quite as much workmanship, the relation and the return of his motives, periods, sections, divisions. At every turn he mates inseparably process and purpose.

So is Mr. Carpenter waxing in mastery of the naked substance, the linear course of music. From the days of "Adventures in a Perambulator" he has sat high in imaginative, individual, expert command of the harmonic and the instrumental color that enriches, diversifies, glamors it. No American composer except Mr. Loeffler, only a few Europeans in Paris or Moscow, match him in inventive and assimilative sense of the multifarious timbres a modern orchestra may yield or in skill in the distribution of them. With them, aptness of hand serves in him readiness and acuteness of mind. The new symphony teems with such strokes of fancy, fertility, felicity. It testifies also to as inventive, individual and resourceful an harmonic idiom. Mr. Carpenter has assimilated much; if he knows his Parisians of yesterday and today, he knows also the methods of Munich and Berlin; he has heard the strange voices of Vienna and others as strange sounding from Petrograd. Yet when he speaks harmonically it is in an assimilated idiom of his own—his own because again it testifies to the pervading and distinctive trait of his music. Imagination, sensibility, resiliency, an unmistakable impulse to express himself in reaction to life around him or some particular content of that life, prompt Mr. Carpenter to music-making. At every turn his harmonies are no mere decoration or handiwork. He has that which he would say and that almost dictates the method and the manner of the saying. Hence the harmonies that in the new symphony coalesce into backgrounds of light or shadow to the substance and line of the music, or that play over it in manifold hues, degrees, implications. Again Mr. Loeffler is the only American analogue to such individuality, range, mastery.

Above all else, however, shines out of the present symphony, as neither from the suite nor the concertino that preceded it, an ability to vitalize the music. It glows from the propulsive power that quickens the progress, ascendant or descendant, intensifies the moods, sharpens the contrasts, wings the flights, marshals measures, radiant, darkling, striving, incisive, full-throated or firm set through the manifold first movement. It impels the scherzo into gay dance, pensive sentiment, deeper melancholy. It conjures the tonal splendors, deepens the tread, expands the energy of the finale. Time and again through the symphony, it summons, sustains beauty. The analyst may say truly that Mr. Carpenter is fertile, various, puissant of rhythm whereby his music moves animatedly. Or again that he is imaginative and artful in contrasts. Or once more that he has the skill which fashions long tonal gradients and the hot impulse that equally accomplishes vivid transitions. Agreed, but neither rhythm nor graduation, nor yet transition will energize and vitalize music as does this propulsive power.

For its other name is the creative faculty in music from which springs the composer's precious dower of that within him, received from life and transmuted in his own spirit, which he must release in music, in a speech of his own, in a speech which likewise is the inevitable outcome in method and manner of the promptings within. He looks in his heart and writes, because he can do no other. As he writes the inner content, the outer garb, the process and the progress of his music, the means and the end become as one in unity of achievement and impression. For a hundred motives a composer may write music in a hundred ways. He deserves the name in the fullest sense of the word, he fulfills its high implications only when he writes from this inner prompting into this outward unity, when his music is of himself and no other. Such a composer in this symphony is Mr. Carpenter. In symphonic music as American composers write it, there is but one other, Mr. Loeffler, to compare with him—and he continued above

22D CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

John Alden Carpenter Program Well Received by Boston Audience

XYLOPHONE FEATURE DISTINCTIVE WORK

By PHILIP HALE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its 22d concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Carpenter, Symphony No. 1 (first time here); Svendsen, "Zorahayda"; two pieces for viola and orchestra: d'Indy, Lied; Strube, Fantastic Dance; Goldmark, overture, "Sappho. Mr. Schmidt conducted.

Mr. John Alden Carpenter of Chicago is not a stranger here in the concert hall. His violin sonata has been played twice within five years; some of his songs have been sung here by various singers; his orchestral Suite, "Adventures in a Perambulator," was performed twice in the season of 1915-16, and before these performances it was played here by the New York Symphony Orchestra.

The Suite is pleasantly remembered, if only for the recollection of two agile men indulging themselves in violent exercise on xylophones, to the great joy of the hearers. There were other agreeable features. There were pages of genuine beauty. The composer stood forth as an independent thinker, who had a rich orchestral speech.

The symphony, composed in 1916-17, and first performed at a music festival held in Norfolk, Ct., is a more ambitious work. Whether its musical contents are as ingenious and as valuable as those of the Suite is another question. The symphony as a whole seems to us scrappy. There is a motto "Sermons in Stones," taken from the duke's speech in "As you Like It." Mr. Borowski, the accomplished critic, remarks: "The connection between the latter part of this quotation and the symphony which is under discussion here lies in the direction of optimism. Beyond this key to the significance of his music, the composer does not care to go." "Sermons in Stones" suggests, also, sermons in music. A sermon in a stone is not so bad, for the stone is silent. The sermon is in the mind of the man that looks at it, sits on it, or throws it. A sermon in music that lasts from three-quarters of an hour to an hour is to be avoided. Good King Edward VII., a man of the world and a sport, decreed that a sermon of 12 minutes was long enough for any preacher in a royal chapel. Fortunately Mr. Carpenter does not attempt to preach in this symphony or to be didactic. He is optimistic, and this is a healthy mental condition for any composer, even when his subject is tragic: optimistic concerning his own music.

The symphony is, however, like an old hour-glass sermon in this respect: it has many heads and sub-heads, digressions, excursions and alarms. Hence we missed yesterday the feeling of continuity in the work. There was too much see-sawing of moods. Beginning finely with solemn strains, the first movement comprises sections which are practically unrelated. There is even the suggestion of a Scherzo about the middle of this movement. Nor do we find the middle section of the Scherzo itself has much to do with what goes before and what follows. In a word, the symphony is disjointed, scrappy. There are interesting pages, interesting melodically—although the thematic material is not spontaneously rich—harmonically; interesting above all in the instrumental experiments. As in the Suite, Mr. Carpenter in this symphony declares his undying devotion to pulsatile instruments.

The composer bowed his acknowledgment of applause from the platform.

Svensen's pretty and innocuous legend soothed the audience. Goldmark's overture was played last year. Why this haste in repetition? His "Prometheus" overture would have been fresher to the ear if there was absolute necessity of hearing something by Goldmark.

Mr. Ferir's beautiful tone and irreproachable art were displayed in d'Indy's Lied, which was written for the violoncello, and Strube's "Fantastic Dance," which had already been played by him. D'Indy's Lied, composed about the time of his "Sagefleurie," has not the austerity of his later compositions. Its melancholy flavor is agreeable, not bitter.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of next week is as follows: Davison, Tragic overture (first time); Wolf, Italian Serenade; Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony.

Advertiser Apr 20, 1918

Advertiser Apr 20-1918

Transcript — April 20-1918

Herald Apr 20-1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM IS VERY PLEASING

Modern List, with Carpenter's the Most Advanced Work of the Afternoon

WORK IS EXCELLENT; NOT WILD OR VAGUE

Themes Are Good and Clear with Continuity and Logic Prevalent

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.
Carpenter. Symphony in C major.
Svendsen. "Zorahayda." Legende.
D'Indy. Chanson.
Strube. Fantastic Dance. Two pieces for Viola. Soloist, Emil Ferir.
Goldmark. "Sappho" overture.

A modern program, but not of ultra-radical character, the opening symphony, in C major, by the Chicago composer, being the most advanced work of the list. Browning, in his "Abt Vogler," comes to this key at the end of things—

"My resting-place is found,
The C major of this Life."

But Carpenter, like Beethoven, begins his symphonic career with it. The work has a motto—"Sermons in Stones"—which is part of the beautiful passage, in "As You Like It," beginning, "Sweet are the uses of adversity," and ending—

"Finds tongues in Trees, Books in the running Brooks, Sermons in Stones, and good in everything."

which a delightfully prosaic Scotch clergyman once thought might be a misprint for "Sermons in Books, Stones in the running Brooks."

The only evident application of the Shakespearian text is in the fact that the work is the opposite of despairing, and ends with a triumphant climax.

The work is not wild or vague, although it is very intricate in some of its development. The opening phrase of the work is used in other movements with interesting changes. It is at first contrasted with a striking oboe melody, which was charmingly played, and then comes much evolution of the two themes. A strong contrast is made by a four-noted figure, balefully blared out on the muted horns and given with attractive reiteration thereafter. It is made as prominent as Wagner makes his four-noted bell-theme in "Parsifal." There is much earnest and masterly contrapuntal combination of themes, a fine development, and a clear although incomplete return, showing that Mr. Carpenter does not deem it necessary to abolish all symmetry even in a modern symphony.

IS BIZARRE.

The Scherzo here comes second (its normal place is third) and has also its exhibitions of contrapuntal skill, even to some fugal work, and the chief phrase of the first movement enters again here as also in the final movement. It is bizarre, but not playful.

In the third movement there is a striking figure (in a double sense) which is given entirely to the kettle-drums, which becomes a continued ground bass. It is derived from the important four-noted figure of the muted horns above mentioned, and is much treated both here and in the Finale. The chief theme is given to that unusual instrument, the bass clarinette. The Finale gives many reminiscences of the preceding movements, leading to a great climax, a most powerful ending.

The themes are good and clear, their interweaving masterly, the scoring modern in tone color, and there is continuity and logic in almost every part of this work. We doubt if its ingenuity can be grasped at a single hearing even by an expert auditor, and we also doubt if every point was made as clear in the performance as it might have been. One thing is certain, the composer is not of the iconoclasts, even if he is modern in his expression. We believe the symphony to be a work worth repeating and studying.

It has but three indicated movements, although the changes of tempo and style suggest five, in the free architecture of a "poeme symphonique." Its continuous development and complexity makes it rather too intellectual, perhaps fatiguing to some, but it is a great and important work nevertheless. The composer was twice called to the stage at its end.

HAS HAD SUCCESS.

Years ago, in Copenhagen, Svendsen played "Zorahayde" to the present writer, and told him how he had studied Arabic and Spanish music in order to give something of the true atmosphere to the tone-poem. He has succeeded very well, considering that he had never been in Spain, and the glowing fervor of this southern tone-picture (taken from Washington Irving) made a good foil to the complexity of the symphony. Its Oriental melancholy and its final climax were especially effective.

The chief popular success of the afternoon was the viola-playing of Emile Ferir. The viola is the Cinderella of the orchestra. It seems to be crushed between the brilliancy of the violin and the expressiveness of the violincello. Yet it has its own peculiar melancholy and brooding tone-color, if it is not pushed into the upper register, when it becomes dry and dull-toned.

The "Sappho" overture is not one of Goldmark's great compositions, but it is worth hearing now and then. It gives great opportunities for the harp, but Sappho's Kithara was to the modern harp about as a wheelbarrow to an automobile, and she would have been astonished at the brilliancy of Mr. Holy's work. But Symphony Hall is not the chosen spot to display a harp obligato, even when the harps are doubled. We heard Mr. Holy to better advantage in Jordan Hall, a few days before. The solo violin work in this overture ought also to be commended. Mr. Witek and Mr. Holy shared the honors in this work.

Traveller Apr 20-1918

NEW SYMPHONY WELL RECEIVED

Carpenter's Composition Is Heard for First Time

The first hearing of John Alden Carpenter's Symphony No. 1 was the feature of the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernst Schmidt conducting, yesterday afternoon. The program was:

Carpenter, Symphony No. 1 (first time here); Svendsen, "Zorahayda"; two pieces for viola and orchestra; d'Indy, Lied; Strube, Fantastic Dance; Goldmark, overture, "Sappho."

One hearing of a work, particularly if that work be of the dimensions of Mr. Carpenter's symphony, is hardly sufficient basis for passing judgment on its merits. This is all the more true when that hearing leaves the impression of considerable in the work not brought out. Nobody questions the composer's sincerity, ability or love for his work. In this particular number, however, he seems to be playing upon the various choirs of the orchestra rather than giving expression to an inspiration.

The work was received by enthusiasm by the audience and the composer called to the platform to return his thanks for the approval.

If the Carpenter number was not altogether satisfying, no charge could be laid at the door of Mr. Ferir, the eminent viola player. He made the d'Indy and Strube numbers the most interesting of the afternoon.

The program of next week is as follows: Davison, Tragic overture (first time); Italian Serenade; Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

NEW AND NOTABLE MUSIC FROM MR. CARPENTER

Circumstances Once More Conquered—A Symphony Seeming to Translate the American Temperament Into Tones — Freedom of Form and Process—Imagination, Invention, Impulse—Harmonic and Instrumental Richness—The Vitalizing Power and Clear Individuality That Set the Composer Above Most of His Fellows

AGAIN, yesterday afternoon, the Symphony Orchestra mastered circumstances with the elasticity and endurance that are best augury of its future. It is near the end of a season troubled by controversies, vicissitudes, uncertainties, such as it had never previously known. Much remains to be resolved and determined before it begins another year. Yet there it was, on Friday, playing for the first time in public a new and intricate symphony by the most individual and expert of the younger generation of American composers. For three weeks the music had been in rehearsal, to be made ready, according to the high tradition of the band, to the hilt. Mr. Schmidt, the conductor, had spared neither study nor industry; Mr. Carpenter, the composer, had ventured suggestions helpful in the disclosing of his intent. Performance happened to fall on a holiday in the full tide of a parade of troops. Inevitably the audience was smaller than usual on a Friday afternoon; came hindered and late to its seats. Yet the symphony was played and heard as though for the time there was naught else in the world, near or distant, than what the four walls of Symphony Hall contained. Possibly the performance might have unfolded more luminously the progress of a music that, episodic as it may seem to some ears, is yet ingeniously, even subtly knit, flowing from period into period, expanding from division to division. Possibly it might have gained more verve in the lighter measures of the Scherzo; a more pulsating, ascendant power, a richer color at the very end. Yet, as a whole and especially in the first movement, the symphony stood well revealed; while the composer, twice called to the stage, testified his satisfaction by a first bow to the orchestra and a second to the audience. Clearly his music had quickened both.

As Mr. Carpenter had full right to do, he has elected to cast his symphony in the form of a symphonic poem or, perhaps more accurately, in a mould and progress that curiously resemble Liszt's in his concertos for piano. The more the reason, then, in some ears, that the music should be played without pause, as it was at Norfolk last June and in Chicago last October, than in the three movements into which the composer has now sectioned it. Like the Lisztian concertos, the symphony advances from division to division in the order and according to the contrasts and the necessities of the moods that Mr. Carpenter would release and cumulate. These divisions are unified, again Lisztian-wise, by the recurring presence of a principal, clearly profiled and easily remembered motive, sounded at the very beginning and insistent, though never obtruded by main force, to the end. They are further bound together by returns, according to the impulse and the advance of the music, of other distinctive motives. Nowhere, moreover, does the composer merely lay measures and periods side by side in arbitrary succession. Not for nothing did the learned and expert Ziehn instruct him in the intricacies of musical continuity, in the means to symphonic progress; nor carelessly has he himself studied them. Moody and changeful as Mr. Carpenter's music may seem, as indeed he willed and designed, it, fine links and period to period and close strands hold division to divison. After all, the couplings of freight cars are not the only bonds known to human usage. They are seldom employed, for example, in the interbinding of adroit mechanisms.

The truth is that Mr. Carpenter, as becomes a composer of intelligence, imagination, technical resource, chooses his form, conducts his procedure according to the impulses and intents underlaying his music, according to creative necessities and promptings as his work advances. The verses from "As You Like It"—"Sweet are the uses of adversity" and so forth through "Sermons in stones" may signify much or little; but from two hearings of the symphony comes impression of certain moods, of a certain poetizing design informing and emotionally animating the music. Recall the gayeties of matter, motion, color in the long middle division that may pass for a scherzo. Soon they cloud into more pensive mood; next for a time they give place to dreamy brooding; thence they spring into themselves again. Remember, again, the progress of the finale—the nervous energy with which in substance, pace, rhythmic beat, harmonic and instrumental color, it steadily expands, deepens, advances, brightens until in almost the last measures, it glows with high energy and radiant resolve, to close with a tonal hint that has haunted the symphony of reflection within. Note also that, firm-set as this ascent seems, there are also fitful moments—returns to the more careless mood of the scherzo, to the troubled and pondering mood of the adagio-like passages; yet quickly innate vitality rings and strides anew. Pass now to the long first movemenrt, a various music of many voices and moods. Again matter and progress, line and color are nervous and fitful. There is tonal tumult and stress, tonal striving and struggle, at the end glowing intensity, as it were, of will and achievement, tonal sportiveness, brooding, visioning.

Now what else may this be but the translation, the incarnation even, in tones and in symphonic crucible, of our blessed American temperament in characteristic—and therefore diversified—play? Mr. Carpenter is no composer of routine disposed to take the ready, the fashionable way. No more is he either simple or cloudy minded. To pick at negro melodies, Indian tunes, Fosterian ballads, at folk material in general, may reasonably have seemed to him to write but a half modish, half conventional and altogether easy American music. Moreover, is it so much American as expression of racial impulses of isolated folk in another day than ours? Far more tempting the venture, far finer the possible achievement, to infuse into music the American temperament as it may be distilled out of our finer mental and spiritual impulses and accomplishments in this very day. No wonder the quest stirred Mr. Carpenter; with reason the deed applauds him.

So, without a hint from the composer, other than his music imparts, may be conjectured the informing intent, the implicated and revealed moods, the characterizing matter, the heightening color of his symphony. Yet, first of all, the hearer heeds it as a music engrossing in itself as a pattern and a progress in tones. As such the motives sound firm and clear. They have not only profile, but character. They remain in ear and mind. No sooner do they begin to deepen into melody, to pass from guise to guise, from relation to relation, than they stir answering interest, responsive feeling. Mr. Carpenter is fertile with them, yet neither abstruse, which is to be unAmerican, nor over-calculating, which is to fall into our national sin of self-consciousness. An inner impulse of the imagination, as well as faculty of musical invention, a prompting of the spirit as well as of counterpoint orders Mr. Carpenter's transformation, manipulation, development of his themes. He is abundant in resource, but they are resources of music-making become expression. A spiritual design conceived and fructified, emotion sustaining itself as mood, direct, quite as much workmanship, the relation and the return of his motives, periods, sections, divisions. At every turn he mates inseparably process and purpose.

So is Mr. Carpenter waxing in mastery of the naked substance, the linear course of music. From the days of "Adventures in a Perambulator" he has sat high in imaginative, individual, expert command of the harmonic and the instrumental color that enriches, diversifies, glamors it. No American composer except Mr. Loeffler, only a few Europeans in Paris or Moscow, match him in inventive and assimilative sense of the multifarious timbres a modern orchestra may yield or in skill in the distribution of them. With them, aptness of hand serves in him readiness and acuteness of mind. The new symphony teems with such strokes of fancy, fertility, felicity. It testifies also to as inventive, individual and resourceful an harmonic idiom. Mr. Carpenter has assimilated much; if he knows his Parisians of yesterday and today, he knows also the methods of Munich and Berlin; he has heard the strange voices of Vienna and others as strange sounding from Petrograd. Yet when he speaks harmonically it is in an assimilated idiom of his own—his own because again it testifies to the pervading and distinctive trait of his music. Imagination, sensibility, resiliency, an unmistakable impulse to express himself in reaction to life around him or some particular content of that life, prompt Mr. Carpenter to music-making. At every turn his harmonies are no mere decoration or handiwork. He has that which he would say and that almost dictates the method and the manner of the saying. Hence the harmonies that in the new symphony coalesce into backgrounds of light or shadow to the substance and line of the music, or that play over it in manifold hues, degrees, implications. Again Mr. Loeffler is the only American analogue to such individuality, range, mastery.

Above all else, however, shines out of the present symphony, as neither from the suite nor the concertino that preceded it, an ability to vitalize the music. It glows from the propulsive power that quickens the progress, ascendant or descendant, intensifies the moods, sharpens the contrasts, wings the flights, marshals measures, radiant, darkling, striving, incisive, full-throated or firm set through the manifold first movement. It impels the scherzo into gay dance, pensive sentiment, deeper melancholy. It conjures the tonal splendors, deepens the tread, expands the energy of the finale. Time and again through the symphony, it summons, sustains beauty. The analyst may say truly that Mr. Carpenter is fertile, various, puissant of rhythm whereby his music moves animatedly. Or again that he is imaginative and artful in contrasts. Or once more that he has the skill which fashions long tonal gradients and the hot impulse that equally accomplishes vivid transitions. Agreed, but neither rhythm nor graduation, nor yet transition will energize and vitalize music as does this propulsive power.

For its other name is the creative faculty, in music from which springs the composer's precious dower of that within him; received from life and transmuted in his own spirit, which he must release in music, in a speech of his own, in a speech which likewise is the inevitable outcome in method and manner of the promptings within. He looks in his heart and writes, because he can do no other. As he writes the inner content, the outer garb, the process and the progress of his music, the means and the end become as one in unity of achievement and impression. For a hundred motives a composer may write music in a hundred ways. He deserves the name in the fullest sense of the word, he fulfills its high implications only when he writes from this inner prompting into this outward unity, when his music is of himself and no other. Such a composer in this symphony is Mr. Carpenter. In symphonic music as American composers write it, there is but one other, Mr. Loeffler, to compare with him—and he

Continued above

22D CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

John Alden Carpenter Program Well Received by Boston Audience

XYLOPHONE FEATURE DISTINCTIVE WORK

By PHILIP HALE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its 22d concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Carpenter, Symphony No. 1 (first time here); Svendsen, "Zorahayda"; two pieces for viola and orchestra; d'Indy, Lied; Strube, Fantastic Dance; Goldmark, overture, "Sappho. Mr. Schmidt conducted.

Mr. John Alden Carpenter of Chicago is not a stranger here in the concert hall. His violin sonata has been played twice within five years; some of his songs have been sung here by various singers; his orchestral Suite, "Adventures in a Perambulator," was performed twice in the season of 1915-16, and before these performances it was played here by the New York Symphony Orchestra.

The Suite is pleasantly remembered, if only for the recollection of two agile men indulging themselves in violent exercise on xylophones, to the great joy of the hearers. There were other agreeable features. There were pages of genuine beauty. The composer stood forth as an independent thinker, who had a rich orchestral speech.

The symphony, composed in 1916-17, and first performed at a music festival held in Norfolk, Ct., is a more ambitious work. Whether its musical contents are as ingenious and as valuable as those of the Suite is another question. The symphony as a whole seems to us scrappy. There is a motto "Sermons in Stones," taken from the duke's speech in "As you Like It." Mr. Borowski, the accomplished critic, remarks: "The connection between the latter part of this quotation and the symphony which is under discussion here lies in the direction of optimism. Beyond this key to the significance of his music, the composer does not care to go." "Sermons in Stones" suggests, also, sermons in music. A sermon in a stone is not so bad, for the stone is silent. The sermon is in the mind of the man that looks at it, sits on it, or throws it. A sermon in music that lasts from three-quarters of an hour to an hour is to be avoided. Good King Edward VII., a man of the world and a sport, decreed that a sermon of 12 minutes was long enough for any preacher in a royal chapel. Fortunately, Mr. Carpenter does not attempt to preach in this symphony or to be didactic. He is optimistic, and this is a healthy mental condition for any composer, even when his subject is tragic: optimistic concerning his own music.

The symphony is, however, like an old hour-glass sermon in this respect: it has many heads and sub-heads, digressions, excursions and alarms. Hence we missed yesterday the feeling of continuity in the work. There was too much see-sawing of moods. Beginning finely with solemn strains, the first movement comprises sections which are practically unrelated. There is even the suggestion of a Scherzo about the middle of this movement. Nor do we find the middle section of the Scherzo itself has much to do with what goes before and what follows. In a word, the symphony is disjointed, scrappy. There are interesting pages, interesting melodically—although the thematic material is not spontaneously rich—harmonically; interesting above all in the instrumental experiments. As in the Suite, Mr. Carpenter in this symphony declares his undying devotion to pulsatile instruments.

The composer bowed his acknowledgment of applause from the platform.

Svensen's pretty and innocuous legend soothed the audience. Goldmark's overture was played last year. Why this haste in repetition? His "Prometheus" overture would have been fresher to the ear if there was absolute necessity of hearing something by Goldmark.

Mr. Ferir's beautiful tone and irreproachable art were displayed in d'Indy's Lied, which was written for the violoncello, and Strube's "Fantastic Dance," which had already been played by him. D'Indy's Lied, composed about the time of his "Sagefleurie," has not the austerity of his later compositions. Its melancholy flavor is agreeable, not bitter.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of next week is as follows: Davison, Tragic overture (first time); Wolf, Italian Serenade; Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony.

Post Apr 20-1918 Globe Apr 20-1918

NEW WORK PLAYED BY SYMPHONY

Carpenter's First Well Received—Ferir's Artistry

BY OLIN DOWNES

John Alden Carpenter's first symphony was performed at the Boston Symphony concert of yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, Ernst Schmidt conducting. The composer was present and appeared on the stage after the performance of his work to acknowledge the hearty applause. The other orchestral numbers were Svendesen's "Zorahayda," legend for orchestra, op. 2, and Goldmark's overture to "Sappho." Emil Ferir, the wonderful first violist of the orchestra, played two pieces, Strube's "Fantastic Dance" and D'Indy's "Lied," heard for the first time at these concerts.

SINCERE AND IMPRESSIVE

Mr. Carpenter's symphony is more than "interesting," "well-written" and the like. It is always sincere. It is often impressive—more particularly in the first movement. The themes are genuinely symphonic—broad, noble of outline, lending themselves well to development. The symphony bears as a motto lines of the speech of the Duke in the forest of Arden, in Shakspere's "As You Like It," beginning:

"Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head."

We take it that the intent of the composer is to typify in tones the transition in the heart of a man from the sorrow of knowledge to the happiness of faith in the triumph of truth. Put it more simply: melancholy, despair, hope, faith, joy. What kind of happiness or despair matters little, and Mr. Carpenter is not the man to wear his heart on his sleeve or play to the gallery. His drama is in his music, which the hearer may interpret in the light of his own feelings and experience. Themes from the first movement are repeated in the second and last sections of the work, and are finally ennobled, glorified.

The One Thing Lacking

Yet with all this the music, for us, lacks authenticity. It is made up of too many foreign materials. English, French, German workmanship and idiom are in it. The composer has not imitated, but has absorbed. He has absorbed, in our opinion, too much, for with all his noble intent, his great musical gift, he seems to us to lack a definite musical speech of his own. There is everything in this fine symphony, which cannot but reflect credit on its author and on the attainments of an American composer, except the really vital thing that makes living art. And the only explanation that can be furnished, as it seems to us, is that the composer is too far from the creative spirit of his own community.

We do not mean that we wish him to quote a cowboy tune or an Indian yell in his symphony before we will say we like it, but we do mean that the sensation of a work with its roots in the ground is lacking. It is the only thing lacking; but when the only thing lacking is the greatest thing in art—the consciousness, the spirit of one's day and "mine own people," it is pretty serious. This symphony is an object lesson. We think Mr. Carpenter one of the most inherently gifted composers in America. But—very possibly we are entirely wrong—we also think we know why he has failed to write music of lasting significance. We think he is on the wrong track.

Also, the symphony seems too long, and the middle movement, effectively as it opens, and striking as is the slow interlude, is to us more naive and unconvincing than the other movements.

Mr. Ferir Proven Artist

It was good for the audience to have again an opportunity to hear the playing of Mr. Ferir as soloist. There is no greater instrumentalist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it is a question if there ever has been one—one who so unites in a greater degree musicianship, interpretive genius and tonal charm. It was good, too, that the Symphony audience should have become acquainted with D'Indy's "Lied," too long unplayed at these concerts.

The charming sentimentality of the tone poem of Svendsen gave pleasure. There is in Goldmark's "Sappho" overture one immortal phrase, one progression, one sigh "made of perfect sound and exceeding passion," which in itself would be enough to make the music unforgettable.

GREAT LAKES

Mass.

JOHN CARPENTER'S SYMPHONY PLAYED

John Alden Carpenter, who lives and engages in business in Chicago, has been known here as a composer of songs of more or less recondite settings to poetic or symbolical texts, also by a sonata for violin and piano, and by his orchestral suite "Adventures in a Perambulator," agreeably, often imaginatively, fanciful, and furnished with a scenario, said to be of the composer's authorship, staggering in its infantile sophistication. Youth has not always been so precocious on Lake Michigan.

Yesterday afternoon the Symphony Orchestra and Mr Schmidt brought forward Mr Carpenter's first symphony for its first performance here. The composer was present and, appearing on the platform with the simplicity of dress and manner typical of any young American business man, was warmly applauded and called out the second time.

Mr Carpenter has set as a motto over his score the lines from Act 2 of "As You Like It" spoken by the banished Duke to his co-mates and brothers in exile in Arden Forest, beginning "Sweet are the uses of adversity" and ending with the "sermons in stones and good in everything."

Music With Individuality

The Duke's preference for the churlish chiding of the Winter's wind to the painted pomp of the envious court would denote an individuality more consonant with an honest nature than an artificial society. There is individuality in this music, more, probably, than it defines at one hearing. If only the young creative mind could set down what it hears out at the fringe of consciousness where winged fancies grow elusive. One feels that Mr Carpenter sensed a big emotional urge as the source of this music, but like many another, he has tried to record too much at a time.

There are impressive episodes, there are beautiful thoughts as in the nobly philosophical vein of the opening measures to which the duke might have spoken; there is indisputable value in material and in treatment. Mr Carpenter launches a mood with persuasion, even conviction, and is at ease in a moderate flight.

Serious, Even Poetic Work

But sustained inspiration, the invention which lends spontaneity to development, to the casual transition, the building of climaxes as though emotionally inevitable rather than contrived, are qualities still in the making. The orchestration shows skill, discretion and at times marked originality and imagination in color.

The work as a whole is that of a serious, even a poetic mind, with more yet to say. While there are reminiscences of Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead" in the "Dies Irae" like theme, of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," strongly of the "Parsifal" procession of the knights, and all in the slow movement, there is no servile imitation, nor does the composer assume the idiom of another.

Svendsen's beautiful Zorahayda, admirably given, two pieces for viola and orchestra—d'Indy's "Lied" (new for these concerts) and Strube's Fantastic dance—affording pleasure in Mr Ferir's noble tone and superb style too rarely heard in solo, and Goldmark's "Sappho" overture completed the program.

Transcript April 27-1918 103

NEWS OF MUSIC

MR. GABRILOWITSCH IN CURRENT GOSSIP

Over-Stressing the Pianist as Possible Conductor of the Symphony Orchestra—Zorahayda, Sappho and Mr. Carpenter—Mr. McCormack in New Songs, Irish and American—Mr. de Gogorza and His Hearers in Equal Reaction — Debussy Commemorated at Harvard

THERE is no discovering the source of the streams of conjecture as to the next conductor of the Symphony Orchestra in which the gossips and the wiseacres of New York (which regard the band as quite its own) of echoing Philadelphia and of Boston (which the choice most concerns) are now exultantly swimming. With one accord, they bear aloft Mr. Gabrilowitsch as the new conductor, apparently because he is now leading in three orchestral concerts of his own in New York; because a member of the managerial staff of the Symphony Orchestra, who happened to be on his way from Washington to Boston, listened to one of them; and because the pianist himself lately appeared at Symphony Hall in a concert of the band for its Pension Fund. Not at all does it matter to these amusing minds that Mr. Gabrilowitsch, who has long nursed ambitions toward conducting and has even tested them in Europe, undertook such a series of concerts in New York last spring when there was no vacant conductorship in Boston or that the present series was arranged long before such vacancy actually arose. As little do they know that the presence of what they believed was an official listener at the concert of last Thursday was largely fortuitous and that, when Mr. Gabrilowitsch was in Boston, he seemed much more hesitant than eager over any succession to the conductorship that chance or desert might bring him.

Moreover, as these wiseacres may or may not know, those, here and elsewhere, who test every possible conductor of the orchestra by his allegiances and sympathies in the war, are already collecting and circulating sayings in years past which they attribute, accurately or erroneously, as the case may be, to Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch and which, in their view, stamp him as "pro-German." With these, they are making ready, at need, an active campaign against him. Mr. Gabrilowitsch indeed asserted in Philadelphia on Saturday that this gossip was altogether untrue, that he was "pro-Ally" before the war and that he is "pro-Ally" now. Such denial, however, quite regardless of sincerity, bids fair after the manner of such things, to kindle into flame what was already a smoking controversy. Now, if there is one presumption more certain than another, it is that the next conductor of the Symphony Orchestra will be a man whose past or present cannot be attacked or even debated on this score. Nearly a whole season of such recrimination has sufficed for the orchestra and every one concerned therewith, to say nothing of the public in general. In the belief of many, these wiseacres are not even "warm" as the children say, in their present speculations about Dr. Muck's successor. Moreover, while it is as certain as anything can be that the concerts of the orchestra will proceed as usual next year in Boston, in New York and elsewhere, there is good reason to believe that changes are in consideration and even impending in the background to it, that must be determined before a conductor can be chosen or announced.

Mr. Carpenter and Others

Repeated on Saturday evening, before an audience in which the adept of this town in music abounded, Mr. Carpenter's new symphony was better played and better received than on Friday. Mr. Schmidt and the orchestra were more elastic in tone, pace, emphasis, by which betterment the music gained in continuity, pliancy, balance and contrast. Conductor and men alike continued in excess of zeal over what they rightly believe is a masterful and eloquent symphony, by which amiable shortcoming they still over-stressed certain measures more serviceable than significant in the progress of the music. On the other hand—and in ample compensation—they gave many others the exuberant advance that Mr. Carpenter surely intended and so bore such passages to a sweep and power of many voiced climax lacking in measure in the performance of Friday. For, if the composer, as some of his hearers like to believe, would reflect the American temperament and spirit in his music, he could not overlook exuberance, however sudden and changeful, as one essential characteristic thereof. Again, the performance of Saturday disclosed more clearly and penetratingly the intrinsic beauty of not a few passages upon which in the swiftness of succeeding impressions from a manifold music, the ear at a first hearing had not time to dwell. As music sufficient in and unto itself, regardless of any implication, the progress of the tonal pattern, the melodic voice, gravely or ardently songful, the tossing or the striding rhythm, the richness of color, the imaginative modulation, the depth or the fire of feeling within, the fusion of all these qualities into a sustained, impinging, glowing beauty, kindled ear, mind and heart. The least stirred listener must have suspected that he was hearing a music of clear individuality and imagination, of sensuous beauty, of communicating power. Almost with one accord, the cognoscenti warmed to it. With the fragments of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," Mr. Carpenter's symphony touches the acme of the year in novel music at the Symphony Concerts.

In comparison, the rest of the programme though interesting enough, seemed but to fill out the evening as it had, the day before, the afternoon. From what must have been a very dusty corner of the orchestral library, Mr. Schmidt had drawn Svendsen's tonal legend of that Moorish Zorahayda, who rose from a fountain in the Alhambra to receive rejoicing release from pains and penalties in Christian baptism. daughter. To her succeeded Mr. Férir, the first viola-player of the band, to prove anew, after somewhat long interval as "soloist," his skill, taste, range and sensibility with the tone of an instrument that the more invites them because it also limits them. Plaintively again, he and it sang their way through the melancholy measures of an Andantino that Mr. d'Indy originally wrote for the violoncello. Perhaps he heard the germ of the song in his cherished country of the Cévennes; for in it is mood of longing, solitude, self-communion, such as lonely mountains breed. In turn and contrast the virtuoso shone out of Mr. Férir's playing of the viola part in Mr. Strube's "Fantastic Dance," but the virtuoso who can also summon stiffening imagination into a music of somewhat unvertibrate vagary. Finally, Mr. Holy and Mr. Cella sounded the vibrant and radiant preluding of the harps that sets Goldmark's overture, "Sappho," on its way to invoke the fires and the fates of the Grecian poetess. Somehow both on Friday and Saturday they resembled overmuch the willed heats, contrasts, progress of expert routine alike in composer and orchestra. In these days Goldmark's overtures require a deal of imagintive and artful playing if they are to sound as, it is good to believe, he designed and wrought them. Such a performance of his "Sakountale" stands within easy memory. "Sappho," needing it yet more, by no means received the like.

Transcript — April 20 - 1918

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
APR 19 1918

GABRILOWITSCH TO LEAD BOSTON?

Last Evening's Concert at Carnegie Stirred by Rumors as to Muck's Successor.

HE CONDUCTS BRILLIANTLY

Ossip Gabrilowitsch to succeed Doktor Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the topic of conversation among the musical enthusiasts at last evening's concert in Carnegie Hall, where Mr. Gabrilowitsch conducted three orchestral numbers in the first of the three subscription engagements of the present series.

For some days his name has been uppermost in discussions as to the probable successor of the deposed Muck, and friends of the great pianist have made no concealment of their belief that he has been in correspondence with Major Higginson, who is said to favor Gabrilowitsch over any other available leader.

It is known that the Minneapolis Symphony Society, most ambitious and most metropolitan of the Western musical organizations, has been eager to make a contract with Gabrilowitsch and that there has been some correspondence to that end. Musical authorities here, however, seem generally to believe that he will go to Boston if he decides to accept any permanent orchestral baton. Mr. Gabrilowitsch declines to discuss the matter, and has given no authority for the rumors which were afloat at last evening's concert.

In the all-Beethoven program last evening Gabrilowitsch repeated and even excelled his triumph of last year, conducting the First and Seventh Symphonies and the "Coriolanus" overture with brilliant distinction and final authority. His reception as conductor by the large audience amounted to an ovation, which was further accentuated by the applause which followed his playing of the Mozart concerto in D minor for piano with orchestra.

Arnold Volpe conducted this number with fine discretion and complete sympathy.

EVENING WORLD
New York City.

OPERAS AND CONCERTS

Ossip Gabrilowitsch Establishes Himself as A Great Conductor.

By Sylvester Rawling

OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH, brilliant pianist that he is, may as well make up his mind to take up a new career. Sceptical as we were of the echoes that had reached us from Europe, he gave us last season a taste of his quality as a conductor. After the orchestra concert that he led at Carnegie Hall last night there is no longer any doubt of where he belongs. If it is true, as the gossip goes, that Major Higginson has offered, or is to offer, him the post of conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to succeed Dr. Karl Muck, interned, there will be cause for rejoicing among all music lovers. In Mr. Gabrilowitsch we are compelled to recognize a master conductor, worthy to rank with the best of our time.

As a programme maker, too, Mr. Gabrilowitsch is full of promise. Beginning with Beethoven's first symphony, and following it with the same composer's "Egmont" overture, he interposed Mozart's piano concerto in D minor, No. 20, and ended with Tschaikowsky's overture-phantasie "Romeo and Juliet." He imbued each composition with new life and vigor and insight. It is true that his orchestra, with few distinguished exceptions, included the best players in our long established Philharmonic and Symphony Orchestras. Nevertheless, for him it was a "scratch" orchestra, and the results he achieved with it will remain a memory to the host of music lovers who were present last night and acclaimed without stint. The musicians who responded to the magnetic wielding of his baton were as enthusiastic as the audience.

Of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's own part as soloist in the Mozart concerto, with Arnold Volpe as conductor, there can be said nothing save of praise. The pure, crystalline quality that he imparts to the individual notes, the warmth of tone and color with which he imbues his whole conception and execution, are exceptional. Yet there are half a dozen or more, each in his or her own distinctive way, master players of the piano, who compel our interest and admiration. Of conductors who lead with an individuality that makes one think of the interpreter as well as of the composer, there are few. Mr. Gabrilowitsch is one of them, and his talents should not be denied to us.

Another double bill at the Metropolitan Opera House last night drew

POST
New York City
APR 19 1918

Gabrilowitsch as Conductor.

A few years ago, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, after establishing his position among the foremost of living pianists, gave specimens of his skill as an orchestral conductor. It was at the Manhattan Opera House, which does not show off an orchestra well when placed on the stage; nor was his orchestra as good as it might have been; yet even under these disadvantages he gave evidence that he was one of the elect.

Last night he gave another concert, in Carnegie Hall, and with musicians selected from the Philharmonic and the Symphony Orchestras, and this time he left no doubt whatever that he is one of the great conductors of the day. With a few rehearsals he achieved an ensemble of such surprising excellence that one wondered what he might not do if he had one of our great orchestras under his control regularly. There are rumors that he may be the successor of Dr. Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his only serious rival being Arturo Toscanini. Doubtless that Italian is the foremost of living operatic conductors; but his interpretation, a few years ago, of Beethoven's colossal ninth symphony was far from ideal in matters of interpretation, particularly of tempi. Truth to tell, Gabrilowitsch achieved more agreeable results last night with the immature Haydnish first symphony of the great master than Toscanini did with the colossally Beethovenish ninth.

Superbly virile and dramatic was Gabrilowitsch's reading of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture. He made it a real tragedy in tones, stern and inexorable in its opening chords, soothing in the sarabande movement, and rising to a thrilling climax after the development of the second theme preceding the coda. And in the final fanfare for full orchestra there was real exultation. It was Beethoven rejuvenated, and the audience was wild with delight.

Throughout the concert the new conductor was overwhelmed with outbursts of enthusiasm such as are seldom heard; and it was an audience of the best class of music lovers. It enjoyed Gabrilowitch's scintillant playing of the piano in Mozart's D minor concerto, No. 20, with Arnold Volpe as conductor; and then came the evening's greatest treat, a performance of Tchaikovsky's overture-fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet," which could hardly have been bettered in any way. It is interesting to recall the fact that this inspired work was a failure when first played in Paris and Vienna. It was even hissed. The reason for its failure lay in the fact, as noted by Taneiev, that it was misinterpreted. Saint-Saëns nevertheless divined its greatness. "Cela l'a posé, cette ouverture," he remarked. There can be no doubt that if Pasdeloup and Hans Richter had read it with the eloquence and insight shown by Gabrilowitch yesterday it would have been acclaimed as enthusiastically as it was in Carnegie Hall.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.

GABRILOWITSCH AS MUCK'S SUCCESSOR?

Reveals Excellent Qualities of Leadership at Special Carnegie Concert.

WITH "PICKED UP" ORCHESTRA.

In Line Also for Philharmonic—"Barber of Seville" and "Place Congo" at Metropolitan.

Last evening, in Carnegie Hall, Ossip Gabrilowitsch gave further manifestation of his ability as a conductor which he displayed last spring at a special series of concerts. His orchestra was one gathered from the idle forces that are to be found in New York every spring following the disbandment for the summer of the local orchestras. The program last evening included Beethoven's First Symphony and "Egmont" Overture, and the Overture-Fantasie from Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony. To lend variety conductor became soloist long enough to play the solo part of the Mozart D Minor Concerto, in the playing of which the band was under the direction of Arnold Volpe.

But Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, is too well known for further comment at this time. It is with Gabrilowitsch the conductor one is now concerned. Any consideration of his work must take into account the fact that an orchestra organized for a single occasion requires for excellence of performance more rehearsals than can possibly be afforded and that no matter what its personnel may be it cannot achieve the heights of tonal balance or ensemble excellence.

But the ideas which a conductor has and the power he possesses of imparting them to his men can be determined. There is in Gabrilowitsch's conducting a fine force and musicianly command, a clear intelligent outlook upon the score, a feeling, for the composition's inmost meaning and above all else a sense of clarity and desire for clean cut design. His conducting of the symphony was not altogether commendable. The Menuetto became under his baton a scherzo (indeed in the program it was so mislabelled) and the slow movement was slower than Beethoven's markings would indicate. The high mark was reached in the Rondo which was given with a feathery lightness and incisiveness of rhythm that revealed to the full its delightful charm. His reading of the overture was thoroughly satisfactory. He made it a genuine overture, picturing the moods of Goethe's poem and resplendent in its broad contrasts of color and dynamics. And the Tschaikowsky was charged with emotion and significant in its revelation of the tonal picture.

Shameful it is that so good a conductor had to gather together his own orchestra, but if we read the musical heavens aright, it is a shame that will pass with the close of this season; for all the signs point to him as the conductor of next season's Boston Symphony or Philharmonic orchestras. The fact of the matter is that he stands head and shoulders above those who have directed the artistic destinies of New York's own two organizations.

AMERICAN
New York City.

Mrs. Jay to Oppose Muck's Successor

The appointment of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, noted pianist, to succeed Dr. Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be vigorously opposed by Mrs. William Jay, of No. 850 Park avenue. At her home last evening, Richard Fletcher, editor of The Chronicle, acting as spokesman, said:

Mrs. Jay wishes to make it perfectly plain right now that she irrevocably and emphatically disapproves of Gabrilowitsch's appointment as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She will not state her reasons at this time, but they should be obvious to anyone."

WORLD
New York City
APR 21 1918

MARK TWAIN'S SON-IN-LAW MAY GET DR. MUCK'S PLACE

Ossip Gabrilowitsch Reported Chosen Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

(Special to The World.)

PHILADELPHIA, April 20.—Ossip Gabrilowitsch probably will be chosen as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to succeed Dr. Karl Muck, who has been interned as an enemy alien.

Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch reside in Bryn Mawr. Mrs. Gabrilowitsch was Miss Clara Clemens, and, as the daughter of Mark Twain, achieved musical distinction in her own right.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch conducted an orchestra of independent players in Carnegie Hall, New York, last Thursday evening. Under his baton the orchestra recorded a real success.

Charles A. Ellis and W. H. Brennan, representing the Boston orchestra, were in the house, and it is reported that they decided then to offer Muck's place to Gabrilowitsch.

PRESS
Philadelphia, Pa.

GABRILOWITSCH EXPECTED TO LEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY

Noted Musician Likely to Be Selected as Conductor of Famous Orchestra, Succeeding the Interned D. Muck—Stokowski Offered Place, but Declined.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch will probably be chosen as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to succeed Dr. Karl Muck who has been interned as an enemy alien.

This news derives local significance from the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Gabrilowitsch in Bryn Mawr. Mrs. Gabrilowitsch was Miss Clara Clemens, and as the daughter of Mark Twain, has achieved musical distinction in her own right.

It is a matter of local note among musicians that Leopold Stokowski received a proposition from the Boston organization and that he was the first choice of Major Higginson and his Boston associates. The leader of the Philadelphia Orchestra, however, preferred his present connection, the appreciation that has come to him here and his close friendships in Philadelphia being strong factors in the decision.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch conducted an orchestra of independent players in Carnegie Hall, New York, last Thursday evening. Under his baton the orchestra, which included some Philadelphians, recorded a real success. Charles A. Ellis and W. H. Brennan, representing the Boston Orchestra, were in the house, and their presence is taken as the final step in the negotiations.

A series of concerts in Detroit and Cincinnati was conducted recently by Mr. Gabrilowitsch, and it is believed he received an offer to become the conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra. Victor Herbert has also been mentioned in connection with that vacancy.

The selection of the brilliant Gabrilowitsch by Boston would remove all doubt as to the patriotic character of every performance. Born in Russia, he is intensely American, as American, he is proud to say, as Mark Twain himself. Although Philadelphia has not known him as a conductor, he has had experience that guarantees his authority. Poesy and accuracy sweep from his baton. Dresden, Munich and other European music centers have approved his leadership.

TRIBUNE
New York City
APR 21 1918

Philharmonic Society Is Not to Disband

Some Thoughts on the Loyalty of Conductors—James G. Huneker Writes a History of the Philharmonic

By Grenville Vernon

THE meeting on Thursday afternoon of the board of directors of the Philharmonic Society laid at rest the rumors that America's oldest symphonic organization was to be disbanded until the close of the war. The news is welcome. Never was there greater need for the ministrations of serious music than in these days of horror and uncertainty. Music may well prove a powerful aid in the upholding of the morale of the nation, for in music we reach touch with the eternal verities, we are refreshed from the springs of the spirit. When in days of impending calamity the feeling rises that it would be better to have done with all things having no direct bearing upon the crisis, we should bring to mind the meeting of the French Academy on the crucial day of the Battle of the Marne. On that day the Academy reached, we think it was, the letter E in its revision of the dictionary. To the accompaniment of the cannon at La Fère-Champenoise these French savants debated the purity of their language. Were they any the less patriots in doing so than had they marched out in all their septuagenarian glory to bare their breasts to the Prussian bullets?

The causes for the rumor were several. Despite Joseph Pulitzer's munificent bequest, the Philharmonic Society faces a deficit and has made a public appeal for funds. War-time expenses are as heavy in music as elsewhere, and huge taxes are not conductive to enthusiastic giving. Then Joseph Stransky, the Philharmonic's conductor, had been accused of pro-Germanism, and despite his detailed denial such a charge cannot be without effect. Mr. Stransky has taken out first papers and proclaims himself a follower of President Wilson's four principles. He has said that he is a patriotic Bohemian and that he desires the independence of his native country. He has also said that he does not believe in the dismemberment of Austria. Precisely how these two desires are to be effected without a violent collision is not quite clear, but that will probably be left to the peace conference.

But Mr. Stransky has now arrayed himself with the Allies and burned the bridges connecting him with the Central Empires. The charge that there were a number of alien enemies among the musicians of the orchestra was, of course, absurd. The Philharmonic is a union orchestra, and the musical union demands that its members become American citizens.

Real Loyalty Demanded

The internment of Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald has intensified the public's desire to know just where our various conductors stand on the subject of the war. Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald are alien enemies, and they never made any concealment of their sympathies. But there are other well known musicians whose positions are still a little nebulous, even though technically they may not be classed as enemies. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is about to choose another leader, and if New York may be permitted to advise the doings of our New England Athens—and, after all, the Boston Orchestra is our nation's brightest musical gem and therefore to be as jealously guarded by New York as it is by its more fortunate sister city—it is to be hoped that it will choose a leader whose loyalty to the cause of civilization both is and always has been unquestioned. Such a leader certainly can be found. Indeed, such a leader must be found. For a conductor to wave a baton in Boston, even if it is for "The Star-Spangled Banner," while his heart turns fondly to Munich or Berlin, is not what we call loyalty to civilization. America to-day has no place for patriotic camouflage and Boloism, musical or otherwise.

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

DR. MUCK CANNOT GET SWITZERLAND'S SUPPORT

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German.

This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it is said, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship, and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

The precise nature of the Department of Justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly.

From PUBLIC LEDGER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date APR 2

NOT MUCK'S SUCCESSOR

Boston, April 20.—Ossip Gabrilowitsch will not succeed Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, despite widespread rumors to that effect, according to persons in intimate touch with the organization.

These persons, who asked that their names be withheld, said positively the pianist would not be selected.

TRIBUNE
New York City

Gabrilowitsch May Be Named in Dr. Muck's Place

Noted Musician Leaves Philadelphia on Hurried Trip to Boston

PHILADELPHIA, April 21.—The report that Ossip Gabrilowitsch will be appointed the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to succeed Dr. Karl Muck, recently interned as an enemy alien, is given credence by his departure from here yesterday for Boston. While Gabrilowitsch would make no comment concerning his probable engagement, he was insistent that the question of his patriotism could not prevent his taking Dr. Muck's vacant place if the offer was made to him.

"If there are any stories current that I am in sympathy with Germany and Austria," he said, "I wish now to brand them as untrue. I was pro-ally before the war and I am pro-ally now. I am an enemy of German autocracy, and I hope for the military defeat of the Central Powers."

Questioned as to the arrest of himself and his wife, Mark Twain's daughter, in Germany at the outbreak of the war, Gabrilowitsch said:

"I was seized by the Germans as a citizen of Russia and held for twenty-four hours. They searched my place at Munich for incriminating papers, but found nothing that gave them an excuse to hold me, and finally released me. With my wife, I was ordered to leave Germany at once. We came to the United States as soon as possible, and have been here since."

It is understood by musicians who are familiar with Boston conditions that Gabrilowitsch was considered for the position of orchestra leader even before the government Secret Service took final measures in eliminating Dr. Muck. Since the leadership became vacant he has been spoken of more frequently than any other possible candidate. Charles A. Ellis and W. H. Brennan, representing the Boston organization, were in New York to attend a special orchestral concert given by Gabrilowitsch on Thursday night. Gabrilowitsch would not admit that negotiations were opened at that time.

Other men who have been mentioned in connection with the orchestra leadership are Arthur Toscanini, formerly conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

BOSTON, April 21.—Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the Symphony Orchestra, to-day refused either to confirm or deny the rumor that Gabrilowitsch had been chosen for the place made vacant by Dr. Muck's internment.

AMERICAN
New York City.
APR 25 1918

Swiss Government Won't Aid Dr. Muck

Washington, April 24.—The Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned as a dangerous German.

The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it was said today, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship and that the United States was justified in interning him.

From TIMES
Address: New York City
Date

MUCK PROTEST DROPPED.

Swiss Legation Satisfied Musician Should be Classed as German.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, ex-leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, issued this statement today:

"The Swiss Legation has decided not to extend its protection to Dr. Karl Muck as a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck was arrested the legation inquired at the Department of State the grounds for this action. The inquiry was based upon the fact that Dr. Muck became a naturalized Swiss citizen through the naturalization of his father in the year 1866. The evidence in the hands of the Department of Justice and submitted to the legation clearly shows, however, that during his long residence in Germany and later in the United States Dr. Muck was not only recognized as a German subject by the German authorities, but also regarded himself as such. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Swiss Legation will confine itself to looking after Dr. Muck's interests in its capacity as representing German interests in the United States."

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City

SWITZERLAND DROPS CASE OF DR. MUCK

Republic Decides He Was Not Genuine Citizen and Leaves Musician to His Fate.

Switzerland is not worried enough over the unhappy experiences of Dr. Karl Muck, recently leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to object to the United States sending him down to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for the duration of the war.

Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister, after an investigation into the career of the musician and examining the records of the Department of Justice, has formally announced that his Government will not insist that the man is a good Swiss citizen. Minister Sulzer, it is understood, after reading all the evidence made up his mind that the Swiss naturalization was a little camouflage and that afterward repeatedly Muck claimed German citizenship.

It is rumored that the Government may shortly reveal the details of the case against Muck.

TRIBUNE
New York City
APR 2

Swiss Abandon Case of Dr. Muck

Convinced That He Had Repeatedly Claimed German Citizenship

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it was said to-day, that Dr. Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

The precise nature of the Department of Justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly.

HERALD
New York City
APR 25 1918

Swiss Decide to Keep Hands Off in Muck Internment

Satisfied Boston Symphony Leader Claimed German Citizenship, Says Minister to America.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, issued this statement:—

"The Swiss Legation has decided not to extend its protection to Dr. Karl Muck as a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck was arrested the Legation inquired at the Department of State the grounds for this action. The inquiry was based upon the fact that Dr. Muck became a naturalized Swiss citizen through the naturalization of his father in the year 1866. The evidence in the hands of the Department of Justice and submitted to the Legation clearly shows, however, that during his long residence in Germany and later in the United States Dr. Muck was not only recognized as a German subject by the German authorities, but he also regarded himself as such. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Swiss Legation will confine itself to looking after Dr. Muck's interests in its capacity as representing German interests in the United States."

TRIBUNE
New York City
APR 21 1918

Philharmonic Society Is Not to Disband

Some Thoughts on the Loyalty of Conductors—James G. Huneker Writes a History of the Philharmonic

By Grenville Vernon

THE meeting on Thursday afternoon of the board of directors of the Philharmonic Society laid at rest the rumors that America's oldest symphonic organization was to be disbanded until the close of the war. The news is welcome. Never was there greater need for the ministrations of serious music than in these days of horror and uncertainty. Music may well prove a powerful aid in the upholding of the morale of the nation, for in music we reach touch with the eternal verities, we are refreshed from the springs of the spirit. When in days of impending calamity the feeling rises that it would be better to have done with all things having no direct bearing upon the crisis, we should bring to mind the meeting of the French Academy on the crucial day of the Battle of the Marne. On that day the Academy reached, we think it was, the letter E in its revision of the dictionary. To the accompaniment of the cannon at La Fère-Champenoise these French savants debated the purity of their language. Were they any the less patriots in doing so than had they marched out in all their septuagenarian glory to bare their breasts to the Prussian bullets?

The causes for the rumor were several. Despite Joseph Pulitzer's munificent bequest, the Philharmonic Society faces a deficit and has made a public appeal for funds. War-time expenses are as heavy in music as elsewhere, and huge taxes are not conductive to enthusiastic giving. Then Joseph Stransky, the Philharmonic's conductor, had been accused of pro-Germanism, and despite his detailed denial such a charge cannot be without effect. Mr. Stransky has taken out first papers and proclaims himself a follower of President Wilson's four principles. He has said that he is a patriotic Bohemian and that he desires the independence of his native country. He has also said that he does not believe in the dismemberment of Austria. Precisely how these two desires are to be effected without a violent collision is not quite clear, but that will probably be left to the peace conference.

But Mr. Stransky has now arrayed himself with the Allies and burned the bridges connecting him with the Central Empires. The charge that there were a number of alien enemies among the musicians of the orchestra was, of course, absurd. The Philharmonic is a union orchestra, and the musical union demands that its members become American citizens.

Real Loyalty Demanded

The internment of Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald has intensified the public's desire to know just where our various conductors stand on the subject of the war. Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald are alien enemies, and they never made any concealment of their sympathies. But there are other well known musicians whose positions are still a little nebulous, even though technically they may not be classed as enemies. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is about to choose another leader, and if New York may be permitted to advise the doings of our New England Athens—and, after all, the Boston Orchestra is our nation's brightest musical gem and therefore to be as jealously guarded by New York as it is by its more fortunate sister city—it is to be hoped that it will choose a leader whose loyalty to the cause of civilization both is and always has been unquestioned. Such a leader certainly can be found. Indeed, such a leader must be found. For a conductor to wave a baton in Boston, even if it is for "The Star-Spangled Banner," while his heart turns fondly to Munich or Berlin, is not what we call loyalty to civilization. America to-day has no place for patriotic camouflage and Boloism, musical or otherwise.

From PUBLIC LEDGER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date APR 2

NOT MUCK'S SUCCESSOR

Boston, April 20.—Ossip Gabrilowitsch will not succeed Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, despite widespread rumors to that effect, according to persons in intimate touch with the organization.

These persons, who asked that their names be withheld, said positively the pianist would not be selected.

TRIBUNE
Address: New York City

Gabrilowitsch May Be Named in Dr. Muck's Place

Noted Musician Leaves Philadelphia on Hurried Trip to Boston

PHILADELPHIA, April 21.—The report that Ossip Gabrilowitsch will be appointed the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to succeed Dr. Karl Muck, recently interned as an enemy alien, is given credence by his departure from here yesterday for Boston. While Gabrilowitsch would make no comment concerning his probable engagement, he was insistent that the question of his patriotism could not prevent his taking Dr. Muck's vacant place if the offer was made to him.

"If there are any stories current that I am in sympathy with Germany and Austria," he said, "I wish now to brand them as untrue. I was pro-ally before the war and I am pro-ally now. I am an enemy of German autocracy, and I hope for the military defeat of the Central Powers."

Questioned as to the arrest of himself and his wife, Mark Twain's daughter, in Germany at the outbreak of the war, Gabrilowitsch said:

"I was seized by the Germans as a citizen of Russia and held for twenty-four hours. They searched my place at Munich for incriminating papers, but found nothing that gave them an excuse to hold me, and finally released me. With my wife, I was ordered to leave Germany at once. We came to the United States as soon as possible, and have been here since."

It is understood by musicians who are familiar with Boston conditions that Gabrilowitsch was considered for the position of orchestra leader even before the government Secret Service took final measures in eliminating Dr. Muck. Since the leadership became vacant he has been spoken of more frequently than any other possible candidate. Charles A. Ellis and W. H. Brennan, representing the Boston organization, were in New York to attend a special orchestral concert given by Gabrilowitsch on Thursday night. Gabrilowitsch would not admit that negotiations were opened at that time.

Other men who have been mentioned in connection with the orchestra leadership are Arthur Toscanini, formerly conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

BOSTON, April 21.—Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the Symphony Orchestra, to-day refused either to confirm or deny the rumor that Gabrilowitsch had been chosen for the place made vacant by Dr. Muck's internment.

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

DR. MUCK CANNOT GET SWITZERLAND'S SUPPORT

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German.

This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it is said, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship, and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

The precise nature of the Department of Justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly.

AMERICAN
New York City.
APR 25 1918

Swiss Government Won't Aid Dr. Muck

Washington, April 24.—The Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned as a dangerous German.

The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it was said today, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship and that the United States was justified in interning him.

TIMES
Address: New York City

MUCK PROTEST DROPPED.

Swiss Legation Satisfied Musician Should be Classed as German.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, ex-leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, issued this statement today:

"The Swiss Legation has decided not to extend its protection to Dr. Karl Muck as a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck was arrested the legation inquired at the Department of State the grounds for this action. The inquiry was based upon the fact that Dr. Muck became a naturalized Swiss citizen through the naturalization of his father in the year 1866. The evidence in the hands of the Department of Justice and submitted to the legation clearly shows, however, that during his long residence in Germany and later in the United States Dr. Muck was not only recognized as a German subject by the German authorities, but also regarded himself as such. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Swiss Legation will confine itself to looking after Dr. Muck's interests in its capacity as representing German interests in the United States."

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City

SWITZERLAND DROPS CASE OF DR. MUCK

public Decides He Was Not Genuine Citizen and Leaves Musician to His Fate.

witzerland is not worried enough er the unhappy experiences of Dr. Karl Muck, recently leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to object to the United States sending him down to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for the duration of the war.

Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister, after an investigation into the career of the musician and examining the records of the Department of Justice, has formally announced that his Government will not insist that the man is a good Swiss citizen. Minister Sulzer, it is understood, after reading all the evidence made up his mind that the Swiss naturalization was a little camouflage and that afterward repeatedly Muck claimed German citizenship.

It is rumored that the Government may shortly reveal the details of the case against Muck.

TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
APR 2

Swiss Abandon Case of Dr. Muck

Convinced That He Had Repeatedly Claimed German Citizenship

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it was said to-day, that Dr. Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

The precise nature of the Department of Justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly.

HERALD
New York City

Swiss Decide to Keep Hands Off in Muck Internment

Satisfied Boston Symphony Leader Claimed German Citizenship, Says Minister to America.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, issued this statement:—

"The Swiss Legation has decided not to extend its protection to Dr. Karl Muck as a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck was arrested the Legation inquired at the Department of State the grounds for this action. The inquiry was based upon the fact that Dr. Muck became a naturalized Swiss citizen through the naturalization of his father in the year 1866. The evidence in the hands of the Department of Justice and submitted to the Legation clearly shows, however, that during his long residence in Germany and later in the United States Dr. Muck was not only recognized as a German subject by the German authorities, but he also regarded himself as such. Under the circumstannes, therefore, the Swiss Legation will confine itself to looking after Dr. Muck's interests in its capacity as representing German interests in the United States."

TRIBUNE
New York City
APR 21 1918

Philharmonic Society Is Not to Disband

Some Thoughts on the Loyalty of Conductors—James G. Huneker Writes a History of the Philharmonic

By Grenville Vernon

THE meeting on Thursday afternoon of the board of directors of the Philharmonic Society laid at rest the rumors that America's oldest symphonic organization was to be disbanded until the close of the war. The news is welcome. Never was there greater need for the ministrations of serious music than in these days of horror and uncertainty. Music may well prove a powerful aid in the upholding of the morale of the nation, for in music we reach touch with the eternal verities, we are refreshed from the springs of the spirit. When in days of impending calamity the feeling rises that it would be better to have done with all things having no direct bearing upon the crisis, we should bring to mind the meeting of the French Academy on the crucial day of the Battle of the Marne. On that day the Academy reached, we think it was, the letter E in its revision of the dictionary. To the accompaniment of the cannon at La Fère-Champenoise these French savants debated the purity of their language. Were they any the less patriots in doing so than had they marched out in all their septuagenarian glory to bare their breasts to the Prussian bullets?

The causes for the rumor were several. Despite Joseph Pulitzer's munificent bequest, the Philharmonic Society faces a deficit and has made a public appeal for funds. War-time expenses are as heavy in music as elsewhere, and huge taxes are not conductive to enthusiastic giving. Then Joseph Stransky, the Philharmonic's conductor, had been accused of pro-Germanism, and despite his detailed denial such a charge cannot be without effect. Mr. Stransky has taken out first papers and proclaims himself a follower of President Wilson's four principles. He has said that he is a patriotic Bohemian and that he desires the independence of his native country. He has also said that he does not believe in the dismemberment of Austria. Precisely how these two desires are to be effected without a violent collision is not quite clear, but that will probably be left to the peace conference.

But Mr. Stransky has now arrayed himself with the Allies and burned the bridges connecting him with the Central Empires. The charge that there were a number of alien enemies among the musicians of the orchestra was, of course, absurd. The Philharmonic is a union orchestra, and the musical union demands that its members become American citizens.

Real Loyalty Demanded

The internment of Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald has intensified the public's desire to know just where our various conductors stand on the subject of the war. Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald are alien enemies, and they never made any concealment of their sympathies. But there are other well known musicians whose positions are still a little nebulous, even though technically they may not be classed as enemies. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is about to choose another leader, and if New York may be permitted to advise the doings of our New England Athens—and, after all, the Boston Orchestra is our nation's brightest musical gem and therefore to be as jealously guarded by New York as it is by its more fortunate sister city—it is to be hoped that it will choose a leader whose loyalty to the cause of civilization both is and always has been unquestioned. Such a leader certainly can be found. Indeed, such a leader must be found. For a conductor to wave a baton in Boston, even if it is for "The Star-Spangled Banner," while his heart turns fondly to Munich or Berlin, is not what we call loyalty to civilization. America to-day has no place for patriotic camouflage and Boloism, musical or otherwise.

TRIBUNE
New York City

Gabrilowitsch May Be Named in Dr. Muck's Place

Noted Musician Leaves Philadelphia on Hurried Trip to Boston

PHILADELPHIA, April 21.—The report that Ossip Gabrilowitsch will be appointed the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to succeed Dr. Karl Muck, recently interned as an enemy alien, is given credence by his departure from here yesterday for Boston. While Gabrilowitsch would make no comment concerning his probable engagement, he was insistent that the question of his patriotism could not prevent his taking Dr. Muck's vacant place if the offer was made to him.

"If there are any stories current that I am in sympathy with Germany and Austria," he said, "I wish now to brand them as untrue. I was pro-ally before the war and I am pro-ally now. I am an enemy of German autocracy, and I hope for the military defeat of the Central Powers."

Questioned as to the arrest of himself and his wife, Mark Twain's daughter, in Germany at the outbreak of the war, Gabrilowitsch said:

"I was seized by the Germans as a citizen of Russia and held for twenty-four hours. They searched my place at Munich for incriminating papers, but found nothing that gave them an excuse to hold me, and finally released me. With my wife, I was ordered to leave Germany at once. We came to the United States as soon as possible, and have been here since."

It is understood by musicians who are familiar with Boston conditions that Gabrilowitsch was considered for the position of orchestra leader even before the government Secret Service took final measures in eliminating Dr. Muck. Since the leadership became vacant he has been spoken of more frequently than any other possible candidate. Charles A. Ellis and W. H. Brennan, representing the Boston organization, were in New York to attend a special orchestral concert given by Gabrilowitsch on Thursday night. Gabrilowitsch would not admit that negotiations were opened at that time.

Other men who have been mentioned in connection with the orchestra leadership are Arthur Toscanini, formerly conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

BOSTON, April 21.—Major Henry L. Higinson, sponsor for the Symphony Orchestra, to-day refused either to confirm or deny the rumor that Gabrilowitsch had been chosen for the place left by Dr. Muck's internment.

AMERICAN
New York City.
APR 25 1918

Swiss Government Won't Aid Dr. Muck

Washington, April 24.—The Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned as a dangerous German.

The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it was said today, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship and that the United States was justified in interning him.

TIMES
Address: New York City

MUCK PROTEST DROPPED.

Swiss Legation Satisfied Musician Should be Classed as German.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, ex-leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, issued this statement today:

"The Swiss Legation has decided not to extend its protection to Dr. Karl Muck as a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck was arrested the legation inquired at the Department of State the grounds for this action. The inquiry was based upon the fact that Dr. Muck became a naturalized Swiss citizen through the naturalization of his father in the year 1866. The evidence in the hands of the Department of Justice and submitted to the legation clearly shows, however, that during his long residence in Germany and later in the United States Dr. Muck was not only recognized as a German subject by the German authorities, but also regarded himself as such. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Swiss Legation will confine itself to looking after Dr. Muck's interests in its capacity as representing German interests in the United States."

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City

SWITZERLAND DROPS CASE OF DR. MUCK

Republic Decides He Was Not Genuine Citizen and Leaves Musician to His Fate.

Switzerland is not worried enough over the unhappy experiences of Dr. Karl Muck, recently leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to object to the United States sending him down to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for the duration of the war.

Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister, after an investigation into the career of the musician and examining the records of the Department of Justice, has formally announced that his Government will not insist that the man is a good Swiss citizen. Minister Sulzer, it is understood, after reading all the evidence made up his mind that the Swiss naturalization was a little camouflage and that afterward repeatedly Muck claimed German citizenship.

It is rumored that the Government may shortly reveal the details of the case against Muck.

TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
APR 2

Swiss Abandon Case of Dr. Muck

Convinced That He Had Repeatedly Claimed German Citizenship

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it was said to-day, that Dr. Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

The precise nature of the Department of Justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly.

HERALD
New York City

Swiss Decide to Keep Hands Off in Muck Internment

Satisfied Boston Symphony Leader Claimed German Citizenship, Says Minister to America.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, issued this statement:—

"The Swiss Legation has decided not to extend its protection to Dr. Karl Muck as a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck was arrested the Legation inquired at the Department of State the grounds for this action. The inquiry was based upon the fact that Dr. Muck became a naturalized Swiss citizen through the naturalization of his father in the year 1866. The evidence in the hands of the Department of Justice and submitted to the Legation clearly shows, however, that during his long residence in Germany and later in the United States Dr. Muck was not only recognized as a German subject by the German authorities, but he also regarded himself as such. Under the circumstannes, therefore, the Swiss Legation will confine itself to looking after Dr. Muck's interests in its capacity as representing German interests in the United States."

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

DR. MUCK CANNOT GET SWITZERLAND'S SUPPORT

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German.

This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it is said, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship, and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

The precise nature of the Department of Justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date APR 2

NOT MUCK'S SUCCESSOR

Boston, April 20.—Ossip Gabrilowitsch will not succeed Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, despite widespread rumors to that effect, according to persons in intimate touch with the organization.

These persons, who asked that their names be withheld, said positively the pianist would not be selected.

Herald Apr 25-1918 10b

Record April 25-1918

SWISS REJECT MUCK'S CLAIM

Legation at Capital Finds He Was Recognized as a German Subject

GREGORY MAY MAKE ALL FACTS PUBLIC

WASHINGTON, April 24—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a dangerous German. This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the department of justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it is said, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

May Publish Evidence

The precise nature of the department of justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly. It is understood government agents obtained letters and other documents written by him in past years, in which he declared he was a German citizen.

The Swiss minister issued this statement:

"The Swiss legation has decided not to extend its protection to Dr. Karl Muck as a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck was arrested the legation inquired at the department of state the grounds for this action. The inquiry was based upon the fact that Dr. Muck became a naturalized Swiss citizen through the naturalization of his father in the year 1866. The evidence in the hands of the department of justice and submitted to the legation clearly shows, that during his long residence in Germany and later in the United States Dr. Muck was not only recognized as a German subject by the German authorities, but he also regarded himself as such. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Swiss legation will confine itself to looking after Dr. Muck's interest in its capacity as representing German interests in the United States."

Muck's "Citizenship"

The soul of America was cleaner the moment that Karl Muck was locked up. The freedom of America was safer when the Government removed him from among honorable Americans.

It is gratifying news that the Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim that Dr. Muck was one of its citizens. We think the citizenship of Muck is more than Switzerland could support without nausea.

Let Dr. Muck's allegiance remain where it belongs—in Berlin.

We never heard of "the great Swiss conductor of the Symphony Orchestra." We do not understand that Dr. Muck came to our land by grace of the Swiss Government. We never were asked to believe that Dr. Muck was the bearer of Swiss culture or Swiss musical interpretations to the United States.

What a shallow and sickening chapter was all this cant and pother about Muck's "Swiss citizenship!" He reeks of Germany. His whole career rests on a German foundation—in part fine, in part vile. In so far as he thrilled us with memories of the music masters of old Germany, in so far as through his baton the splendor of Beethoven was given new significance and added majesty for us, he was fine. But that Germany is buried in the past for us now. Maybe it will be dug up again, when the people of Germany learn the truths of humanity and slough off the foulness of Kultur and Krupp. For the time, we may see Muck only as he made himself appear to America—German of Germans, in sympathy with the abominations which are the familiars of his hell-taught preceptor and master, the Kaiser. The "Swiss citizenship" claim was made when it appeared useful to protect him from justice, to cloak his Germanism in a time when Germanism became intolerable.

We congratulate our friend Switzerland for deciding to wash its hands of a dirty mess.

Advertiser Apr 25-1918

SWISS WILL NOT PRESS MUCK CLAIM

Washington, April 24.—The Swiss government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as a dangerous German.

Transcript April 25, 1918

THIBAUD AND DVORAK

The Violinist in High Mettle and Transforming Power and "The New World" Symphony at the Cambridge Concert of the Boston Orchestra

STANDING last evening upon the stage of Sanders Theatre, Mr. Thibaud and his violin completely dominated the Boston Symphony Orchestra. If a tense, slightly erratic and highly sensitized nervous organism is the definition of "temperament," then Mr. Thibaud has "temperament" equal to or above any violinist of his day. His deep and vivid emotionalism, absorbing, consuming, differentiates him, at such moments as those of yesterday, from all his compeers of the violin. Miss Seydel recently made the concerto of Saint-Saëns in B minor the light, graceful and persuasive music that it was probably meant to be. Under Mr. Thibaud's bow it became different music altogether, since such is the force of "temperament" to override and reshape music of other import to its own ends. Miss Seydel had daintily poised her part in the Siciliano with the delicate eloquence of the wood-wind. But through that and the rest Mr. Thibaud traced his own fine, pulsing line of melody, distinguished in quality, in rarely sensitive passion and dark of shading. From first to last it was music in dead earnest, without a smile. The orchestra was always his background instead of his counterpart. His fiery ornament was not flawless, but neither was it noisy or scratchy—delicately and breathlessly traced figures, swift as thought, as indelibly and incisively cut as a fork of lightning.

The time was when the Prelude to "The Mastersinger" was in such degree the attainment and the pride of the orchestra that the conductor could confidently watch it through many perfect measures with hands at his sides. Last evening it was rather loosely assembled and rather indiscriminately blatant. But with Dvorák's "New World" Symphony Mr. Schmidt seemed entirely at home, by virtue of a comprehensive sympathy which probed the music to the utmost in detail, in dramatic ebb and flow, in stoutly honest brass and surface songfulness of wood-wind. The music of Dvorák's best conception and Mr. Schmidt's best execution has no Wagnerian expanse and complexity, no underlying philosophy or rich imagination, no baffling novelty or subtle finesse. It is merely musicianly in the straightforward, conscientious and sometimes solid sense. As if to balance endless reiteration by other orchestras, such a symphony has rarely appeared on the programmes of the Boston band, but its public on both sides of the Charles rises to it; while perhaps it is our particular own, if by no more than dedication. Yet the music is good to hear—not too incessantly, to be sure, for its themes have no wearing quality—and Mr. Schmidt has given it round and comely justice.

J. N. B.

Transcript Apr 27-1918

THE SYMPHONY'S REORGANIZATION

Two characteristics, for many years complementary and yet in the end irreconcilable, have distinguished the corporate life of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On the one hand has stood the ideal of its permanence. "The intention is that this orchestra shall be made permanent here," Major Henry Lee Higginson coolly remarked on March 30, 1881, in his first announcement of the new band to a public which had seen orchestras come and orchestras go for the half of a century. Doubt and even some scoffing were the public's first answer. Yet there was a concept of stability here, with all the possibilities of artistic excellence which thrive on stability and starve on impermanence, that was in the end to conquer all challenging. There was a vision deeper than any the community had of the way in which great things can be done, gathered from years of intensive study of the Old World's way in music and magnetized by the force of unselfish purpose. An achievement of permanence was its guiding object.

On the other hand, though in direct consequence of its singleness of conception, there has been the character of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as more uniquely a monument to the fidelity and the generous heart of one individual, its sustainer and founder, than has ever been known in either the new or the old world of music. This followed not from material reasons only, though they were much, at a time when even the idea of being asked to buy season tickets for the new concerts was a surprise to the public. What was of essential importance was a strong and unswerving right hand at the helm in the years of the band's establishment. It is a revelation to read afresh Mr. Howe's history of the Symphony Orchestra and to see what crises of misconception, what conflicts of an as yet uninformed public opinion, the organization encountered at various phases of its development. They were all weathered, and weathered in such a way that strength was gained in the process. The piloting did it, the single and unchanging will, steering by certain fixed stars, and never daunted.

And yet, as we have suggested, there was a duality of condition here which could not forever be reconciled. The ideal of permanence and the ideal of single directorship cannot, in the nature of things, be served always together in equal proportion. Happily, however, it is not their differing issues which need come under comment now. Rather is it their fortunate integration that is told by the news of the day. The foundations of stability which Major Higginson has ever builded for the Boston Symphony Orchestra are the foundations on which the new trustees are given to build their structure of permanence. In a true sense of the word, such endurance has been always a part of his plan, and consequently it is not now found wanting. By similar token, the simplicity and directness of policy established by the founder is a further part of the new trustees' heritage. Those principles of an orchestra's management, which for so long went half-understood in the mind of the public, have now become common property, needing only the devotion of the new trustees, it would seem, to secure them in perpetuity. Architect's drawings as well as foundations are both at hand.

Prime among the principles set by Major Higginson, more surely than in any other orchestra throughout the country, has been the independence of the orchestra's leader. Entirely apart from late complications, this freedom has been largely responsible for the first place which the Boston Symphony enjoys among all American orchestras. From the gusts of popular prejudice, of conflicting tastes and of the intrigue of patronage which have so swept and harassed the conductors of other orchestras, the leader in Boston has been ever preserved, free to work in ardor and unity toward the highest goal present before him. In other words, the merit and the artistic worth of the music have been supreme.

This ideal of merit, however, simply leads into another ideal, transcending and fusing all. It was the ideal upon which the orchestra came into being, and was told in these words, informally but accurately reported from Major Higginson's speech in the Harvard Union on the occasion of his eightieth birthday, Nov. 18, 1914:

> A great many reasons have been given for my founding the Symphony Orchestra. Some said it was because I loved music, but it wasn't so much that I loved music as that I loved my own country. I felt that if the people of other countries had the best there was in music, we should also. It may be said that the reason I founded the orchestra was my passionate love for this nation, this great and glorious country that offers freedom of thought —all that is most wholesome in living, all that is most wholesome in life.

In this hour of America's trial, there are no words more important in the new trustees' published statement than those which signify their deep consciousness of this ideal's abiding presence in the trust they now accept.

Transcript Apr 27-1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

ROMANTIC MUSIC FILLS A WHOLE PROGRAMME

From Berlioz of Paris in the Thirties to Davison of Harvard, 1918—The "Fantastic Symphony" Revived After Long Interval—A "Tragic Overture" from the Cambridge Composer — Tucked Between Wolf's "Italian Serenade"

DESPITE simultaneous opera and a lagging symphonic season, the audience at Symphony Hall yesterday was without empty spaces. The friends of Dr. Davison present at the initial performance of his "Tragic Overture" in part explained the fact. Also, such first rate pieces as Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony and Wolf's "Italian Serenade" must have been in favor, after many second rate ones of Mr. Schmidt's choice. What is more, all three enjoyed a much finer and subtler performance, in accord with the traditional attainments of the orchestra, than might have been expected. Emphatically, the season is "looking up" before closing.

In the face of the general acceptance of Berlioz and Wolf as romantics, their two works standing yesterday side by side, bore a decided resemblance to things classical. There was the usual ardent manner of melody, of course, but still a certain economy of means, an intimate, delicate, refined beauty. They were true musical aristocrats, these two, with many similarities. Perhaps in violation of their marked individualities they have been too closely claimed by their respective peoples, although there is something distinctly Latin about Berlioz, in the best, historic sense, and something innately Teutonic in Wolf, again in the finest and most artistically precious sense.

Do not many of us approach Berlioz's music in entirely the wrong way? Is not the abundant morass of anecdote, which surrounds it, an oft fatal obstacle to its appreciation? Here is perhaps the only truly wise remark you may discover in his writings: "The programme does not absolutely need to be distributed among the audience, and only the titles of the five movements need be printed, as the Symphony can offer by itself (so the composer hopes) a musical interest independent of all dramatic intention." In other words, he guessed what was the truth—that his wild explanations would only lead his listeners entirely away from the real spirit of the music. But not only are programmes distributed among our audiences of today —there are explanations in three versions, and reading matter stretched out to some twenty-six pages. This painstaking insistence upon piteous intimacies and weaknesses of Berlioz's private life seems very short-sighted, for it blinds, distracts and distorts. It all amounts simply to this: Berlioz was possessed by his genius and driven hither and thither by its force. And that has happened to others—Beethoven went a whole night half-lathered and half shaven, scribbling the scheme of a quartet on his wall; Wagner's personal and love affairs are eccentric and unpleasant enough. But these composers were sufficiently great to keep their creative processes to themselves, until curious noses pried in. Whereas Beethoven wisely abstained from giving out programmes for his symphonies in raving prose (he admitted that some such programmes were in his head), Berlioz could not appreciate the virtue of silence behind the eloquence of pure music as such.

In this interest, only sweep out of mind all the endless data, and listen to the "Fantastic" Symphony without literary preoccupation or graphic imaginings, with an open slate of receptivity, bearing nothing but the five brief titles upon it. Then, perhaps, you will perceive that the absurd idea of a man describing his own decapitation is, by the logic of the music, anything but silly—indeed a most impressive climax. That the satanic orgy is actually curdling and weird—powerful as music. That the rambling subjects cohere into a musical form as plausible as a suite, with the leitmotiv of the nobly conceived love theme passing through moods and decorations in a wondrous manner. As before and since, the persuasion of genius justifies a fantasy which is not unwontedly erratic, as music goes. This man, you will say, was the perfect and absolute master of his music, in which interest it mattered little that he was the prey of his emotions. Rightly did he get excited over his "effects"! Never was such instrumental color in the wood-wind and adorning strings, in the special drums and bells and ophicleides; these instruments amply justify their inclusion. It was not fancy that lit upon them, but an unmistakable creative need, a need primarily musical. Marvelously fresh is the harmonic color too. For some reason it has not run the gamut of all composition as Wagner's speech; it lies as if still undiscovered. And for this reason it sounds as resplendently new as if a living genius might have written it, or one unborn. And this from a youth of twenty-seven in the year 1830, before the rise of Wagner! Perish all records of Smithsonian pettiness before this finest and most delicate music of love-dreams and fears. There is no musical meandering or excess—better accuse Wagner of that—but it follows good proportions, shapes the climaxes with discriminate reserve, moderation and remarkable lucidity.

It was a disciple of Gluck that found the classic repose of the pastoral adagio, with a dulcet dialogue of English horn and oboe as hauntingly beautiful as any pipings of Wagner's goatherds, while the filmy background is of the rarest. The march is truly splendid, whatever it might signify, and utterly free from the blatant and tawdry pomp which a Lisztian romantic would have given it. There is something aloof, something aristocratic about Berlioz's ornamental entwinement of a popular waltz-rhythm which suggests Debussy's way of purging Spanish dance music of all vulgarity. Indeed, you might find many mutual traits in the two colorists of France; of sical, chamber-music throughout, perpetually suggesting the string quartet which was its original plan. Wolf followed in the line of a dozen artists, whether musicians, painters or poets, who went to Italy in their youth to learn "sunshine." Yet the sunshine of Wolf, like Schumann's remained Teutonic, even through his "Italian Serenade," even through the light tarantella figure, playing against the tender song of the viola. A delicate, fanciful, lovely fragment, like one of Whistler's smaller sketches, the end dreaming off rather casually into silence. A great importance could never be attributed to it, but for all that it remains a rare piece of work.

Again, Dr. Davison was wiser than Berlioz—he staved off literal-minded commentators by stating that his Overture depicted nothing more specific than the mood which pervades Hawthorne's short story of "Rappacini's Daughter." And the story has a definite and intentional mood—a dark-hued romanticism in brilliant, luxuriant, exotic colorings, evoked by the description of the old man's garden of rich-colored flowers, his daughter, as bloomingly beautiful as one of them, the sinister, underlying note of magic in their cultivation—the tragedy which this force of evil brings to the love affair. Into such romantic vein music easily falls, and much existent music might be said to describe it. Dr. Davison found a stark, vivid and Strauss-sian music to fulfill his subject. The themes and particularly the chief one, are distinctive, fittingly amorous, adaptable to the various instruments.

Wherein Dr. Dawson most notably succeeded was just this depiction of mood. His general design was steadfast and clear —a melodic line always ardent, a coloring always dark to suggest the foreboding of the supernatural, the storm of the cataclysm gathering and finally bursting. If his instrumental manipulations were now and then labored that was the lesser episode from a generally sure hand, of direct and unambiguous procedure. There was a certain freedom and modernity of dissonance, particularly in the bolder tragedy, again clearly and cleanly worked out. The theme was finally enhtroned much in the manner of Strauss, and it took its place with unquestioned majesty. Friendly partiality and courtesy aside, a piece to enjoy and esteem on its own merits, and to place firmly above the usual run of native works, whether more pretentious or more trivial.

V. N. B.

American Apr 27-1918

HIGGINSON QUITS AS SYMPHONY HEAD

Major Henry L. Higginson has retired as patron and financial genius of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Announcement was made today that Major Higginson will no longer "bear the burden of the undertaking" and that the orchestra is being incorporated with nine prominent Boston men as trustees.

The trustees are now negotiating for engagement of a conductor as sucessor to Dr. Karl Muck, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as an alien enemy, who shall be welcome to the public and maintain the high musical standard of the orchestra.

This great change in the affairs of the orchestra was made known in the following statement sent out today

Continued on Page 2. Column 7.

Famous Orchestra to Be Continued Under Direction of Board of Trustees

Continued from First Page.

by M. A. DeWolfe Howe of the trustees:

TRUSTEES NAMED

Plans for the continuance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have within the past week taken a definite form, which may now be made public. As the end of the thirty-seventh season drew near it became apparent to Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the orchestra in 1881 and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking.

Reluctant to see it come to an end, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose. Application has accordingly been filed for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., with the following trustees: Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. de Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guanantees already secured towards placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be

Monitor April 27-1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY FOUNDER TO RETIRE

Maj. Henry L. Higginson Announces His Withdrawal From Activities of Orchestra in Favor of Board of Trustees

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—Maj. Henry L. Higginson, the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its sustainer for 37 years, has withdrawn from the direction of the institution and has handed his duties over to a board of trustees. An announcement given out today says that the trustees have filed an application to have the orchestra made an incorporated institution. Guarantees for the financial support of the orchestra's concerts are noted as having been secured, and arrangements for the appointment of a conductor are mentioned as being in progress. The announcement reads as follows:

"Plans for the continuance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have within the past week taken a definite form, which may now be made public. As the end of the thirty-seventh season drew near, it became apparent to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who founded the orchestra in 1881, and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking. Reluctant to see it come to an end, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose. Application has accordingly been filed for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. with the following trustees: Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen L. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made; but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Frederick P. Cabot, named first in the list of trustees, is a lawyer, living in Brookline, Mass. Ernest B. Dane is a banker, who lives in Brookline; he is president of the Cecilia Society. Mr. A. de Wolfe Howe is an editor; he published the book, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra," an historical sketch, in 1914. John E. Lodge, a son of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, is curator of the Chinese and Japanese departments in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. Frederick E. Lowell is a trustee, with business located in Boston. Arthur Lyman is a lawyer, with office in Boston. Galen L. Stone is a member of the firm of Hayden, Stone & Co., bankers, in Boston. Henry B. Sawyer is a manager of public service corporations, living in Brookline. Bentley W. Warren is a lawyer, with office in Boston.

It is understood that Mr. Cabot will act as president of the board of trustees of the orchestra and that Mr. Stone will be vice-president.

Herald April 27-1918

Authentic report has it that plans will soon be announced for the continuation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under a new and presumably permanent arrangement. Mr. Higginson, who has given long and liberally to its maintenance, feels that the time has come for others to take over the responsibility. And other public-spirited men are now ready to do just that.

Monitor April 27-1918

(02)

Boston Symphony Orchestra

BOSTON, Mass. — Many persons doubtless have been driven to take down from the shelf Hawthorne's "Mosses From an Old Manse" and to look up therein the tale "Rappaccini's Daughter," in the hope of finding what Archibald T. Davison was driving at in his "Tragic" overture, heard for the first time at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week. It is not a pleasant tale to base an overture on. It will be recalled that it tells of a beautiful girl nurtured on the poison exhaling from a strange plant produced by her father, Dr. Rappaccini, a learned doctor. She is so filled with the baleful influence that her very breath blights all living things with which she comes in contact. The inevitable young man has an antidote, made by a rival learned doctor, but the liquid on one who has been sustained by poison is fatal. Such is the story which inspired this overture. The music, according to the composer, is supposed merely to portray the mood or impression created by the narrative.

It is an interesting composition. The themes are stated clearly and the development is logical and firmly knit. It is not exactly a merry piece at best, and it was played even more lugubriously than its nature might seem to warrant. After the climax of the composition, a well-sustained mood of exaltation is held to the end. Dr. Davison has not posed as a modernist in his harmonies and progressions, but he has achieved something emphatically not of the past. Further revision in certain parts of the scoring in the interest of clarity of expression will probably be undertaken.

On the program in addition were the "Italian Serenade", for small orchestra, by Hugo Wolf, and the Berlioz "Fantastic" symphony No. 1, in C major. A thorough course in back-yard gardening might be beneficial to the lovesick swain whose troubles occupied Berlioz in this symphony.

Boston Concert Notes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the last concerts of the season in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, May 3, and Saturday evening, May 4. At the desire of Henry L. Higginson, the sustainer of the organization, the program will be devoted to two classics which have had more performances than any others in the repertory. They are Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

The year's work began in the week of Oct. 1, when the men spent several days in Camden, N. J., making phonographic records. The concert season in Boston opened on Friday afternoon, Oct. 12, and since that time 87 concerts have been given. The orchestra took part in six choral concerts, comprising two performances of Beethoven's ninth symphony, two performances of Mahler's second symphony and two performances of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion." It also gave two concerts in aid of its pension fund.

Following the custom of the past, the greater part of the men will be on call during the next nine weeks for the pop concerts in Symphony Hall. The first pop concert will be given on the evening of Monday, May 6, with Mr. Jacchia conducting. The program is as follows:

March, "Solid Men to the Front," Sousa; overture, "Mignon," Thomas; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; fantasia, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; "Le Marsellaise"; prelude to Act. I, "Carmen," Bizet; meditation, "Thaïs," Massenet; "Marche Miniature," Tschaikowsky; second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; "God Save the King"; selection, "Her Regiment," Herbert; intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; waltz, "Barcarole," Waldteufel; "American Patrol," Meacham; "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Traveller April 27-1918

Transcript April 27-1918

Higginson Quits Symphony; Row Over Muck the Cause

Advertiser April 27-1918

DAVISON TRAGEDY SYMPHONY FEATURE

Wolf's Italian Serenade and Berlioz Fantastic Also Well Played by Orchestra

The twenty-third concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon with the following program:

Davison (first time) ..... Tragic Overture
Wolf ..... Italian Serenade
Berlioz ..... Fantastic Symphony

The Symphony authorities have been kind to the native composer this season, and not a few really notable works of American composers have been given. Among the most interesting of these can be placed Dr. Davison's Tragic Overture, which is founded on Hawthorne's gruesome tale of Rappaccini and his daughter, whose life is sacrificed to the whim of a fanatical father.

This tale forms the background for strong musical speech contrasted with specific melodic phrase, and the tragic page has been translated by Dr. Davison with excellent judgment, unerring taste, and exceeding skill in the handling of thematic material and the arrangement of orchestral color.

The composer uses three themes, the second of which is of unusual beauty, and these are developed with a wealth of contrapuntal skill—counterpoint that flows as naturally as the brook flows its gentle course through the woods and fields. There are many bits of ingenious orchestration, notably a sombre passage for three horns with rhythmic pulsations on the drums, foreshadowing the tragic finale of the story.

The overture was exceedingly well received, in fact, met with instant response on the part of the audience.

WOLF'S SERENADE.

Wolf's Italian Serenade, which has not been played by the orchestra for ten years, is agreeable music. A notable passage was Mr. Ferir's lovely strain for the viola with much flute and string embroidery. The songs of the pifferari, or Roman peasants, as thrown about among the various solo instruments, were played with much delicacy of intonation.

The Fantastic Symphony well illustrates all the remarkable features of Berlioz, who was nothing if not unconventional, a veritable pathbreaker in new ideas of orchestral tone-painting, who broke with all tradition and set free the speech of the many orchestral voices.

This work is, beyond everything else, temperamental, and only the conductor of temperamental mood can make it effective. The first movement with its strangely angular "fixed idea" or musical picture of Berlioz' lady love, was given a rather conventional reading, while the ball room scene was a shade too precise; excellent for dancing, but a more rubato tempo with more distinguishing beauty of phrase, would have added to the tonal effect.

SHEPHERD SONG EFFECTIVE

The celebrated "Scene in the Fields" with English horn and distant oboe, like two shepherds on opposite sides of a valley, piping to each other, as interpreted by Mr. Schmidt, contained no special adventures and the composer could as well have portrayed a pleasant afternoon in one of the parks of Paris. The well-known passage at the close where the one shepherd sings his theme and the other fails to respond was very effective.

The concert will be repeated tonight and the season will close next week with two inspired works, Schubert's unfinished Symphony and Beethoven's Eroica.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson

Herald April 27

SYMPHONY PLAYS BOSTON MAN'S MUSIC

Davison's Tragic Overture on 23d Concert Program

The 23d concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernst Schmidt, conductor, took place yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Davison, Tragic Overture, first performance; Wolf, Italian Serenade for Small Orchestra; Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony, No. 1, C major, op. 14a.

Mr. Davison's piece was played here for the first time. A graduate of the Boston Latin school and Harvard University, he studied the organ and composition in Paris with Widor. He is the author of "Hero and Leander," a symphonic poem; a Romance; a set of concert waltzes, "The Gondoliers"; pianoforte pieces, songs and choruses. The overture was suggested by Hawthorne's story, "Rappaccini's Daughter." There is no attempt to follow the details of the story, to portray the various characters. The music is merely an expression of the mood awakened by the narrative. The composer's sense of tragedy as expressed by the music is neither strongly compelling nor dramatically intense. The overture is melancholy rather than tragic, lacking in force, an exhibition of well ordered emotion controlled by a keen regard for form.

Both the other compositions on the program, Wolf's Italian Serenade and the Fantastic Symphony by Berlioz, inspired pages in which the romanticist celebrated various phases of his passion for Harriet Smithson, were thrice familiar to the audience.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week, the last of the season, will be as follows: Shubert, Symphony in B Minor, "Unfinished," and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat, "Eroica."

Globe April 27-1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Yesterday's Symphony program began with the first performance of Dr Davidson's "Tragic" overture, followed by Wolf's Italian Serenade for small orchestra and ending with the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony. Dr Davidson, who is one of the musical faculty at Harvard University, is well known as a skilled musician and instructor and this work, which is of more ambitious design than those made known in the past, shows him again in a highly favorable light.

The overture is intended merely to suggest an impression made by Hawthorne's dramatic story of "Rappaccini's Daughter," and in illustration of the scheme the composer has handled the instrumentation with excellent effect. While showing at times an influence of the Wagner school in treatment of the pretissimo passages, which nowadays seems unavoidable, there is the stamp of a welcome musical independent displayed in the composition. The work was cordially received.

Wolf's delightful serenade was played with all needed piquancy and color, the frequent solo bits given the lighter instruments making charming contrasts with the work of the groups.

The fantastic Berlioz symphony received due consideration at the hands of conductor Schmidt and his players. The musical descriptions, which vary from pastorial romance down to the dreams of an opium victim and Walpurgis' night revels, were set forth with a sardonic force and beauty of execution that made the performance one of great merit, though a bit deafening in its strenuous passages.

"Father" of Orchestra Quits After Muck Controversy

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony orchestra in 181, his support ever since making the orchestra the leading musical organization in the United States, has severed conections with the institution.

His decision, made some time ago, and probably as a direct result of the arrest and internment of Dr. Karl Muck, for many years leader of the orchestra, was announced today in a statement issued by M. A. DeWolfe Howe of 26 Brimmer street.

Mr. Howe is one of the trustees of the new corporation seeking incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc., and planning to continue Boston's greatest musical undertaking.

The other trustees of the new company are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

Director Is Defended

When the attacks on Dr. Muck were started in Providence, it was maintained that Dr. Muck had refused to conduct the Symphony orchestra playing the "Star Spangled Banner." Maj. Higginson assumed all responsibility for the refusal to change the program advertised.

In interviews granted Maj. Higginson said if his Boston Symphony orchestra were molested and its artistic tone ruffled by newspaper attacks on Dr. Muck or other members of the company, he would discontinue the Symphony orchestra.

It soon became evident to his friends that Maj. Higginson was greatly upset at the arrest of Dr. Muck and was determined to carry out his decision to disband the orchestra.

Efforts to dissuade him met with a reception typical of the major. It was then that his friends sought a compromise, finally obtaining his consent to the formation of a company to carry on the work of hte orchestra.

Formal Announcement

The formal announcement of the retirement of Maj. Higginson was as follows:

"Plans for the continuance of the Boston Symphony orchestra have taken a definite form, which may now be made public.

"As the end of the 37th season drew near, it became apparent to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who founded the orchestra in 1881 and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking.

"Reluctant to see it come toanend, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose.

"Application has accordingly been filed for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., with the following trustees: Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

As to Conductor's Desk

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

—Buy More Bonds—

MAJOR HIGGINSON RETIRES

Gives Symphony Orchestra Formal Reorganization

Incorporated Trustees to Take Full Direction

Funds Guaranteed for Its Secure Support

Choice of Conductor Falls to the Board

But Current Season Goes Without Change

Frederick P. Cabot Will Be Board's Head

Prominent Bostonians Associated with Him

The following official statement of the Boston Symphony's reorganization was issued this afternoon.

"Plans for the continuation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have within the past week taken a definite form, which may now be made public. As the end of the thirty-seventh season drew near, it became apparent to Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the orchestra in 1881, and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking. Reluctant to see it come to an end, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose. Application has accordingly been filed for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., with the following trustees: Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured towards placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made; but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

It is understood that the authority of the new board of trustees bears no relationship whatever to the current season. The 1918 "season" continues not only through the last regular concert on the night of May 4, but also through the "Pop" concerts, which close on July 6. For all of this period Major Higginson will remain in customary control.

The Personnel of the New Board

The president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the Hon. Frederick P. Cabot. In February, 1916, Mr. Cabot retired from the practice of law to become justice of the Boston Juvenile Court, upon an appointment made by Governor McCall. During his two years on the bench, he has extended the usefulness of the court by organizing "The Judge Baker Foundation," a medico-psychological clinic for the helpful analysis of especially difficult or doubtful cases. Judge Cabot was born in Brookline on June 16, 1868. He took his A. B. at Harvard in 1890 and his A. M. and LL.B. there three years later. After serving for a time as assistant United States district attorney, he became partner in the law firm of Hurlburt, Jones & Cabot, with which he was associated until his return to public office. Judge Cabot is a member of the corporate board and the visiting board of Radcliffe College, and is treasurer of Dummer Academy. He is president of two manufacturing companies and director of another.

Ernest Blaney Dane has had an active career as a banker, and now holds the presidency of the Brookline Trust Company, as well as directorship in other banking institutions. He has expressed his public interests as treasurer of the Massachusetts Forestry Association, as member of the board of selectmen of the town of Brookline, as a trustee of the Danvers State Hospital, and as a member of the executive committee of the Boston Floating Hospital. Mr. Dane is well known as a lover of music, and was the donor of the organ in the Harvard Club, Boston.

M. A. de Wolfe Howe's place among the

Continued on Page Two

John Ellerton Lodge, who studied at Harvard from 1896-1898, has for some time been curator of the Chinese and Japanese departments of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, where his executive and administrative capacities have commanded attention, in supplement of his specialized expertcy in the art of the Orient. His highly developed capabilities in music, the product both of an inborn genius and of much scholarly study, are well known. Mr. Lodge is a son of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge.

It is understood that the treasurer and clerk of the new Symphony board will be Frederick Eldridge Lowell. Since graduation from Harvard in 1895, Mr. Lowell has been widely active as a trustee for various large corporate and private interests. He is a brother of Guy Lowell, the architect.

Arthur Lyman, lawyer and trustee, is identified with many industrial, financial and real estate development concerns both in New England and throughout the American Northwest, extending as far as Seattle. He was graduated from Harvard in 1883. His public service has included a term as the mayor of Waltham. He is a trustee of the Boston Athenæum.

Henry Buckland Sawyer, born in 1871, is treasurer of the Stone & Webster management Association, and as banker and manager of public service corporations has been given similar office in industrial and electric companies throughout the country. He has shown more than usual interest in the philanthropic field, having served as director of the Hale House Association, as member of the council of the South End House and of the corporation of the Brimmer School, and also as trustee of the Boston Floating Hospital. He is a member of the corporation of Simmons College. For a long time he was active in Battery A, field artillery regiment, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia.

Mr. Galen L. Stone will take rank as vice president of the new Symphony Orchestra board. Apart from his well-known activity in the directorship of many important transportation companies and in banking circles through the house of Hayden, Stone & Co., he has given broadly generous, yet always unobtrusive, support to many causes of humane and public value. He is a trustee of the State Infirmary and State Farm. He has especially furthered the work of the South End House and of efforts associated with it. He is a trustee and a member of the executive committee of Wellesley College.

Bentley Wirt Warren, senior member of the law firm of Warren, Garfield, Whiteside & Lamson, was graduated from Williams College with the class of 1885. As a trustee of the college during a long term of years, he has given its interests unstinted service. Apart from his extensive private practice as attorney for street railway interests, he has served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and for two years as a member of the State Civil Service Commission. Mr. Warren is now dividing his time between Boston and Washington, where he has volunteered to assist the United States Fuel Administration as its chief legal adviser.

new trustees of the Symphony re-affirms an intimacy of relationship which the public mind has long attached to him, especially since the publication, in 1914, of his historical book of "The Boston Symphony Orchestra." His other works as author and editor are legion. At present he is carrying the editorship both of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin and of the Graduates' Magazine. He followed undergraduate courses at Lehigh University and also at Harvard, where, in 1888, he was made Master of

Transcript April 27-1918

Maj. Higginson Retires

(Courtesy Houghton, Mifflin Co.)

The "Founder and Sustainer" of the Symphony Orchestra After the Portrait Bust by Bela L. Pratt, Now in the Foyer of Symphony Hall

THE ORCHESTRA'S HISTORY

Its Course from a Dream of the Founder's Youth to Its Present Full Flower, in Brief Review

No brief sketch of the thirty-seven distinguished years during which Major Henry L. Higginson has controlled the destinies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra can encompass the story, in its full values, as told by M. A. de Wolfe Howe in his history of "The Boston Symphony Orchestra." Its beginnings, indeed, run far behind that day in March, 1881, when Mr. Higginson first announced to the public of Boston his plan for a permanent orchestra. They call for a study of the founder's spirit and purpose as these were manifest in the years from 1856 to 1860, when Mr. Higginson was ardently devoting himself to the study of music in Vienna and in other musical centres of Europe.

There the man who was later to establish a place of first importance in the world of business and to become the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, lived and labored through nearly four precious years of his youth.

"When I came out here," he wrote to his father*, "I had no plans, as you know. Trade was not satisfying to the inner man as a life occupation. Out here I have consulted, and have decided to try to learn something of music ex- and internally, i. e., of playing and of harmony or thorough-bass. If I find that I am not profiting by my work, I shall throw it up and go home. If I gain something, I shall stick to it. You will ask, 'What is to come of it all if successful?' I do not know. But this is clear, I have then improved my own powers, which is every man's duty. I have a resource to which I can always turn with delight, however the world may go with me. I am so much the stronger, the wider, the wiser, the better for my duties in life."

Of the physical injury which overtook Mr. Higginson, in consequence of over-long and over-diligent practice under conditions which no ordinary man would have faced without early capitulation, there is not need here to speak, although it was directly bound up with his ultimate decision in March 1, 1860, to return home. He wrote

Up to the present time almost I have hoped to be able to play, but it cannot be, and therefore I . . . have determined to leave here. If you consider the whole thing, and remember that I enjoy in the depths of my soul music as nothing else, you'll easily comprehend my stay.

To give the narrative once more to Mark Howe, "The native country to which he returned was on the eve of war. What he could give at once was himself; and this gift he made, going early to the front, and fighting hard and late." But there did not disappear the hope he had conceived in Europe, "to see an orchestra in Boston which should play as well as the great orchestras of Europe and give conctrts at a reasonable price." Rather this purpose was strengthened. In Major Higginson's words:

That war taught a great many men that if we were to have a country worthy of the name, we must work for it, educate it, as well as fight for it, and this duty lay upon every individual citizen, be it man or woman. . . .

The end of the Civil War left me without an occupation or money, and with a wife whom it was my first duty to suport; so for man yyears my hope for music lay asleep. At last, in one or two years ending in 1880, luck had turned my way, and enabled me to take up this project in earnest early in 1881.

The lines which the founder drew upon the establishment were clear and simple. Particularly they laid it down "that the conductor was to have the sole artistic direcaion of everything; and that, in my opinion, nothing but constant, steady, intelligent playing and rehearsing under one conductor alone would make the orchestra good." The plans fixed also the charge of reasonable prices, taking fully into account the founder's willingness to make good whatever deficit was sustained, to seek no profit whatever, and at the same time to write nothing don to loss, if only the orchestra should be found to fulfil its mission.

All this seemed both certain and comprehensible. And yet the vicissitudes which the orchestra had still to undergo before its place could be held as established ran into a series of length defying the present chronicle.

Suffie it to say that these complications ranged from petty difficulties arising from popular differences of opinion, to the weighty questions of holding and securing the preëminently right men for the conductorship, and to the importnt matter of building a new hall for the concerts when it became evident that the old Music Hall could no longer be utilized. Of the problem then posed, Boston's Symphony Hall was the solution, the funds for which were contributed by public-spirited donors. Its construction has given Boston an enduring structure almost unrivalled for its purpose in its kind.

The conductors secured during the thirty-seven years were the following:

Georg Henschel	1881–1884
William Gericke	1884–1889
Arthur Nikisch	1889–1893
Emil Paur	1893–1898
Wilhelm Gericke	1898–1906
Karl Muck	1906–1908
Max Fiedler	1908–1912
Karl Muck	1912–1918

With even more certainty than at the time when the words were written, Mr. Howe's concluding remarks may be reprinted now:

All possible steps have been taken to insure the permanence of the orchestra. If in the future the public of other cities than Boston shall do less to suport it than in the past, it will be, in no small degree, because the Boston Orchestra has helped to point the way toward the public and private maintenance of similar institutions throughout the country. This, in itself, is an achievement repaying much of effort and sacrifice. All the other reimbursements are beyond enumeration. What the public has gained, beside its enjoyment of the fruits of a garden lovingly planted and faithfully tended, has been the spectacle of a dream fulfilled, a vision realized through unswerving faith in the ideal from which it sprang.

*This and other quotations are from "The Boston Symphony Orchestra," an historical sketch by M. H. de Wolfe Howe. Houghton Mifflin Co., 1914.

Post April 28-1918

LAST SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the last concerts of the season of 1917-1918 in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon, May 3, and Saturday evening, May 4. At Mr. Higginson's desire the programme will be devoted to two classics, which have always held a most honorable place in the repertoire of the orchestra since its organization; in fact, the two symphonies to be played have had more performances than any others.

These are Shubert's "Unfinished" and Beethoven's "Eroica." The Shubert will be played first and will be followed after the intermission by the "Eroica."

The regular concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened on Friday afternoon, Oct. 12, and since that time 87 concerts have been given. In addition to its regular Symphony concerts here it took part in six choral concerts, two performances of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, two performances of Mahler's Second Symphony and two performances of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion." It also gave its usual two concerts in aid of the pension fund of the orchestra.

Following the custom of the past the greater part of the orchestra, over 80 men, will be on call during the next nine weeks of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. The orchestra actually employed will number 75 men. It is only the principals of the various choirs who are not required to play in the Pop concerts.

THE POPS

Agide Jacchia, the talented conductor, who had success with Pop concerts a year ago and who is to lead them the coming season of nine weeks, will arrive in Boston within a day or two, making final arrangements for the concerts, which open Monday evening, May 6. The greater part of the winter Mr. Jacchia has spent in New York and a part of his spare time he has devoted to making some new orchestral arrangements of excerpts from opera, in which kind of work he excels. It is the purpose of the Pops this year, naturally, to emphasize the conditions in which we are living, and every night there will be played some of the more successful war songs. As already announced, after having given it a thorough trial last season, it has been decided to abandon the plan of having a singer as a soloist at each concert. Long before the end of the season it was evident that the patrons of the Pops were not enthusiastic over these soloists, but as contracts had been made it was necessary to carry through the season as originally planned. This year, therefore, the Pops will go back to the traditional programme of 12 numbers, divided into three parts, thus giving two intermissions.

The concert will open Monday night, May 6, with John Philip Sousa's latest march, "Solid Men to the Front." The programme in its entirety is as follows:

March, "Solid Men to the Front" ..... Sousa
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ..... Leoncavallo
"Le Marseillaise."
Prelude to Act I., "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Meditation, "Thais" ..... Massenet
"Marche Miniature" ..... Tschaikowsky
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ..... Liszt
"God Save the King."
Selection, "Her Regiment" ..... Herbert
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .. Mascagni
Waltz, "Le Barcarole" ..... Waldteufel
"American Patrol" ..... Meacham
"The Star Spangled Banner."

Post. April-28-1918

MAJOR HIGGINSON QUITS SYMPHONY

Transfers Future Management of Famous Orchestra to Board of Trustees—Created and Backed Noted Band

The announcement yesterday that Major Henry L. Higginson had decided to give up the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and transfer the future management of this organization to a board of trustees composed of art lovers and personal friends, of this city, came like a thunderclap to the hundreds of Boston Symphony patrons in Boston and New England.

THE MUCK INCIDENT

Of late years the personal labor and responsibility involved in the backing and maintenance of this orchestra, which he founded and by which Boston became famous musically throughout the world, had been a very considerable strain on the major, and it is believed that the anxieties and misunderstandings incident on the recent arrest and internment of Dr. Muck hastened his resolve to abandon the great enterprise which was his personal and immortal creation.

Personnel of New Board

The personnel of the new board which will control the destinies of the orchestra is as follows: Frederick P. Cabot, president; Galen L. Stone, vice-president; Frederick Eldridge Lowell, treasurer and secretary; Ernest Blaney Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, author of the historical book, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra"; John Ellerton Lodge, Arthur Lyman, Henry Buckland Sawyer and Bentley Wirt Warren.

These men are noted in art, education, literature and finance. Mr. Cabot, who took his degrees of A. B., A. M. and LL. B. at Harvard, was successively assistant district attorney, partner in the law firm of Hurlburt, Jones & Cabot, member of the corporate board and visiting board of Radcliffe College and treasurer of Dummer Academy, justice of the Boston Juvenile Court, organizer of "The Judge Baker Foundation."

Mr. de Wolfe Howe, in addition to his reputation as the author of "The Boston Symphony Orchestra," is the author and editor of many publications, being at present editor of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin and the Graduates' Magazine. He took undergraduate courses at Lehigh University and at Harvard and received his degree of A. M. at Harvard in 1880. John Ellerton Lodge, like his colleagues a Harvard man, is curator of the Chinese and Japanese departments of the Museum of Fine Arts; a serious and accomplished student of music, a specialist in Oriental art. He is the son of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge.

Frederick E. Lowell is trustee for various private and corporate interests, and the brother of Guy Lowell, the architect.

Arthur Lyman, a Harvard graduate in 1883, is a lawyer and trustee identified with industrial, financial and real estate developments in New England and through the northwest, as far as Seattle, including the trusteeship of the Boston Atheneum. Mr. Lyman was for a period Mayor of Waltham.

Henry Buckland Sawyer, treasurer of the firm of Stone & Webster Management Association, has been identified with many public service corporations, philanthropic enterprises and the like. He is a member of the corporation of Simmons College and has served in Battery A, Field Artillery Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia.

Galen Stone, director in many banks and transportation houses through his connection with Hayden, Stone & Co., is a trustee of the State Infirmary and State Farm, and trustee and member of the executive committee of Wellesley College.

Mr. Warren of the firm of Warren, Garfield, Whiteside and Lawson, is a Williams College graduate, 1885. He recently volunteered to assist the United States Fuel Administration as its principal legal advisor. He has served as attorney for street railway interests, been a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, and for two years was a member of the State Civil Service Commission.

Announces New Regime

The official statement of the new board of directors, who have filled application for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., is as follows:

"Plans for the continuation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have within the past week taken a definite form, which may now be made public. As the end of the 37th season drew near, it became apparent to Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the orchestra in 1881, and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking. Reluctant to see it come to an end, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose. Application has accordingly been filed for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., with the following trustees: Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen L. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured towards placing it upon a sound financial basis. Then enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Looking for New Conductor

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made; but negotiations are now in progress, which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

It is understood that the authority of the new board of trustees bears no relationship whatever to the current season. The 1918 season continues not only through the last regular concert on the night of May 4, but also through the "Pop" concerts, which close on July 6. For all of this period Major Higginson will remain in customary control.

Globe April 28 1918

MAJ HIGGINSON TO GIVE UP ORCHESTRA

Trustees Will Continue Boston Symphony

Negotiations in Progress for Engaging Conductor

Maj Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra 38 years ago, will sever his connection with the organization at the end of this season. The orchestra will be continued by a board of trustees. A statement in regard to the change, issued yesterday, says:

"Plans for the continuance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have within the past week taken a definite form, which may now be made public. As the end of the 37th season drew near, it became apparent to Maj Henry L. Higginson, who founded the orchestra in 1881 and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking. Reluctant to see it come to an end, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose.

"Application has accordingly been filed for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc, with the following trustees: Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured towards placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Advertiser April 28-1918

HIGGINSON TO RETIRE FROM SYMPHONY

Arturo Toscanini May Be Secured As Conductor by Trustees

Major Henry Lee Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881 because of his passionate love for America and because he "felt that if the people of other countries had the best there was in music, we should also," will retire from the control of the Orchestra before the opening of another season. He will be succeeded by a corporation of "certain citizens and friends."

Dr. Muck's successor, as director of the Symphony, the ADVERTISER was informed last night, may be Arturo Toscanini, one time conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company and now of Rome. According to the ADVERTISER'S informant, the place has been offered to Signor Toscanini, whose reply has not been received.

TRUSTEES TO CONTROL.

The affairs of the orchestra after the present season will be in the hands of a Board of Trustees consisting of nine members, as follows:

Frederick P. Cabot, justice of the Boston Juvenile Court.

Ernest Blaney Dane, president of the Brookline Trust Company, a well known lover of music; donor of the organ in the Harvard Club, Boston.

M. A. de Wolfe Howe, editor of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin and the Graduates' Magazine, and author of the historical book, "The Boston Boston Symphony Orchestra."

John Ellerton Lodge, son of the United States Senator; curator of the Chinese and Japanese departments of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Eldridge Lowell, Harvard, '95, trustee for various corporate and private interests.

Arthur Lyman, attorney; trustee of the Boston Athenaeum; one time Mayor of Waltham.

Henry Buckland Sawyer, treasurer of the Stone & Webster Management Association; trustee of the Floating Hospital; director of Hale House Association; member of the council of South End House.

Galen L. Stone, member of the banking house of Hayden, Stone & Co.; member of the executive committee of Wellesley College; trustee of the State Infirmary and State Farm.

Bentley Wirt Warren, senior member of the law firm of Warren, Garfield, Whiteside & Lamson; attorney for street railway interests, long a director of Williams College, from which he was graduated in 1885.

TO COMPLETE SEASON.

While an application for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., has been duly filed at the State House in the names of these gentlemen, it is clearly understood that, until the end of the present season—some time after the closing of the "Pop" concerts on July 6, Major Higginson will exercise his customary control.

Formal announcement of the new arrangement was made in the following words:

Plans for the continuance of the the Boston Symphony Orchestra have within the past week taken a definite form, which may now be made public.

As the end of the thirty-seventh season drew near, it became apparent to Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Orchestra in 1881 and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking.

Reluctant to see it come to an end, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose.

SEEKING CONDUCTOR.

The Trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured towards placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the Orchestra to the life of their city and country.

With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made; but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the Orchestra.

ARTURO TOSCANINI, one time conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who may be new Symphony Orchestra head.

Post April 28-1918

SYMPHONY CHANGES

Yesterday's announcement that with the close of the present season Major Henry L. Higginson will give up the active management—one might well say proprietorship—of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was hardly unexpected. Hints that such a step was in mind have been many. Major Higginson himself has said in time before this that he thought he ought to be relieved of the care and the financial responsibility that he voluntarily assumed and which, we may add, he has borne so splendidly all these years. Whatever the immediate cause of the action, it cannot be said to be radical or unlooked-for.

As for the future of the great orchestra, there need be no misgivings. Controlled by a corporation made up for the present of many eminent Bostonians of financial ability and love of the best in music, the band should go on its way into the years to come with its resources unimpaired, its popularity unlessened and its musical standards never lowered.

In taking leave of the noble organization he called together and for years supported, Major Higginson may well and properly feel pride and may feel, too, that the patrons of the Symphony concerts realize the debt of gratitude they owe him, a debt that can never be fully repaid.

Herald April 28-1918

MAJ. HIGGINSON QUITS SYMPHONY

Orchestra Will Be Continued Under Direction of the Trustees

ACTION OF MUCK HASTENED CHANGE

Maj. Henry L. Higginson has severed his connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he founded and which he has sustained since 1881. The world-famed musical organization will be continued under direction of a board of trustees. Application for incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been filed. Announcement of taking over the affairs of the orchestra was made yesterday by the new trustees.

Expressions of sympathy with the veteran soldier and music lover were heard on all hands yesterday, for it was taken for granted that his withdrawal is a direct result of the sensational series of incidents starting with the refusal of Dr. Karl Muck, the former leader, to incorporate the "Star Spangled Banner" in the program at Providence some months ago, and finding its finale in the internment of the German musician.

Muck Controversy Cause

While the new trustees are silent on the subject, and Maj. Higginson refused to make a statement, continuation of the orchestra is understood to be a compromise. When the attacks on Dr. Muck were started in Providence, Maj. Higginson assumed all responsibility for refusal to change the program, and declared that if his orchestra was molested and its artistic tone ruffled by attacks on its leader or other members of the company he would discontinue it. The necessary newspaper accounts of developments in the Muck case are said to have greatly upset the major. He determined to wind up the affairs of the orchestra, but was persuaded by his friends to allow it to be continued by others.

The most important duty before the new board of nine trustees is the appointment of a leader to succeed Muck. Since the arrest of Muck the musical affairs have been directed by Ernst Schmidt.

The formal announcement of the retirement of Maj. Higginson was made yesterday morning by M. A. DeWolfe Howe. It follows:

Announcement of Plan

"Plans for the continuance of the Boston Symphony orchestra have taken a definite form, which may now be made public.

"As the end of the 37th season drew near, it became apparent to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who founded the orchestra in 1881 and has sustained it ever since, that he must no longer bear the burden of the undertaking.

"Reluctant to see it come to an end, he has consented to have it continued under the direction of certain citizens and friends associated for this purpose.

"Application has accordingly been filed for the incorporation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., with the following trustees: Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

As to Conductor's Desk

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Judge Cabot is a graduate of Harvard College and the Harvard law school. He is a member of the visiting board of Radcliffe College treasurer of Dummer Academy president of two manufacturing companies and director of another.

Ernest Blaney Dane is president of the Brookline Trust Company. He was donor of the organ in the Harvard Club.

M. A. DeWolfe Howe is a Harvard master of arts and is editor of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin and of the Graduates Magazine.

John Ellerton Lodge is son of U. S. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. He is curator of the Chinese and Japanese departments of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Frederick Eldridge Lowell probably will be treasurer and clerk of the new Symphony board. He graduated from Harvard in 1895, and since has been trustee for large corporate and private interests.

Arthur Lyman graduated from Harvard in 1883. He has been active as lawyer and trustee in financial, industrial and real estate development concerns.

Henry Buckland Sawyer is treasurer of the Stone & Webster Management Association, and is known as a banker and manager of public service corporations. He is a member of the corporation of Simmons College, and has has been identified in the past with Massachusetts militia affairs.

Galen L. Stone will be vice-president of the new corporation. He is a member of the firm of Hayden, Stone & Co., and director in many transportation companies.

Bentley Wirt Warren is senior member of the law firm of Warren, Garfield, Whiteside & Lamson. He has served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives, and has volunteered to act as chief legal adviser to the state fuel administrator.

Advertiser April 28-1918

HAD MUCK ON OTHER CHARGES

Preferred to Take Punishment in Espionage Case

EXPLAINS LEADER'S SILENCE, IS BELIEF

Said to Have Violated Federal Act Covering Serious Offence

What purports to be the real explanation of the mystery surrounding the arrest and internment of Dr. Karl Muck of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his subsequent failure, much to the chagrin of his Boston friends, to make any effort to clear himself, has seeped out of the keeping of the few to whom it had been intrusted and is now going the rounds in the "inner" circles of Boston.

When the Federal authorities, contrary to their usual practice, refrained from making public the exact nature of the grounds for the sudden arrest of the great musician, his Boston friends, reluctant to believe that he had abused the hospitality of the United States, looked confidently to Muck himself for a statement of his position.

Muck's passive acceptance of the situation and his failure to offer his friends the explanation they thought was due them has served to alienate every feeling of sympathy they had previously entertained for him in his trying position.

FACED OTHER CHARGES.

The reason for his apparently inexplicable silence has now been advanced on what appears to be good authority. Muck's quiet submission to arrest and confinement as an alien enemy was due, says this report, not so much to the strength of the grounds the authorities had for basing their charges of violation of the espionage act as to his proved trangression of a Federal act covering offences of an entirely different character than those for which he is being confined.

For many months, it is said, agents of the Department of Justice, morally certain that Dr. Muck was working against the interests of the United States, trailed and shadowed him in an effort to trap him. But Muck, it is reported, was wary to a degree in matters of this kind and the authorities were unable to lay any major offence definitely to his door.

But in their investigation and constant shadowing, it is said, they discovered that Muck was repeatedly violating another Federal act, and itwas this that gave them the hold upon him that resulted in his final downfall. It is understood that when he was arrested, Muck, confident that he had successfully covered up his tracks, was inclined to assume a defiant attitude, but that when he learned that the authorities had him cornered on the other charge he decided to "take his medicine" on the espionage charge rather than on what the other charge would involve.

It is also stated that the authorities, in their investigation of the other charge, obtained possession of letters from Muck which served to strengthen, if not clinch, their case against him on the espionage charge.

TOOK PUNISHMENT.

The espionage charge had precedence, of course, and Muck, it is understood, decided to face it in tacit admission of guilt rather than meet the other charge that would certainly have been preferred against him had he been able to find a loophole in the espionage case against him.

The latter case was a fairly strong one, however, it is understood, although Muck may not have been detected at any glaring violations of the law. In connection with it interesting reports have come from Seal Harbor, Me., concerning Muck's ac-

Muck Faced Other Federal Charges

Advertiser May 1-1918

SYMPHONY TO KEEP UP HIGH STANDARD

Policy Will Be Unchanged by Retirement of Major H. L. Higginson

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

The retirement of Major H. L. Higginson from the management of our Symphony Orchestra, and the placing of the organization in the charge of a board of trustees, will not alter the standing and the policy of the concerts in any degree.

Nevertheless, in view of the changes impending, the choice of a new conductor, the replanning of the concert tours, etc., a brief retrospect of what the Smphony has done may be apropos.

When it began its concerts, Saturday evening, October 22, 1881, its generous founder took Saturday night for the concerts, to avoid crowding two other symphonic organizations which were then having quite a musical war—Saturday evening not being recognized at that time as a concert night.

George Henschel was the first conductor. He was not highly trained as a leader, but he was one of the best of program makers. After three years there came a new broom which swept very clean. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke was a very conservative musician, but a superb drillmaster. He it was who built the orchestra into thoroughness.

SECURED YOUNG MEN.

He found a number of veterans in the ranks, and he saw at once that the orchestra could not grow if it became an Old Men's Musical Home. He ruthlessly turned out many of the weaker members and brought an entire band of young artists from Vienna and Berlin. His idea was to have these men grow up with the archestra through many years, and this actually took place. Kneisel, Roth, Schuecker and others became the backbone of the new orchestra, and the organization remained practically without change of its membership for a very long time; this being a great factor in its growth to perfection.

After five years Mr. Gericke went to Europe, and a man who has since became world famous became conductor—Mr. Arthur Nikisch. This conductor was exactly the opposite of Mr. Gericke. He was a "prima donna" species of leader, a virtuose who played upon the orchestra as a Paderewski upon the piano. His programs were most interesting and his readings elastic and masterly, but the fine discipline of Mr. Gericke's regime began to relax, and a long continuance of his peculiar rule would have taken the orchestra out of the first rank. Yet Mr. Nikisch was the most poetic conductor of the entire list.

In 1893 there came a very hearty German conductor, Mr. Emil Paur. He was very fine in some of the modern readings. He could give a Richard Strauss composition, or Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphony, as none before his time. There was some lack of finesse in his work, but the orchestra did not retrograde, and the programs were quite radical and modern.

ALL GERMAN LEADERS.

In 1898 Mr. Gericke was recalled to the conductorship, and the severe routine which has made our orchestra so great was emphatically resumed. But the conservative programs aroused some opposition, and not all of the auditors shared Mr. Gericke's classical views. Yet this brief article may emphasize the fact that it was Mr. Gericke who made the Boston Symphony the foremost American orchestra, even the greatest in the world.

From 1906 to 1908 Dr. Karl Muck was the conductor. In 1908 there came Max Fiedler, a very enthusiastic leader and a man who made most interesting programs. He continued until 1912, when Dr. Muck came back to the position, continuing until very recently.

It will be noticed that each of these conductors has been a German. We may hope that with the new season the list may be open to all the nations. There are very great Russian, French and Italian (and even English) conductors who would be glad to take the post. We doubt if there is any American conductor of such rank as Rachmaninoff, Gabrilowitch, Toscanini. Yet we would gladly welcome an occasional appearance of a native conductor as "guest." At present our orchestra is like a perfect instrument. Any artist can play upon it with great effect.

We only hope that its discipline may be held to its present high standard, that the instrument may not deteriorate in any future hands that may control it, and that Boston may still continue to own such a consummate product of art, which it has taken years to build and which, once destroyed, can probably

Record Apr 29-1918

Weeding Out Enemy Aliens

Why was it left until the close of the season, to weed out the enemy aliens from the Metropolitan Opera Company and the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We assume that in the reorganization of our Symphony orchestra this important matter is to be treated as the public unmistakably demands.

We are gratified at the prospect of preservation of the local orchestra under leadership cleaner than that of Karl Muck. We are gratified at the announcement of the Metropolitan management that a score or so of alien enemy members are to be dropped. We do not find it praiseworthy that these reforms were delayed until the close of the season, or until forced by external pressure.

The United States has been at war with Germany for more than a year. The impropriety of retaining enemy alien members of so prominent and important organizations as these two was apparent to thoughtful Americans long ago. This public sentiment, wholesome and necessary for the vigor of this Republic, was manifested with sharp insistence by many cities visited, or included in the list of intended visits, by the local orchestra. In the case of the Metropolitan there was significance in the development of one or two specific cases. But neither organization met this legitimate criticism in a spirit of co-operation.

It is a false argument to say that large attendance of performances disproved the earnestness or sincerity of the public criticism. So prominent organizations assume, whether they will or not, some degree of public significance, and are in moral duty bound to heed public sentiment quite apart from the box-office receipts, or the applause of audiences.

No attitude which disparages patriotism, or which places lesser things above the security and consistency of America and Americanism, can in these times be tolerated.

Americanization of the spirit of the Symphony Orchestra and the Metropolitan Opera Co. has been tardy.

Record Apr 29-1918

SYMPHONY AND OPERA ASSURED FOR NEXT SEASON

Success of Engagement of Companies Here Makes Opera Possible

By J. V. Clark

The past week indicated what Boston will expect in the way of music for the coming year. There will be opera. The financial success of the engagement of the Metropolitan guarantees that. There will be concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The statement from the new board of trustees, which will control the orchestra, guarantees that. Just how near Boston was to a musicless winter—that is, speaking of the big things in the musical world—we shall never know. Fears were expressed on all sides that something would happen which would make this the last season of the orchestra. A sigh of relief went up from every music lover at the news of the continuance of the orchestra.

Had the season of the Chicago Opera Association and the Metropolitan Opera Company fizzled financially there would have been no opera here next year. Impressarios would not come to Boston unless there were signs of success.

Individuals are not backing opera companies in these war times, but the success of the two companies has assured plenty of opera for the coming winter.

Transcript May 2-1918

...ere in Boston

It may be said with full authority that, contrary to a report widely circulated in Philadelphia, Mr. Leopold Stokowski, the conductor of the symphony orchestra in that city, has never been asked to become the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in succession to Dr. Muck. Therefore, he could not have declined the post, as the report alleges, out of loyalty to his present work in Philadelphia.

The programme for the final pair of Symphony Concerts for the season, tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, has been altered once more. It now traverses in order Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony; a Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for strings from Bach, and Berlioz's overture to his opera, "Benvenuto Cellini." At the evening concert, Mr. Higginson will briefly take leave of orchestra and audience and there may be other ceremonies.

Traveller Apr 29-1918

THE SYMPHONY

The main thing, of course, is that the Boston Symphony orchestra has been saved to Boston. The original plans of its founder, that it be a permanent institution of art for the education and pleasure of the people of this community, will be carried out under the new arrangement. A change of personnel in musical leadership had to be made. It was one of the fortunes of war. The change in financial management and general direction was a matter of personal choice. The loss of the stimulation and other valuable service of the city's benefactor will cause the sincerest regret.

But nothing can take away from Maj. Higginson's unselfish benefits to his fellow-citizens, nothing can dim the spirit of his devotion or destroy the effect or the memory of the good he has done. The heartfelt gratitude of his city is his. A man with much honor in his own country.

Monitor May 1-1918

SIR HENRY WOOD AND BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Special cable to The Christian Science Monitor from its European Bureau

LONDON, England (Wednesday)—Sir Henry Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, when asked by a representative of The Christian Science Monitor whether he had been called to direct the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, Mass., U. S. A., replied: "I have received no offer from America recently."

Henry Joseph Wood first began to be known in connection with orchestral work in London in 1895, when he conducted a series of promenade concerts at the Queen's Hall, which was then a new auditorium. With these concerts he succeeded in winning the favor of popular audiences to programs of the best symphonic music. In 1897 he established his symphony concerts, which he has continued ever since.

In the season of 1903-04 he was one of seven visiting conductors engaged to direct the concerts of the Philharmonic Society of New York. He has directed performances of choral societies in England, including the festivals at Wolverhampton, Sheffield and Norwich. In 1911 he was knighted.

He is one of three European musicians mentioned as possible candidates for the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the administration of the new board of trustees, the other two being Mr. Toscanini, who is an Italian, and Mr. Rachmaninoff.

Transcript May 1

GABRILOWITSCH CONDUCTS

HIS THREE SPRING CONCERTS IN NEW YORK

Audiences That Believed They Were Hearing a Possible Conductor of the Boston Orchestra — Band and Programmes — A Leader Controlling His Men, His Music and Himself—Firm and Elastic Design, Clear and Understanding Accomplishment, Essentials First, and a Just Balance in All Things

OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH, whose name has been bandied about freely both in New York and Boston as that of a possible successor to Dr. Muck, has now given two of his spring series of three orchestral concerts in Carnegie Hall. New York is deeply exercised over the choice of a new conductor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Whatever the decision may be, New York is actively making the choice. So New York has gone to hear Mr. Gabrilowitsch in overflowing numbers for the purpose of passing judgment.

Perhaps this is not the whole explanation of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's numerous and cordial audiences. New York likes distinguished orchestral conducting, and nowadays receives it very seldom. The pianist-conductor's orchestral concerts of last spring left a good memory behind them. Now he was undertaking a new series, and on each occasion playing, besides, the piano part in some noted Concerto. Here, then, was double pleasure. Yet one could not escape the suspicion that the crowd was gravely assuming the responsibilities of the choice of a new conductor for the Boston orchestra. After all, it is in some measure New York's concern. On the Boston band she depends each season for nearly all the orchestral music (outside of the Metropolitan) which she can take downright seriously.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch, who, as his friends have known, has longed for some years to hold the baton over a good orchestra, came to the present series of concerts with evident zest. His programmes were admirably selected to exhibit his powers. On the first were the "Egmont" overture and the first symphony of Beethoven, Mozart's piano concerto in D minor as a solo piece, and Chaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" overture for "romanticism." The second, boasted Brahms's second symphony and Glière's symphonic poem, "The Sirens," in addition to Schumann's concerto. The third, tomorrow, will be similarly divided between the "classic" and the "romantic," with Beethoven's seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scherazade," and Franck's "Symphonic Variations" for a solo piece. In such programmes, except for the omission of any French "impressionism," a conductor may say in outline pretty much all he has to say.

Advertiser May 4

CONCERT MARKS LEAVE-TAKING

Major Higginson Terminates His 37 Years of Connection with Symphony Orchestra

Program
Beethoven, Heroic Symphony.
Bach, Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in Rondo form.
Berlioz. "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture.

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

We understand that the Heroic Symphony was placed upon the program at the request of Major Higginson, who desired to terminate his 37 years of connection with the orchestra with such an earnest composition. It was a somewhat melancholy occasion, for the greatest life-work of a noble gentleman ends with this concert, and that of tonight. Yet the thought that the orchestra was not to disband, that Major Higginson's task was to be continued by other loyal Bostonians, was a consolation, and we may look forward confidently to a continuance of the high standard that has made the Boston Symphony Orchestra famous for more than thirty years.

To review such an occasion technically and analytically would scarcely be in place. It would be almost like criticising "the remains" at a funeral. Yet some tribute may be paid to the excellence of the performance.

Place Beethoven's Heroic Symphony beside Strauss' "Hero's Life" and we get at the root of much of the musical illness of the present times. Self-abnegation in the one work, self-glorification in the other. Compare the war-like development of the first movement of the Heroic with the battle-scene in Strauss' work, and we have the affirmation and the negation of Beethoven's great apothegm—"Music even when picturing something ugly must itself remain beautiful!"

The Funeral March added to the sadness of the leave-taking from Boston's musical benefactor (Coleridge called this "a procession in purple"), but the lively Scherzo and the piquaint Finale restored a brighter mood. These last two movements are always a puzzle to those looking for the "heroic" scheme, and Berlioz's suggestion that the Scherzo pictures the busybodies of the world, going right along with their petty affairs and forgetting all about the hero, may be the sardonic solution of the mystery.

We can compliment the horns in the Trio here on the manner in which they played their three-part harmony. This horn passage was a pioneer bit of work in its time (1804) before valve-horns were invented. The final variations were also well played, but they scarcely make a true climax to the symphony. The Finale of the fifth symphony would make a much more reasonable ending to this work.

The reading that Mr. Schmidt gave to the symphony was a manly and commendable one. He did not dawdle over the Funeral March, but emphasized the heroic element. At times in the symphony and the final overture matters were a trifle too brassy and kettle-drummy, but in these works this was a failing that leaned to virtue's side, and at the close of the symphony Mr. Schmidt, the orchestra, and Major Higginson were all vociferously applauded, but no farewell address was made.

It is always a keen delight to hear our string orchestra play Bach. The strands of the contrapuntal structure are kept so clear and well-defined, the balance of parts is so perfect, that one can express only admiration. The work took us back to very old orchestral days, for it was a great favorite with Mr. Gericke, who first introduced it in the programs. With the exception of the B minor Mass we value Bach's instrumental works more than his vocal, particularly when he uses the tiresome, repeating "aria-form." The performance of the present Bachrich arrangement was beyond all criticism.

And with the Berlioz overture the concert, the season, and Major Higginson's regime ended. Not a remarkable musical conclusion, but it suggested more to come. Not long ago many feared that the end of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was at hand. Today those fears are dissipated. May the organization be as great in the future as it has been in the past. Vivat! Crescat! Floreat!

Globe May 4

SYMPHONY CLOSES EVENTFUL SEASON

Maj Higginson Is Given Demonstration

Famous Organization Passes Into Control of New Directors

With its concert of yesterday afternoon and that of tonight, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have closed its 37th season as an organization and have marked an epoch in its history.

Maj Higginson, whom the audience signally honored yesterday by rising and by applause as he walked from his place on the floor toward the foyer, commits to the responsibility and care of a representative group of younger men an orchestra which is, and let us trust will remain, a noble monument to the devotion, patience, judgment and generosity of a patriot and citizen, whose public gifts, others with this one, distinguish him.

Musical philanthropy took on the character of the pioneer when it founded a symphony orchestra in the early 80s. There was conviction of its ultimate distinction in the service of art appreciation and culture to be found in sustaining its deficits from season to season. None but Maj Higginson himself knows so well the varied problems.

He was patient with a public, which the records intimate to have been often prone to cavil, to censure, to allege personal motives. He was impregnable in judgment against certain affiliations and policies which he believed prejudicial or damaging to the welfare of the orchestra. He was insistent upon the choice of the eminent conductors—chief among them Nikisch, Gericke and Muck—who have laid the foundation of the ensemble and have reared the edifice of the tonal euphony, the virtuosity, the eloquence which have made the orchestra supreme.

There are the paramount qualities which tend to dull attending ears by their constant perfection. In Bachrich's arrangement of Bach's prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, compare the gorgeous color of the choirs of strings, now brilliant, now as velvet, as sheer sound always emotional, with that of other representative orchestras.

The glory of the tonal body complete was heard again in the brilliant performance of Berlioz' overture to his opera, "Benvenuto Cellini," a performance glowing, aromatic, ardently romantic. After the third symphony of Beethoven, and again at the close of the concert, Mr Schmidt, who has served in a trying situation with modesty, taste and commendable skill, was recalled and warmly applauded, a tribute which he shared with the orchestra.

That no recent season has been so devoid of significant novelties is not necessarily in default of Dr Muck's vigilance or interest. It was difficult, even impossible, to obtain foreign scores. The so-called symphony by Alfven was honest music, cheerful in disposition, but not symphonic. Dukas' symphony was scholarly, imaginative, expressive if not consistently inspired. Carpenter's symphony promised better things with a more experienced craftsmanship. The most engrossing new music heard at these concerts was the extraordinary scene from Strauss' "Ariadne on Naxos" for coloratura soprano, sung by Mme Garrison.

The absorbing question still remains, who will conduct the orchestra in 1918-1919 and what will be its membership?

...tivities while a Summer resident there.

...was in 1917 that Dr. Muck took ...ase of the fine Summer residence ...r. A. E. Lawrence of New York, ...ed upon a lofty hill commanding ...e view of the sea and being visi... when brilliantly lighted, to ves... twenty miles at sea.

... Muck's selection of Seal Harbor as his place of residence was accounted for on the ground that it was also the Summer home of many German and Austrian intimates of the Symphony leader.

Not long after his arrival in Seal Harbor Dr. Muck is said to have begun to manifest an extraordinary interest in wireless telegraphy. He was credited with being an amateur wireless operator of no mean ability and was reported more than two years ago to have made considerable progress in experiments seeking to overcome static conditions so that wireless transmission could be effected as easily in the day-time as at night.

Reports of Dr. Muck's extraordinary interest in wireless and of strange lights flashing in the Muck windows of nights led to a visit to Seal Harbor of Department of Justice agents last Summer. It is said that they found there the most elaborately wired station in Maine—a perfect maze of electrical attachments and apparatus. Whether or not Dr. Muck had complied with the regulations of the government concerning the possession of such apparatus the agents did not say.

It is believed, however, that discoveries they made upon that visit, together with statements they obtained from observant residents as to Muck's habits and associates in the colony, formed an important part of the evidence upon which they based his arrest later.

Record Apr 29-1916

Weeding Out Enemy Aliens

Why was it left until the close of the season, to weed out the enemy aliens from the Metropolitan Opera Company and the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We assume that in the reorganization of our Symphony orchestra this important matter is to be treated as the public unmistakably demands.

We are gratified at the prospect of preservation of the local orchestra under leadership cleaner than that of Karl Muck. We are gratified at the announcement of the Metropolitan management that a score or so of alien enemy members are to be dropped. We do not find it praiseworthy that these reforms were delayed until the close of the season, or until forced by external pressure.

The United States has been at war with Germany for more than a year. The impropriety of retaining enemy alien members of so prominent and important organizations as these two was apparent to thoughtful Americans long ago. This public sentiment, wholesome and necessary for the vigor of this Republic, was manifested with sharp insistence by many cities visited, or included in the list of intended visits, by the local orchestra. In the case of the Metropolitan there was significance in the development of one or two specific cases. But neither organization met this legitimate criticism in a spirit of co-operation.

It is a false argument to say that large attendance of performances disproved the earnestness or sincerity of the public criticism. So prominent organizations assume, whether they will or not, some degree of public significance, and are in moral duty bound to heed public sentiment quite apart from the box-office receipts, or the applause of audiences.

No attitude which disparages patriotism, or which places lesser things above the security and consistency of America and Americanism, can in these times be tolerated.

Americanization of the spirit of the Symphony Orchestra and the Metropolitan Opera Co. has been tardy.

Record Apr 29-1918

SYMPHONY AND OPERA ASSURED FOR NEXT SEASON

Success of Engagement of Companies Here Makes Opera Possible

By J. V. Clark

The past week indicated what Boston will expect in the way of music for the coming year. There will be opera. The financial success of the engagement of the Metropolitan guarantees that. There will be concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The statement from the new board of trustees, which will control the orchestra, guarantees that. Just how near Boston was to a musicless winter—that is, speaking of the big things in the musical world—we shall never know. Fears were expressed on all sides that something would happen which would make this the last season of the orchestra. A sigh of relief went up from every music lover at the news of the continuance of the orchestra.

Had the season of the Chicago Opera Association and the Metropolitan Opera Company fizzled financially there would have been no opera here next year. Impressarios would not come to Boston unless there were signs of success.

Individuals are not backing opera companies in these war times, but the success of the two companies has assured plenty of opera for the coming winter.

Transcript May 2-1918

Here in Boston

It may be said with full authority that, contrary to a report widely circulated in Philadelphia, Mr. Leopold Stokowski, the conductor of the symphony orchestra in that city, has never been asked to become the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in succession to Dr. Muck. Therefore, he could not have declined the post, as the report alleges, out of loyalty to his present work in Philadelphia.

The programme for the final pair of Symphony Concerts for the season, tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, has been altered once more. It now traverses in order Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony; a Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for strings from Bach, and Berlioz's overture to his opera, "Benvenuto Cellini." At the evening concert, Mr. Higginson will briefly take leave of orchestra and audience and there may be other ceremonies.

Traveller Apr 29-1918

THE SYMPHONY

The main thing, of course, is that the Boston Symphony orchestra has been saved to Boston. The original plans of its founder, that it be a permanent institution of art for the education and pleasure of the people of this community, will be carried out under the new arrangement. A change of personnel in musical leadership had to be made. It was one of the fortunes of war. The change in financial management and general direction was a matter of personal choice. The loss of the stimulation and other valuable service of the city's benefactor will cause the sincerest regret.

But nothing can take away from Maj. Higginson's unselfish benefits to his fellow-citizens, nothing can dim the spirit of his devotion or destroy the effect or the memory of the good he has done. The heartfelt gratitude of his city is his. A man with much honor in his own country.

Monitor May 1-1918

SIR HENRY WOOD AND BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Special cable to The Christian Science Monitor from its European Bureau

LONDON, England (Wednesday)—Sir Henry Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, when asked by a representative of The Christian Science Monitor whether he had been called to direct the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, Mass., U. S. A., replied: "I have received no offer from America recently."

Henry Joseph Wood first began to be known in connection with orchestral work in London in 1895, when he conducted a series of promenade concerts at the Queen's Hall, which was then a new auditorium. With these concerts he succeeded in winning the favor of popular audiences to programs of the best symphonic music. In 1897 he established his symphony concerts, which he has continued ever since.

In the season of 1903-04, he was one of seven visiting conductors engaged to direct the concerts of the Philharmonic Society of New York. He has directed performances of choral societies in England, including the festivals at Wolverhampton, Sheffield and Norwich. In 1911 he was knighted.

He is one of three European musicians mentioned as possible candidates for the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the administration of the new board of trustees, the other two being Mr. Toscanini, who is an Italian, and Mr. Rachmaninoff.

Transcript May 1

GABRILOWITSCH CONDUCTS

HIS THREE SPRING CONCERTS IN NEW YORK

Audiences That Believed They Were Hearing a Possible Conductor of the Boston Orchestra — Band and Programmes — A Leader Controlling His Men, His Music and Himself—Firm and Elastic Design, Clear and Understanding Accomplishment, Essentials First, and a Just Balance in All Things

OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH, whose name has been bandied about freely both in New York and Boston as that of a possible successor to Dr. Muck, has now given two of his spring series of three orchestral concerts in Carnegie Hall. New York is deeply exercised over the choice of a new conductor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Whatever the decision may be, New York is actively making the choice. So New York has gone to hear Mr. Gabrilowitsch in overflowing numbers for the purpose of passing judgment.

Perhaps this is not the whole explanation of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's numerous and cordial audiences. New York likes distinguished orchestral conducting, and nowadays receives it very seldom. The pianist-conductor's orchestral concerts of last spring left a good memory behind them. Now he was undertaking a new series, and on each occasion playing, besides, the piano part in some noted Concerto. Here, then, was double pleasure. Yet one could not escape the suspicion that the crowd was gravely assuming the responsibilities of the choice of a new conductor for the Boston orchestra. After all, it is in some measure New York's concern. On the Boston band she depends each season for nearly all the orchestral music (outside of the Metropolitan) which she can take downright seriously.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch, who, as his friends have known, has longed for some years to hold the baton over a good orchestra, came to the present series of concerts with evident zest. His programmes were admirably selected to exhibit his powers. On the first were the "Egmont" overture and the first symphony of Beethoven, Mozart's piano concerto in D minor as a solo piece, and Chaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" overture for "romanticism." The second, boasted Brahms's second symphony and Glière's symphonic poem, "The Sirens," in addition to Schumann's concerto. The third, tomorrow, will be similarly divided between the "classic" and the "romantic," with Beethoven's seventh symphony and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scherazade," and Franck's "Symphonic Variations" for a solo piece. In such programmes, except for the omission of any French "impressionism," a conductor may say in outline pretty much all he has to say.

Advertiser May 4

CONCERT MARKS LEAVE-TAKING

Major Higginson Terminates His 37 Years of Connection with Symphony Orchestra

Program
Beethoven, Heroic Symphony.
Bach, Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in Rondo form.
Berlioz, "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture.

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

We understand that the Heroic Symphony was placed upon the program at the request of Major Higginson, who desired to terminate his 37 years of connection with the orchestra with such an earnest composition. It was a somewhat melancholy occasion, for the greatest life-work of a noble gentleman ends with this concert, and that of tonight. Yet the thought that the orchestra was not to disband, that Major Higginson's task was to be continued by other loyal Bostonians, was a consolation, and we may look forward confidently to a continuance of the high standard that has made the Boston Symphony Orchestra famous for more than thirty years.

To review such an occasion technically and analytically would scarcely be in place. It would be almost like criticising "the remains" at a funeral. Yet some tribute may be paid to the excellence of the performance.

Place Beethoven's Heroic Symphony beside Strauss' "Hero's Life" and we get at the root of much of the musical illness of the present times. Self-abnegation in the one work, self-glorification in the other. Compare the war-like development of the first movement of the Heroic with the battle-scene in Strauss' work, and we have the affirmation and the negation of Beethoven's great apothegm—"Music even when picturing something ugly must itself remain beautiful!"

The Funeral March added to the sadness of the leave-taking from Boston's musical benefactor (Coleridge called this "a procession in purple"), but the lively Scherzo and the piquaint Finale restored a brighter mood. These last two movements are always a puzzle to those looking for the "heroic" scheme, and Berlioz's suggestion that the Scherzo pictures the busybodies of the world, going right along with their petty affairs and forgetting all about the hero, may be the sardonic solution of the mystery.

We can compliment the horns in the Trio here on the manner in which they played their three-part harmony. This horn passage was a pioneer bit of work in its time (1804) before valve-horns were invented. The final variations were also well played, but they scarcely make a true climax to the symphony. The Finale of the fifth symphony would make a much more reasonable ending to this work.

The reading that Mr. Schmidt gave to the symphony was a manly and commendable one. He did not dawdle over the Funeral March, but emphasized the heroic element. At times in the symphony and the final overture matters were a trifle too brassy and kettle-drummy, but in these works this was a failing that leaned to virtue's side, and at the close of the symphony Mr. Schmidt, the orchestra, and Major Higginson were all vociferously applauded, but no farewell address was made.

It is always a keen delight to hear our string orchestra play Bach. The strands of the contrapuntal structure are kept so clear and well-defined, the balance of parts is so perfect, that one can express only admiration. The work took us back to very old orchestral days, for it was a great favorite with Mr. Gericke, who first introduced it in the programs. With the exception of the B minor Mass we value Bach's instrumental works more than his vocal, particularly when he uses the tiresome, repeating "aria-form." The performance of the present Bachrich arrangement was beyond all criticism.

And with the Berlioz overture the concert, the season, and Major Higginson's regime ended. Not a remarkable musical conclusion, but it suggested more to come. Not long ago many feared that the end of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was at hand. Today those fears are dissipated. May the organization be as great in the future as it has been in the past. Vivat! Crescat! Floreat!

Globe May 4

SYMPHONY CLOSES EVENTFUL SEASON

Maj Higginson Is Given Demonstration

Famous Organization Passes Into Control of New Directors

With its concert of yesterday afternoon and that of tonight, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have closed its 37th season as an organization and have marked an epoch in its history.

Maj Higginson, whom the audience signally honored yesterday by rising and by applause as he walked from his place on the floor toward the foyer, commits to the responsibility and care of a representative group of younger men an orchestra which is, and let us trust will remain, a noble monument to the devotion, patience, judgment and generosity of a patriot and citizen, whose public gifts, others with this one, distinguish him.

Musical philanthropy took on the character of the pioneer when it founded a symphony orchestra in the early 80s. There was conviction of its ultimate distinction in the service of art appreciation and culture to be found in sustaining its deficits from season to season. None but Maj Higginson himself knows so well the varied problems.

He was patient with a public, which the records intimate to have been often prone to cavil, to censure, to allege personal motives. He was impregnable in judgment against certain affiliations and policies which he believed prejudicial or damaging to the welfare of the orchestra. He was insistent upon the choice of the eminent conductors—chief among them Nikisch, Gericke and Muck—who have laid the foundation of the ensemble and have reared the edifice of the tonal euphony, the virtuosity, the eloquence which have made the orchestra supreme.

There are the paramount qualities which tend to dull attending ears by their constant perfection. In Bachrich's arrangement of Bach's prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, compare the gorgeous color of the choirs of strings, now brilliant, now as velvet, as sheer sound always emotional, with that of other representative orchestras.

The glory of the tonal body complete was heard again in the brilliant performance of Berlioz' overture to his opera, "Benvenuto Cellini," a performance glowing, aromatic, ardently romantic. After the third symphony of Beethoven, and again at the close of the concert, Mr Schmidt, who has served in a trying situation with modesty, taste and commendable skill, was recalled and warmly applauded, a tribute which he shared with the orchestra.

That no recent season has been so devoid of significant novelties is not necessarily in default of Dr Muck's vigilance or interest. It was difficult, even impossible, to obtain foreign scores. The so-called symphony by Alfven was honest music, cheerful in disposition, but not symphonic. Dukas' symphony was scholarly, imaginative, expressive if not consistently inspired. Carpenter's symphony promised better things with a more experienced craftsmanship. The most engrossing new music heard at these concerts was the extraordinary scene from Strauss' "Ariadne on Naxos" for coloratura soprano, sung by Mme Garrison.

The absorbing question still remains, who will conduct the orchestra in 1918-1919 and what will be its membership?

tivities while a Summer resident there.

was in 1917 that Dr. Muck took a lease of the fine Summer residence of A. E. Lawrence of New York, perched upon a lofty hill commanding a view of the sea and being visible when brilliantly lighted, to vessels twenty miles at sea.

Muck's selection of Seal Harbor as his place of residence was accounted for on the ground that it was also the Summer home of many German and Austrian intimates of the Symphony leader.

Not long after his arrival in Seal Harbor Dr. Muck is said to have begun to manifest an extraordinary interest in wireless telegraphy. He was credited with being an amateur wireless operator of no mean ability and was reported more than two years ago to have made considerable progress in experiments seeking to overcome static conditions so that wireless transmission could be effected as easily in the day-time as at night.

Reports of Dr. Muck's extraordinary interest in wireless and of strange lights flashing in the Muck windows of nights led to a visit to Seal Harbor of Department of Justice agents last Summer. It is said that they found there the most elaborately wired station in Maine—a perfect maze of electrical attachments and apparatus. Whether or not Dr. Muck had complied with the regulations of the government concerning the possession of such apparatus the agents did not say.

It is believed, however, that discoveries they made upon that visit, together with statements they obtained from observant residents as to Muck's habits and associates in the colony, formed an important part of the evidence upon which they based his arrest later.

Herald May 4

Post May 4

SYMPHONY ENDS 37TH SEASON

Programs Lacked Brilliancy of Former Years in Orchestra's History

INTEREST CENTRES IN NEW CONDUCTOR

By PHILIP HALE

The 24th and last concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 37th season took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Schmidt conducted. The program was as follows: Beethoven, "Eroica" symphony; Bach-Bachrich, Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte for strings; Berlioz, Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini."

The program for this concert first stood as follows: Tschaikowsky, Suite No. 3; Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony. It was changed to Shubert's "Unfinished" symphony and Beethoven's "Eroica." Shubert's Sympony was substituted for Tschaikowsky's Suite, it was said, because it is a favorite composition of Maj. Higginson. Again there was a change. The little Suite of Bach was exhumed, and Berlioz's Overture was added, although it was performed here last season.

The concert will be repeated tonight.

These compositions were played in the course of the season for the first time in Boston: Symphonies by Alfven, Carpenter and Dukas; a tragic overture by Davison (first performance); a suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis and Chloe." Mme. Leginska played Liapounoff's first piano concerto; Mr. Ferir played d' Indy's Lied for viola (originally violoncello) and orchestra. Mr. Sand played the whole of Mozart's clarinet concerto. Miss Garrison sang Zerbinetta's air from Richard Strauss's "Ariadne on Naxos."

Liszt's "Prometheus"; Chausson's "Poeme" for violin and orchestra, and Saint-Saens's Havanaise for violin and orchestra were performed for the first time at these concerts.

In the number of compositions performed Beethoven led with eight, Mozart came next with six, Berlioz, and Sibelius followed with five apiece, Brahms four, Debussy four, Saint-Saens four, Cherubini two, Dvorak two, Goldmark two, Handel two, Haydn two, Rachmaninoff two, Schumann two, Tschaikowski two. Ravel's suite was was performed twice. The other composers represented by one composition were: Alfven, Bach, Balakereff, Carpenter, Chadwick, Charpentier, Chausson, Chopin, Davison, Delius, Dittersdorf, Dohnaanyi, Dukas, Enesco, Grieg, d'Indy, Lalo, Liapounoff, Liszt, MacDowell, Mendelssohn, Rameau, Repartz, Scriabin, Smetana, Strauss, Svendsen, Wagner, Wallace, Wolf.

The singers were: Mmes. Garrison and Melba; Mr. McCormack.

The pianists were: Mmes. Leginska, Nash, Novaes; Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

The violinists were: Miss Seydel; Messrs. Noack, Witek, Zimbalist.

Viola: Mr. Ferir.

Violoncellists: Messrs. Malkin, Warnke.

Clarinet: Mr. Sand.

Mmes. Garrison, Leginska, Nash, Novaes, Seydel appeared at concerts with the orchestra in Boston for the first time. Mr. Sand, a member of the orchestra, appeared as a soloist for the first time. Messrs. Ferir, Malkin, Noack, Warnke and Witek were members of the orchestra.

The programs of the season were not so brilliant, not so interesting, as in former years. Of the new compositions, Ravel's suite made the most immediate and also durable impression. No doubt the attention paid to the three extra concerts with chorus was somewhat injurious to the regular subscription concerts.

The list of works performed shows in a way the influence of the war. Yet no one would probably have objected if a symphonic poem by Strauss had been performed. On the other hand there was no excuse for the performance of Bruch's violin concerto, when Bruch's recent and foolish diatribes against our allies are considered.

Nor was the list of soloists a strong one on the whole. Out of 15 of them six were members of the orchestra. Mme. Garrison sang delightfully; Mme. Leginska played brilliantly a concerto of little worth. Miss Novaes was a very welcome, if belated visitor. Mme. Melba, Mr. McCormack and Mr. Gabrilowitsch always give pleasure.

After the departure of Dr. Muck, Mr. Schmidt, who was officially the assistant conductor, finished the season. For the conductor of next season's concerts several have been named. The men most worthy of consideration are Arturo Toscanini, Serge Rachmaninoff and Sir Henry Wood.

FINAL DAY CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

Major Higginson to Speak at Tonight's Concert

BY OLIN DOWNES

There was a certain solemnity of mood evident when the audience gathered yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall for the last Friday afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of the present season.

It was also the last Friday afternoon concert the Symphony will give with the personal support of its founder and sustainer, Major Henry L. Higginson.

FOUNDER WILL SPEAK

Every seat was filled, and every seat for the concert tonight will be disposed of long before the concert takes place, when Major Higginson will make a four-minute speech concerning his relinquishment of personal association with the orchestra and its future policies. Although Major Higginson was present yesterday afternoon listening to a final programme of his own choice, he made no address, although the audience applauded loudly, and many rose to their feet the instant that he arose from his seat to step out of the auditorium during the intermission. Other than this, the concert was as uneventful as any other since the disappearance of Dr. Muck.

Ernst Schmidt conducted performances of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony; of movements from Bach violin sonatas, orchestrated with much taste and skill by Sigismund Bachrich, and Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." The programme was preceded by a performance of "The Star Spangled Banner," played by the orchestra with more spirit and conviction than usual on this occasion. Mr. Schmidt's reading of the symphony was more than a routine performance. It has breadth, warmth, grandeur that is inherent in the music, but not always so emphasized by the conductor. The familiar pieces of Bach gave a pleasure only second to that of the performance of the symphony, one of the noblest and most amazing compositions in the literature of music. Berlioz's piece was played with a fire and a brilliancy which swept everything before it. There were excellent concluding performances, after which the whole orchestra rose to its feet to acknowledge long-continued applause.

Even this festive music did not relieve the seriousness of the occasion or dispel the thought of the sorrow of the great citizen of Boston, as faithful to his ideals of patriotism as to his ideals of art, whom mischievous and ill-considered criticism had embittered by those who should have been the last to forget or depreciate his immortal gift to this city.

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

THE NEW CONDUCTOR

FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

A SURVEY OF WORLD TALENT

Bakhmaninov, Russian; Mengelberg, Holland; Wood, Britain Monteux, France; Toscanini, Italy; Are Possible Candidates

For the first time in 12 years the "founder and sustainer" of the Boston symphony orchestra and his advisers are seeking a new conductor for it as they sought and found Dr Muck in the spring of 1906. When two years later he returned to complete his term of service at the Royal opera house, Mr Fiedler had been chosen to succeed him before he departed oversea. In the summer of 1912 Dr Muck's contract with the Intendant expired; he was free to return to Boston; while, for months before the formal announcement, it had been understood that he would so come back to a post he desired and adorned. Now, however, that he has been removed to another place and that Mr Schmidt is no more than a creditable and serviceable locum tenens, a new conductor must be discovered and engaged under wholly novel circumstances, writes H. T. Parker in the Boston Transcript. In the 37 years of the symphony orchestra, all its seven conductors, except Sir G. Henschel, have come to it directly from German-speaking opera houses or concert halls. From them now, for obvious reasons, no conductor can be taken, though they might have yielded Mr Nikisch or Mr Weingartner, or so able a leader of the younger generation as Mr Cortolezzi of Mr Fried. If the choice is to be made from Europe, it is confined to France, Italy and England of the belligerent countries, to Holland and Scandinavia of the neutral, and to nondescript Russia, though as some profess to believe a Muscovite might now be exposed to attack on the score of nationality. In contrast, alike by the conditions of war time and by the rising standards for the performance of symphonic music in America within the past 10 years, the United States affords a fairer and wider field of choice than in the past.

European Eliminations

To examine cursorily the European field, it is the misfortune of Paris to yield for the time no conductor of the quality essential to the symphony concerts, even were he disposed to come hither. Perhaps the ablest conductor there is M Ruhlmann, the naturalized Hollander, who after years of able performance, especially with modern music drama, at the Opera Comique, has more recently passed to the opera. He has long been, however, wholly an operatic conductor and, so far as the world knows, has no ambitions toward either the concert hall or America. M Messager, the conductor of the celebrated orchestra of the Conservatory, has passed the years in which he could advisedly undertake the hundred-odd concerts, with no little travel between, that make the annual task of the symphony orchestra; while beyond peradventure, he reads music dryly; turns square corners with it; sets it in rigid and angular progress. Though M Chevillard enjoys the prestige still attaching to the leadership of the Lamoureux concerts, not a few Bostonians, chancing into them during visits to Paris, have been surprised and disappointed over qualities that lifted him little above capable routine. In more than one respect, especially in sensibility and finesse, Mr Pierne, who succeeded to the Colonne concerts at the death of the founder, excels M Chevillard, but even he seems hardly of the abilities that the Boston orchestra demands. Of the younger generation of Parisian conductors, the two ablest are already in service in the United States—Mr Monteux, for a season past at the Metropolitan opera house, and Mr Hasselmans, beginning next autumn with the Chicago Opera company.

Russian Possibilities

Like Paris, Petrograd and Moscow, so far as the western world knows, proffer no very promising man. Mr Coates, the Briton who curiously flourished under the old operatic regime in Petersburg, seemed little better than mediocre when he returned to Paris and London, whether in music drama or in symphonic music. Mr Cooper, who used to come with Mr Diaghilev's ballet on its earlier visits to Paris, was in no wise a signal talent; while Mr Kusevitsky, the noted virtuoso of the double bass, and Mr Cherupnin, the composer, enjoy little reputation, outside their own country, as conductors. Moreover, the one experiment of an orchestra in the United States with a Russian conductor—that of the Philharmonic society in New York with the late Mr Safonov—was none too successful Safonov aside, the one Russian who has given proof hereabouts of his quality as conductor, is Mr Bakhmaninov, the composer, who in his visit to America a few years ago, led the Boston orchestra and other bands in his own pieces. So far as these went, he gave clear proof alike to his men and his audiences of notable qualities as conductor; while not a little report from Russia, where he has led in the music of many composers, has warmly confirmed them. Rumor runs that he has lately made his way out of Moscow to Stockholm, whence he purposes to embark for New York, there to dwell until central Europe is tranquil again, pursuing his career as pianist, conductor and composer as best he may in the United States. It is possible to conceive of Mr Rakhmaninov as conductor of the symphony orchestra; but it is to be observed that for long years before the beginning of the war he preferred to dwell at Dresden, and that fervent nationalistic spirits in Petrograd and Moscow then spoke bitterly of him as "Germanized."

Similar objection, in these fervent days of our own, might be raised against Mr Mengelberg, for long the eminent conductor of the noted Amsterdam orchestra and known by many a visit from London and Paris almost to Tiflis and Teheran. In the years before the war no European conductor except Mr Nikisch, journeyed so widely and persistently as did he.

Wood and Toscanini

Not so long ago in London, Sir Thomas Beecham likewise cast ambitious eyes toward America, though oftener upon opera houses than upon concert halls. Then, however, Sir Thomas was struggling to make his way with the public of London as conductor, operatic manager, entrepreneur in general of the performance of music. Now, however, Manchester—mounting rival to London as seat of British interest, intelligence and taste in the arts—regards him as little less than savior in an evil day. London, too, has become kinder. Circumstances of war time have curiously made striving, anxious, unruly Sir Thomas a dominant figure of British opera house and British concert hall. Probably no American opportunity would now tempt him; opera more and more engrosses him; while his abilities as organizer of musical enterprise perhaps exceed his competences as conductor

On the other hand, it is within possibility that Sir Henry Wood could be persuaded to forsake London for a few years in Boston; while of available European conductors only he and Mr Toscanini are of the tested ability and the established reputation that the symphony orchestra seems to demand. Through many vicissitudes he has developed the Queen's Hall orchestra until it is without peer in England. He has conducted at festivals in the provinces and a choral concerts in London in a fashion to make him worthy of the Boston symphony chorus, as it has proved itself to be, as it bids fair to continue.

Yet with all this British and European reputation, Sir Henry would hardly bring to the symphony concerts the prestige that would surely attend Mr Toscanini. In his years at the Metropolitan the Italian proved himself beyond question on operatic conductor of the first rank, while far and wide in America went his fame. He was in full command of his orchestra; he was master of the music before him or rather stored in his memory; in the hollow of his hand he held stage, pit, auditorium. To opera bouffe from Donizetti to Wolf-Ferrari, to lyric opera in the stricter sense of the words from the Verdi of "Trovatore" to the Puccini of "Madame Butterfly" to music drama from Gluck through Wagner to the ultra-moderns, he brought an equally discriminating mind, expert hand and vitalizing eloquence.

The American Yield

So much for the European field of choice. From the American, a summary but inevitable elimination quickly rejects the Hadleys, the Rothwells, the generally undistinguished abilities whose partisans fondly believe, or profess to believe, that nationality, through the sitting of a hundred concerts in a season, will somehow continue to hide mediocrity. A like inevitable but gentler elimination puts aside established conductors, like Mr Damrosch, bound by every obligation and opportunity to his generous "sustainer," Mr Flagler, and also Mr Stock, seemingly and deservedly "fixture," as the phrase of sport goes, with the Chicago orchestra. Mr Stransky, in turn, were he not an "enemy alien," is, in many judgments, unthinkable as conductor of an orchestra of the first rank. There remains, then, only Mr Stokowski, reputed to dream of ultimate ascent to the Boston orchestra, warmly commended to it by not a few ardent spirits, yet by much agreeing report in letter and in honor bound to continue for some years in Philadelphia.

Of the younger conductors now working in America, Mr Stokowski is unquestionably the best equipped, the fullest tested, to succeed to the symphony orchestra.

Mr Stokowski would be such a young conductor; while still more youthful, in the scale of experience, would be Mr Gabrilowitsch. Toward conducting the ambitions of the pianist are now firmly and eagerly set. He began to test himself in them as long ago as he dwelt in Munich; if memory does not slip, he has made like ventures in his own Russia; more recently he has renewed them in the United States—in New York last spring, as "guest" of various orchestras in the Middle West last winter.

There is no questioning Mr Gabrilowitsch's insight, imagination, poise and cultivation as a musician; the orchestras that have played under him report him a born, intuitive and by no means unpracticed conductor. Not a few of his expert hearers have marveled at the results he achieved—and in hampering circumstance—through a wide range of music. If it is advisable to go full length in a venture with comparative youth at the symphony concerts, Mr Gabrilowitsch may well run close to Mr Stokowski's heels.

If, however, maturity be still the word, another virtuoso sits open-eyed to any call that may come to him Bostonward—the illustrious violinist, Mr Ysaye, and no scantily-graced conductor as the "Concerts Ysaye," for some winters in Brussels clearly and speedily proved him. By all accounts he is weary once more of his violin; the ambitions of his later years again whet him to conducting.

In New York, likewise, now dwells and works the most promising of the mooted Parisian conductors—Mr Monteux, who has led in the French operas, in the Russian "Coq d' Or," in the American "Place Congo," at the Metropolitan this season, as last season he led in the diversified music of the Russian ballet. Behind stretches a long and honorable Parisian experience, again with the Russian ballet, now and then in opera, occasionally in symphonic music, usually of ultra-modern voice. In a few concerts last summer and with no remarkable orchestra, New York also heard him in such music, both classic and contemporary, and to a degree was pleased. If what he accomplished, say with Beethoven, was not highly individual, it was at least more than conventionally meritorious. Judged by his work at the Metropolitan, Mr Monteux seems a conductor of elegance, finesse, refinement, proportion, accepting the tradition, yet weaving his own shadings and variations upon it, painstaking almost to a fault—a conductor who with the symphony orchestra in Boston might easily bring back a Gerickian day.

RECORD

Philadelphia, Pa.

Bain.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Rumor has it that Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the famous pianist, will be the successor of Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Colonel Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, stood by Dr. Muck to the last minute and threatened to disband the organization if the movement to displace him succeeded.

But when the Government interned Dr. Muck Colonel Higginson had to accept the situation. Charles A. Ellis, the manager of the orchestra, was in the audience at Carnegie Hall this week when Mr. Gabrilowitsch conducted a concert there. It was one of a series such as Mr. Gabrilowitsch gave with a picked orchestra at the end of the musical season last spring.

EVENING JOURNAL

New York.

APR 27 1918

MAJ. HIGGINSON QUITS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Banker Withdraws Following the Internment of Karl Muck, Director.

By International News Service.

BOSTON, April 27.—Major Henry L. Higginson, the Boston banker, retired to-day as patron and financial genius of the Boston Sympony Orchestra.

Announcement was made to-day that Major Higginson will no longer "bear the burden of the undertaking" and that the orchestra is being incorporated with nine prominent Boston men as trustees.

The trustees are now negotiating for engagement of a conductor, as successor to Dr. Karl Muck, interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as an alien enemy.

The retirement of Major Higginson marks the third great development in Boston Symphony Orchestra affairs this season. The first was the nation-wide agitation over the question of the orchestra, led by Dr. Muck, putting the national air into its programme. The second development was the arrest of Dr. Muck as an alien enemy.

Clara Clemens

EVENING TELEGRAM

Philadelphia, Pa.

U. S. SATISFIES SWISS THAT DR. MUCK CLAIMED GERMAN CITIZENSHIP

Danger of German Citizenship Complications Over Internment of Musician is Eliminated.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The Swiss Government has decided not to press its claim of Swiss citizenship for Dr. Karl Muck, formerly leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., as a dangerous German.

This eliminates all danger of complications with Switzerland over the case.

The Swiss Minister, Hans Sulzer, after examining records of the Department of Justice concerning Dr. Muck, feels satisfied, it was said today, that Muck had repeatedly claimed German citizenship, and that consequently the United States was justified in interning him.

The precise nature of the Department of Justice's evidence against Dr. Muck may be made public shortly. It is understood Government agents obtained letters and other documents written by Muck in past years, in which he claimed he was a German citizen.

EAGLE

Brooklyn, N. Y.

13

HENRY WOOD SLATED TO SUCCEED DR. MUCK?

Gabrilowitsch Far Down in List of Possibilities.

RUSSIAN CONDUCTS BRAHMS.

Also Plays Schumann Concerto at Carnegie Before Large Audience. New Pianist Plays Scriabin.

The special series of concerts under the conductorship of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the second of which took place last evening in Carnegie Hall, has assumed an additional importance in the mind of the public because of the possibility of the conductor's being invited to become the successor to Dr. Muck as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The result was an audience that filled all the seats and a good part of the standing room in the hall last evening.

Meanwhile, among those who profess to know something of the workings of the minds of those in charge of the destinies of the Boston Orchestra there is a growing belief that it will not be Gabrilowitsch who will get the appointment. According to one who has in the past, at least, been in intimate touch with the Boston situation, the Russian pianist stands far down in the list of possibilities. It would seem that the first choice at present is Sir Henry Wood of London, the second Toscanini, the third Stokowski, at the present time conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Meantime, of course, nothing definite or offical has come from Major Higginson, who, according to his custom, is standing pat and has nothing to say until a final decision has been reached

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

APR 27 1918

FOUNDER RETIRES FROM ORCHESTRA MUCK CONDUCTED

Major Higginson Turns Boston Symphony Over to Syndicate of Nine.

BOSTON, April 27.—Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1891 and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired to-day from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate.

The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien, of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Major Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking, he was reluctant to see it come to an end and had therefore turned over control to nine Trustees, who to-day filed papers for incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. The Trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

TELEGRAM
New York City.
APR 27 1918

MAJOR HIGGINSON, MUCK'S SPONSOR, QUITS ORCHESTRA

Founder and Backer of Boston Symphony Organization Turns Over Control.

NINE TRUSTEES ORGANIZE A COMPANY.

BOSTON, Saturday.—Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1891 and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired to-day from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate.

The arrangements of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Major Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking he was reluctant to see it come to an end and had therefore turned over control to nine trustees, who to-day filed papers for incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already obtained toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

EVENING SUN
New York City

MAJOR HIGGINSON QUITS ORCHESTRA

Founder of Boston Symphony Withdraws Support.

BOSTON, April 27.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, severed all connection with the organization to-day.

Major Higginson recently defended Dr. Karl Muck, ex-director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he was sharply criticized as being a German subject, particularly after a controversy over playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

An effort had been made to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting recitals at Carnegie Hall, and Major Higginson came to New York city to defeat that effort. He asserted at that time that Dr. Muck, who has since been interned as an enemy alien, was a Swiss citizen; that his status as such had been investigated by the Department of Justice, and that no reason for removing Dr. Muck had been found.

This, it is believed, alienated from Major Higginson many of the friends of the orchestra and might, they say, have had something to do with his decision to sever his connection with the orchestra.

Major Higginson is a banker and has done much philanthropic work. He was born in New York city on Nov. 18, 1834, and is a son of George and Mary Cabot (Lee) Higginson. He is also a descendant of Francis Higginson, who came to the United States in 1629.

He served in the Civil War, was breveted Lieutenant-Colonel for bravery and at the conclusion of the war bought a large cotton plantaion in the South.

He organized the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881 and it gave its first concert on Oct. 22 of that year.

36 OF LINER'S CREW

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
APR 28

WHO WILL SUCCEED DR. MUCK IN BOSTON?

Some of the Possibilities—Why Not Toscanini?

OPERATIC CONDUCTORS.

How Those at the Metropolitan Labor Under the Greatest Difficulties. Today the Violinists' Holiday.

Naturally since the internment of Dr. Muck there has been considerable speculation in musical circles regarding his successor as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nothing definite is known of Major Higginson's plans for next year, nor will there be until that stern old New Englander sees fit to make public announcement. He has never seen fit to confer with the public and the newspapers with regard to the management of the orchestra and it is in accordance with his invariable procedure that they must wait for definite information until he has completed all his plans. However, some announcement should be forthcoming by the end of the present week.

In reality Major Higginson's problem is not concerned with the conductor alone. There is the additional question of the twenty-two alien enemies who are members of the band. If the policy is to be continued of giving series of concerts in cities other than Boston, it will undoubtedly be necessary to replace these men; for it is evident that the Government will not allow men of their political color to travel freely. Indeed the plan at present under consideration in Washington is to make every alien enemy register every time he moves twenty-five miles in any direction.

Fortunately to replace these twenty-two will not be an insurmountable problem. The great majority of them belong to the string section and only one, the first bassoon, is a member of the wood-winds, always the most difficult section to recruit. Of course the personnel of the organization is non-union, but the Boston Orchestra pays such good salaries and in addition takes such good care of its members that only the most loyal union musician would hesitate on that account to accept an invitation to become a member. If Major Higginson decides to continue the orchestra, it will be possible for him to find his recruits early in the summer and to use the summer months as a period for welding them into the present organization.

The difficulty of finding a successor to Dr. Muck is a great one. Conductors of his ability are scarce indeed, and in addition the band has played so long under him that it is responsive to his every mood. Naturally only one of the best will do. It would be a shame to waste such excellent material upon a second-rater. These who speculate upon such matters have pointed to a number who ought to be in a position to accept, and among those whom they have named none is more favorably mentioned than Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, who has been giving a series of orchestral concerts in Carnegie Hall.

Gabrilowitsch is an earnest and intelligent musician who possesses the qualities that go to make a good conductor, and undoubtedly after some experience would keep the orchestra up to its standards. But already against him has been raised the question of his pro-Germanism. He has replied in a public statement that he is a Russian and that since the outbreak of the war his sympathies have been with the Allies. Yet in the minds of a few the doubt remains, and these would not find it difficult to make trouble in a time when the popular mind is so sensitive and responsive to all reports of pro-German feeling. It would seem on the face of things therefore, that Major Higginson would prefer not to have Gabrilowitsch as conductor rather than chance trouble of the sort he has been subjected to this year.

Leopold Stokowski, at present conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony, has also been named. Undoubtedly this young man stands high among the conductors in this country, but it would be surprising if he should throw away all the results of his fine work in Philadelphia to step into the shoes of all those who in Boston have accomplished so much; Stokowski as the real creator of a splendid orchestra in Philadelphia would seem to be a more important person in the musical world than Stokowski as the leader of a Boston orchestra developed by other men.

Yet after all the others have been mentioned there is one man who stands head and shoulders above all his contemporaries, one man to whom all conductors bow as the conductor of conductors. The reference is of course to Arturo Toscanini. The great Italian, who is known in this country simply as a director extraordinary of opera, has been conducting symphony concerts in Milan. That he would be successful as such goes without saying, for the man's musicianship is so thorough, his authority so convincing, that today he is the acknowledged best conductor in the world. [illegible] would be glad to accept the posi[illegible] as the leader of the Boston Symphony; certainly the Italian Government, with its appreciation of the propaganda value of Italian music would be glad to have him come again to this country. With his coming a possibility therefore, it but remains for Major Higginson to secure the best conductor in the world for the best orchestra.

Since the above was written the writer has been informed that the strongest possibility for the conductorship of the Boston Orchestra is Sir Henry Joseph Wood, whose work is familiar to every American who has visited London concerts. Practically all of Wood's musical education was gained in England, or more specifically in London, where for years he has been the leader of the London Symphony. He has been known as a conductor of untiring energy and zeal, an excellent organizer and authoritative leader. Under his direction the London Symphony has grown to be one of the premier organizations of the world. There is no doubt but that he would fit into Major Higginson's scheme of things.

Metropolitan Conductors.

While on the subject of conductors, it would seem proper to say something about those at the Metropolitan Opera House. Of the four who saw service during the season just past, two were new. The two who were retained from the previous season, Papi and Bodanzky, were familiar figures. Of them Papi had far more responsibility than ever before. His has been a long apprenticeship in the house. For years he served under Toscanini as one of the assistant conductors, and when Polacco stepped into part of Toscanini's shoes, Papi was called upon to be the second Italian conductor. His work merited him the position he held this past season. While he may never set the world afire, at least he gives good intelligent readings of the operas allotted to him, and he finds excellent co-ordination between orchestra and singers.

Bodanzky was shelved to a great extent because of the elimination of German opera, but in the few opportunities he did receive—namely "Nozze di Figaro," "Marta," "Prince Igor," "Saint Elizabeth" and "Le Prophete," he proved himself the finest conductor of which the house can boast. Out of the orchestra he gets results which the others never attain. Of the Mozart opera he made musical champagne and really gave us the finest reading of the year, while "Marta" took on new life under his baton. If "Prince Igor" had been placed in his hands in the beginning the writer is convinced that the work would have met with a far more favorable reception on the part of the public than its history has shown.

Of the newcomers it can be said that Moranzoni has shown himself to be a conductor of considerable merit and of more than considerable promise. With the passing of recent months he has grown immeasurably in artistic stature, gaining authority and command with every performance. Of course the best thing he did was "L'Amore dei tre re," in which he found full scope for the manifestation of his love and zeal for the modern Italian school. Also his reading of "Francesca" was a distinct improvement upon that of his predecessor.

Monteux was engaged to conduct all the French operas. He did conduct, but at no time did he give manifestation of any real ability. His is a sweet kindly nature, and as such he conducts. There has never seemed to be a well-defined idea of just how certain passages should go. In fact, his tempi and rhythms are ever changing, nor is his beat of that decisive variety that conveys a conductor's ideas to the singers on stage. He will probably return next year because he has a considerable pull with the powers that be, and it may be that further experience will result in better conducting. Such at least is to be hoped for.

But in any consideration of the conductors at the opera house it must never be forgotten that for a conductor to work out his ideas fully is under the present circumstances an exceedingly difficult thing. Certain singers are the true arbiters of things, and Mr. Gatti will go far in his desire to retain harmony in his company. The state of affairs is all wrong, for without authority and absolute authority over all the artistic side of productions no conductor can do his best work. It is a remarkable commentary upon the conditions at the Metropolitan that a singer can say that she was responsible for the discharge of a former conductor who had offended her by refusing to allow her to take liberties with a cerscore. When Toscanini ruled, his was a supreme authority, and the result was manifest in the kind of performance he gave us. Why cannot there be a return to such conditions?

rom EAGLE
ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
APR 28
ate

MAJ. HIGGINSON OUT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY MUCK CASE SEQUEL?

Founder of Famous Orchestra Turns Over Control to Nine Trustees.

LATTER SEEK CONDUCTOR

Boston, April 27—Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1891, and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired today from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate. The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Major Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking, he was reluctant to see it come to an end and had therefore turned over control to nine trustees who today filed papers for incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra, to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

The storm caused by the failure of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence and the further criticism of the orchestra, its conductor and Major Higginson, because of the latter's refusal to accept Dr. Muck's resignation, has never subsided, even with the internment of Dr. Muck. Major Higginson's resignation, therefore, did not come as a surprise to his friends in Brooklyn.

When Dr. Muck led the orchestra in playing the national anthem at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn, March 15, the orchestra and the doctor himself received an ovation. The playing of the national air here was decided upon previously when Major Higginson, after about twenty-four hours deliberation, decided that it should be rendered at all of the concerts of the orchestra.

The devotion of the major to the orchestra, which he created, none can doubt, for not only has he given his time, his thought and his best efforts to it but in April, 1913, he gave an endowment of $1,000,000 to the orchestra in order that it might have an income of $40,000 a year to meet deficits and when that did not suffice he has gone down into his own pocket to make good.

It was thirty-seven years ago that Major Higginson announced that he had long cherished the idea of an orchestra that would play the best music in the best way and give concerts to all who could pay a small price.

om TIMES
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
APR 28 1918
te

Major Higginson Quits.

Founder of Boston Symphony Orchestra Leaves Organization.

Boston, April 27.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, severed all connection with the organization today.

Major Higginson recently defended Dr. Karl Muck, ex-director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he was sharply criticized as being a German subject, particularly after a controversy over playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

An effort had been made to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting recitals at Carnegie Hall, and Major Higginson came to New York City to defeat that effort. He asserted at that time that Dr. Muck, who has since been interned as an enemy alien, was a Swiss citizen; that his status as such had been investigated by the Department of Justice, and that no reason for removing Dr. Muck had been found.

TIMES
ss: New York City

MAJ. HIGGINSON OUT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

Founder Retires After 37 Years and Gives Control of Orchestra to Nine Trustees.

MUCK'S ARREST A BURDEN

Gabrilowitsch or Toscanini May Be New Conductor of Band That Cost Backer $20,000 a Year.

BOSTON, April 27.—Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881, and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired today from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate. The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Major Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking he was reluctant to see it come to an end, and had therefore turned over control to nine Trustees who today filed papers for incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. The Trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone, and Bentley W. Warren.

"The Trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony and a lifelong resident of Boston, is actually a native New Yorker, for he was born in this city Nov. 18, 1834. His mother was Mary Cabot, of a famous Boston family, and on his father's side he is descended from Francis Higginson, who settled in Salem, Mass., in 1629. Major Higginson entered Harvard in the class of 1855, but left to go into the banking business in Boston. In 1891 he gave to Harvard University its athletic ground, known as Soldiers' Field, in memory of his cousin, Colonel Robert Gould Shaw, and others of his associates in the civil war. He also gave in 1899 an endowment of $150,000 for the Harvard Union.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra owed its start and its sole backing for many years to Major Higginson's interest in music, which grew out of a year spent abroad in 1856, which he devoted largely to musical study. The orchestra gave its first concert in Boston on Oct. 22, 1881, and is now closing its thirty-seventh season there. Under such famous conductors as Georg Henschel, Arthur Nikisch, Wilhelm Gericke, Emil Paur, Dr. Karl Muck, and Max Fiedler, the organization has played an important part in the musical life of Boston, New York and Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and many other cities where it was a less frequent visitor. Both Gericke and Muck returned to this country for "second" terms.

In Dr. Muck and twenty-two players of Teutonic origin or citizenship, the orchestra found a serious embarrassment since America entered the war. Dr. Muck is now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., while among the 100 orchestra men, those who may be classed as enemy aliens are to be replaced by Americans or members of the allied nations next Fall. These changes will be the first business to come before the new trustees. The choice of a new conductor, now pending, is said to rest between the Russian pianist, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and the Italian conductor, Arturo Toscanini, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera.

Major Higginson single-handed bore the burden of maintaining his virtuoso orchestra during the thirty-seven years of its activity until now. He used to say that it cost him about $20,000 a year, which he might otherwise have spent on a private yacht. He gave a $28,000 salary to his conductor. The high cost of orchestras has grown in America, but the Boston band has been supported strongly by the public as one of the best of its kind in the world.

Here in New York the Philharmonic with the Pulitzer million bequest and the New York Symphony with H. H. Flagler's $100,000 annual guarantee have accustomed this public to a scale of expenditure unknown years ago. Major Higginson not only set the example, but has frequently declared that he proposed to leave a $1,000,000 endowment fund to the Boston Symphony.

City

8 1918

NSON OUT SYMPHONY

After 37 Years ntrol of Or- e Trustees.

T A BURDEN

oscanini May Be of Band That 0,000 a Year.

—Major Henry L. nded the Boston in 1881, and who in its years of d today from the ill be continued a local syndicate. tra had been re- as somewhat in- nt arrest and in- ous enemy alien ctor.

ndicate said that felt he could no of the under- to see it come therefore turned stees who today poration as the estra Company, re Frederick P. M. A. De Wolfe Frederick E. Henry B. Saw- nd Bentley W.

the undertak- rantees already t upon a sound announcement on their duties the significance e of their city d to the selec- next year, no yet be made, w in progress pose the en- who will be nd will main- ical position of rson, founder nd a lifelong lly a native born in this mother was oston family, is descended o settled in r Higginson s of 1855, but business in to Harvard known as his cousin, and others war. He owment of on.

estra owed for many interest in year spent oted large- orchestra on on Oct. its thirty- nder such Henschel, icke, Emil Fiedler, an im- of Bos- Philadel- and many less fre- Muck second" players ship, the barrass- the war. ort Ogle- 100 or- classed laced by allied ages will efore the con- rest Ossip con- merly of bore irtuoso years used to 0,000 a have gave a The own in been as one orld. rmonic and H. H. have of Major but pro- ment

MORNING TELEGRAPH

s: New York City

APR 28 1918

MUCK'S SPONSOR QUITS ORCHESTRA

Major Henry L. Higginson Turns Over Organization to Board of Nine Trustees.

WAS FOUNDED IN 1891

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, April 27.

Following close upon the internment of Dr. Karl Muck as an enemy alien, Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, retired from the organization to-day.

The affairs of the orchestra will be conducted by a board of nine trustees, to whom Major Higginson turned over the business of the association. Major Higginson founded the orchestra in 1891, and had since been its chief supporter during years of financial stress. He had been a stanch advocate of Dr. Muck, the former director of the orchestra, and had insisted the interned leader was a fit person to head the organiaztion even after the latter had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" some months ago.

The affairs of the orchestra and the future have been in a somewhat chaotic state ever since the arrest of Dr. Muck, and Major Higginson stated he was reluctant to bear the burden of the undertaking further. The new trustees, however, filed articles of incorportion to-day as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc., and the affairs will be in their charge henceforth.

The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already obtained toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Following the announcement here yesterday of the Metropolitan Opera Company that they would drop any members who might be found disloyal to the Government, the further action of that organization is being awaited with interest by opera followers. It has become known that in addition to Robert Leonhardt, baritone, and Max Bloch, tenor, eighteen members of the chorus have been dismissed.

Further dismissals are looked for.

TRIBUNE

s: New York City

APR 28 1918

Major Higginson Resigns as Head of Boston Orchestra

Famous Organization, on Verge of Disbandment, To Be Incorporated

BOSTON, April 27.—With the announcement to-day that Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had severed his connection with that organization, and that the orchestra would be incorporated, it became known that the organization was nearly ready for disbandment.

Trouble over enemy aliens in the personnel, which culminated when Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, was interned, refusal of subscribers to continue unless enemy aliens were dropped and trouble over the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by the orchestra on tour, were enough to make Major Higginson want to wash his hands of the entire affair.

Throughout the Dr. Muck controversy Major Higginson stuck to the conductor until, it is understood, the Department of Justice informed him of evidence that it had obtained. Then, it is said, he decided to withdraw from the organization. Other than to say that he was done he refused to comment on his action to-day.

M. A. De Wolf Howe, one of the new trustees, said tonight the matter of a successor for Dr. Muck was receiving attention and an effort was being made to complete arrangements for the selection at an early date. All those connected with the orchestra have refused to give any hint as to who it may be, except to declare that he will be thoroughly pro Ally.

Hints are eminating from intimate sources that with the organization on its new basis, all members of doubtful loyalty to the cause of America and the Allies will be dropped. A number of enemy aliens are among the personnel, among them several Hungarians. Some of these, however, have applied for citizenship papers and will undoubtedly be retained. The purpose is to remove every semblance of anti-Americanism from the organization.

The new trustees include, in addition to Mr. Howe, Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

Judge Cabot is president of the board. He is Judge of the Juvenile Court and a member of the board of Radcliffe College. Mr. Dane is president of the Brookline Trust Company.

Major Henry Lee Higginson founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881. It originated in a long cherished desire of this patron of the arts to have an orchestra "which should play the best music in the best way," and which should give concerts open to persons able to pay only a small price.

On March 30, 1881, he announced his plan in the Boston newspapers. He was to bring together an orchestra of sixty players, who were to be fairly well paid and also to enjoy the benefit of "careful training." There were to be twenty concerts inthe season, beginning in the middle of October and lasting till the middle of March.

Mr. Henschel was conductor for three seasons. He gave way to Wilhelm Gericke, of Vienna, who immediately began a vigorous reorganization of the body. One of his first acts was the engagement of Mr. Kneisel in 1885.

Charles Martin Loeffler, the distinguished composer, sat at the first desk with Mr. Kneisel, and at the second desk of the first violins were Timothee Adamowski and Otto Roth, the latter a member of the orchestra from beginning to end. All four of these men appeared from time to time as concert soloists with the orchestra, a fact which evidences the high quality of the personnel as brought about under Mr. Gericke. Several other distinguished artists of the ensemble, including Georges Longy, the oboist, were engaged at this time.

Music Hall was to be the place of performance, and the prices of admission were to range from 25 to 75 cents. Every concert was to be preceded by what was in those days called a public rehearsal, an institution familiar to older Philharmonic subscribers.

George Henschel was engaged as the first conductor, and the initial concert took place on October 22, 1881. The concert master of the young organization was Bernard Listemann, who was succeeded several years later by Franz Kneisel. He in turn was succeeded by Anton Witk, the latest concert master. In the orchestra's first season the projected twenty concerts were given, and at the last Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was performed.

Mr. Gericke was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, who was then and is now the foremost concert conductor in Germany. Mr. Nikisch's term was four years.

It was under Mr. Gericke, however, that the orchestra was first heard in New York in 1887 in Steinway Hall. When Mr. Nikisch was conductor the concerts were given in Chickering Hall.

Mr. Nikisch was succeeded by Emil Paur, whose career as conductor was the cause of considerable discussion because of his departures from the orchestra's traditions of finish of style. Mr. Gericke was recalled in the autumn of 1898 and remained till the spring of 1906. Dr. Karl Muck, of Berlin, was then engaged, and made his début as conductor of the orchestra in the autumn. His first appearance in New York took place in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, November 8, 1906.

om HERALD

ddress: New York City

te

MAJOR HIGGINSON HANDS TO OTHERS BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Founder of Organization Retires from It, and Directorate Is Incorporated.

BOSTON, Mass. Saturday.—Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1891 and has sustained it throughout its years of financial stress, retired to-day from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate. The future of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Major Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking he was reluctant to see the orchestra disbanded, and had therefore turned over the control to nine trustees, who to-day incorporated the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ednest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already obtained toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement states. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

It is thought here that Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist and conductor, will be selected as leader for the orchestra, but none of the new trustees will talk on the subject. There is a strong movement, however, among musical critics and lovers of music here urging the appointment of Sergius Rachmaninoff, a Russian who escaped from Belgium when it was invaded by the Huns and is now in the United States. He has composed a successful one act opera, "Alexko," which was performed in Moscow. He was a pupil of Siloti and Arensky in Moscow, where he won thhe grand gold medal.

Miss Cox on Stage Again.

Miss Louise Cox returned yesterday afternoon to the leading rôle in the musical comedy "Oh Look" in the Vanderbilt Theatre. She was the original Grace Tyler, but had to retire within a week because of illness.

TELEGRAM

ess: New York City.

HAD RADIO PLANT, REAL CHARGE IN DR. MUCK'S CASE

Orchestra Leader's Summer Home on Maine Coast Declared Full of Apparatus.

SHADOWED FOR MONTHS IN STRANGE ACTIVITY.

BOSTON, Sunday.—The charge that he maintained a powerful wireless station on the coast of Maine is declared to-day to have been the secret cause of the arrest and internment of Dr. Karl Muck, formerly director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For many months, it is said, agents of the Department of Justice, morally certain that Dr. Muck was working against the interests of the United States, shadowed him. When he was arrested he learned that the authorities "had the goods on him," and rather than face the more serious charge, it is said, he decided to accept the fate of an enemy alien.

In connection with the case interesting reports have come from Seal Harbor, Me., concerning Dr. Muck's activities while a summer resident there. It was in 1917 that Dr. Muck took a lease of the fine summer residence of Dr. A. E. Lawrence, of New York, perched upon a lofty hill commanding a view of the sea, and being visible, when brilliantly lighted, to vessels twenty miles at sea.

Not long after Dr. Muck's arrival in Sea Harbor he is said to have begun to manifest an extraordinary interest in wireless telegraphy. Reports of his interest in wireless and of strange lights flashing in the Muck windows at nights led to a trip to Seal Harbor of Department of Justice agents last summer. It is said they found there the most elaborate wireless station in Maine—a perfect maze of electrical attachments and apparatus.

om WORLD

ddress: New York City

te

HIGGINSON QUITS BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Founder Turns It Over to Nine Trustees—Muck's Successor to Please Public.

BOSTON, April 27.—Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and who sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired to-day from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate.

The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor. Higginson had insisted on retaining Muck until the arrest of the latter.

Members of the syndicate said that while Major Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking, he was reluctant to see it come to an end, and had turned over control to nine trustees, who to-day filed papers of incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country.

"With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made; but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

SUN

New York City.

APR 28 1918

HIGGINSON LEAVES BOSTON SYMPHONY

Famous Orchestra to Be Perpetuated by Committee of Music Lovers.

ENEMY ALIENS MUST GO

Founded in 1881, It Has Had Notable Career—Selecting Dr. Muck's Successor.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BOSTON, April 27.—That the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra has been on the verge of dropping out of existence for a number of weeks became known only to-day with the announcement of Major Henry L. Higginson, "father" of the organization since its foundation in 1881, that he had severed all connection with the orchestra. The declaration caused a sensation in musical circles.

It is admitted by Major Higginson that it was his intention for a time to disband the organization, but he was persuaded not to do so when a practical plan for its continuation for music's sake alone was presented to him. The orchestra passes into the hands of a corporate board of trustees, composed of leading Boston men, all music lovers.

Major Higginson's action follows the succession of disturbances which have marked the orchestra's career during recent months. Trouble over enemy aliens in the personnel reached a head when Dr. Karl Muck, the leader, refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence. The refusal to play the selection was denied by Major Higginson, but the agitations have been so persistent that the Major, a loyal American to the core, decided to part company with the orchestra.

Other than to say he was "done" Major Higginson refused to-night to make any comment on his action or the orchestra's affairs.

Selecting Dr. Muck's Successor.

The matter of selecting a successor for the former conductor, Dr. Muck, is being seriously considered, according to M. A. de Wolfe Howe, one of the new trustees. The declaration is made that the new conductor will be thoroughly pro-ally.

From sources intimate with the orchestra's affairs hints are emanating that all members of doubtful loyalty to the cause of America and the Allies will be let go in the near future. It is declared that every taint of anti-Americanism will be removed.

The new trustees, in addition to Mr. Howe, include Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

A statement issued to-day said:

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis. They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year no fuel announcement can yet be made; but negotiations are now in progress which have for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Founded to Play Best Music.

Major Henry Lee Higginson founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881. It originated in a long cherished desire of this patron of the arts to have an orchestra "which should play the best music in the best way" and which should give concerts open to persons able to pay only a small price.

George Henschel was engaged as the first conductor and the initial concert took place on October 22, 1881. The concertmaster of the young organization was Bernard Listemann, who was succeeded several years later by Franz Kneisel. He in turn was succeeded by Anton Witek, the latest concertmaster.

Mr. Henschel was conductor for three seasons. He gave way to Wilhelm Gericke of Vienna, who immediately began a vigorous reorganization of the body. One of his first acts was the engagement of Mr. Kneisel in 1885. This artist remained with th eorchestra till 1908, when he with the other three members of the famous Kneisel Quartet, organized by him, separated from the Symphony Orchestra in order to devote his entire time to chamber music.

Mr. Gericke was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, who was then and is now the foremost concert conductor in Germany

Mr. Nikisch was succeeded by Emil Paur, whose career as conductor was the cause of considerable discussion because of his departures from the orchestra's traditions of finish of style. Mr. Gericke was recalled in the autumn of 1898 and remained till the spring of 1906. Dr. Karl Muck of Berlin was then engaged and made his debut as conductor of the orchestra in the autumn.

SAY MUCK USED RADIO.

Neighbors at Summer Home Throw Light on His Activities.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

BANGOR, Me., April 27.—Residents of Seal Harbor, a summer resort on the island of Mount Desert, eight [illegible] from Ba[illegible]

AMERICAN

ss: New York City.

APR 29 1918

MRS. JAY IN FIGHT TO STOP IRISH MEETING

Asks Owner of Madison Square Garden to Prohibit Gathering of Agitators Unfriendly to British

Acts as Chairman of Woman Vigilantes, Organized to Report Unpatriotic Society Folk

Mrs. William Jay, society and musical leader, yesterday asked the owners of Madison Square Garden to prohibit a mass meeting of the Irish Progressive League, scheduled to be held there next Saturday night. Mrs. Jay recently led the camapign against Dr. Karl Muck, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, who has been interned as an enemy alien.

Since then she has become chairman of "The Intimate Committee for the Severance of All Social and Professional Relations with Enemy Sympathizers."

This organization is described as a body of woman vigilantes, who report every doubtful phrase they hear in the high social circles to which they belong to the Federal authorities. They are said to be a sort of feminine Ku-Klux-Klan travelling in the best set. Their effectiveness lies in their secrecy. Their names appear on no list, and society does not know who they are. Some members of the committee do not even know who other members are.

Any seditious or treasonable or even questionable—from a standpoint of patriotism—phrase which may be spoken at a Fifth avenue or Park avenue tea is likely to be heard by one of these women, who are pledged to report it to the Government Secret Service.

OPERATES IN BIG CITIES.

Similar committees are said to be operating in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago and other large cities. They are all associated with the parent body in New York.

Mrs. Jay's letter to the president and directors of the New York Life Incurance Company, owners of the Garden, was written as chairman of this body, which has pledged itself to have no relations of any kind not only with enemies, but with any person suspected of being sympathetic toward them.

The basis of protest is given in the following paragraph quoted from the letter:

"The Intimate Committee protests vehemently against this meeting, at which such notorious Irish agitators as James Devoy and Mrs. H. Sheehy-Skeffington are scheduled to speak. The character of this meeeting is disclosed by the announcements and its purpose, no doubt, is to embarrass and assail our British ally. Realizing that the participants in this un-American demonstration in no way represent the good Irish element in our midst, the committee takes this opportunity of requesting you to cancel the contract on the grounds of unwillingness to endorse tacitly such a meeting."

POINTS TO A "DODGER."

Mrs. Jay pointed to a "dodger" advertising the meeting. It said:

"Come to the Monster Mass Meeting and indorse the Irish Republic which the Men of Easter Week established."

The list of speakers, besides Mrs. Skeffington and John Devoy, included Dr. P. McCartan, Joseph P. McGarrity, Peter Golden, Padraic Colum, Miss Nora Connolly, the Very Rev. Peter E. Magennis, E. F. Cassidy, Joseph D. Cannon and Liam Mellows. Mrs. Jay said:

"This undoubtedly anti-British meeting is scheduled for the last night of the Liberty Loan campaign and at a time when the eyes of all the world are centred on the battle for liberty now raging on the fields of France and Flanders."

Representatives of the New York Life last night stated that Mrs. Jay's letter had not been received, but probably would be found in the morning mail. They would make no comment pending receipt of the letter.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date

BOSTON SYMPHONY WITHOUT MAJOR HIGGINSON.

Major Henry L. Higginson's withdrawal from the Boston Symphony Orchestra ends an association of nearly forty years' duration which has contributed greatly to the elevation of musical standards in this country and in a unique way to the individual fame of the orchestra's founder and patron. It was his orchestra in a personal sense which it cost him "no more than a private yacht" to maintain; but it was also a public institution which provided not only for Boston but for New York and other cities the best concert music performed under the direction of the most eminent conductors.

Few millionaires' fads have been as productive of public benefit, and the regret must be that Major Higginson is impelled to abandon an interest which should logically have lasted through his lifetime. But behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! If it had not been for the supercilious attitude of an enemy alien concertmaster toward the national anthem, there would have been no violation of the Brahmin traditions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, no exposure of its internal affairs to vulgar publicity and no controversy such as has led its venerable founder to retire and its conductor to an internment camp.

No doubt the organization will survive, as it deserves to survive, under the nine trustees who take over Major Higginson's support; but it will be "the Symphony" without its Mæcenas.

From ENQUIRER

Address Philadelphia, Pa.

Date APR 29 1918

Founder of Boston Orchestra Retires

The retirement of Major Henry L. Higginson from the active direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an event of sufficient musical interest and importance to be worthy of note. It might have been sufficiently explained by the fact that Major Higginson is now in his eighty-fourth year and might therefore, desire a release from the responsibilities which his relation to the orchestra involved, but he is still quite active in business and as much as ever interested in music, and it may be supposed that his withdrawal was hastened by the abnormal conditions of which the war has been the occasion.

Every one knows that at the beginning of the musical season which has just closed Major Higginson did not intelligently appreciate the situation confronting him or rise to the level of an extraordinary emergency. He resented the restrictions which the war necessitated and commented upon them in a manner that grieved his friends and offended the patriotic sentiment of the American people.

These were indiscretions which it may be believed that he subsequently regretted and for which in fairness a large allowance should be made. Some of the criticism to which he objected was unjustified, because it rested upon a basis of fiction rather than fact, and Major Higginson's feeling of pride in the great organization he had established and which for so many years he had sustained can be understood and sympathized with apart from the inaptitudes and impolicies of its expression. In his eyes the orchestra was a kind of sacrosanct institution existing by itself in a far removed world of art where the clash of arms and the animosities inseparable from an international conflict should not be permitted to enter, and he could only with difficulty bring himself to associate the performance of music with the exigencies of the ardent patriotism by which the great mass of the American Nation is now inspired.

That is the secret of the unfortunate attitude in this connection which Major Higginson at one time assumed, but even those who most emphatically disapproved and most vigorously protested against the stand he took never dreamed of questioning his loyalty as a citizen or his ability and integrity and high character as a man, or thought of disparaging the value of his services as an educator and philanthropist. It is no exaggeration to say that no man in this country has done as much as Major Higginson to cultivate and to gratify the music taste of this community within the sphere to which his attention was devoted. The high standard of excellence to which the symphony orchestras of this and other American cities have attained was first set by the one which Major Higginson founded thirty-seven years ago, whose continued existence was only made possible by his unsparing and unbegrudging munificence.

From ENQUIRER

Address Philadelphia, Pa.

Date APR 29

on its back.

—Colonel Henry L. Higginson, friend and apologist of Dr. Carl Muck, has retired from the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The movement to Americanize that splendid organization now seems to be completed.

---

om EVENING MAIL

ddress: New York City

APR 29

A Good Man's Bitter Disappointment.

The withdrawal of Major Henry Lee Higginson from the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a severe blow to the cause of good music in America. By common consent the Boston orchestra is regarded as the best organization of its kind in the world. That position it had attained largely through the devoted efforts of Major Higginson.

It is an open secret that the Boston Symphony has been in a definite sense a public charity. Its deficits year after year have been met from Major Higginson's pocket. The work of endowing music, which has been done by governments and sovereigns in some of the great European countries, has been performed in America by the Boston banker and veteran of the civil war on his own initiative.

The necessity that has brought about Major Higginson's retirement must come as a cruel disillusionment to him. This typical Boston man has been a devoted worker for America's cause since his young manhood. When the civil war broke out he proved his patriotism by enlisting in the United States Volunteers. He was severely wounded in the battle of Aldie, Virginia, in 1863. Yet he fought through the war. His retirement at the end of the struggle with the brevet rank of lieutenant-colonel testifies to the value of his military services to his country.

With the return of peace he devoted himself in large measure to the promotion of the artistic and educational life of America. Of these philanthropic endeavors the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been perhaps the most important phase. In the sketch of Major Higginson's life in "Who's Who in America" it is recorded that "he has devoted a considerable sum to organize a symphony orchestra at Boston." Major Higginson's modesty is so marked that he has refused to give his name to the organization which he founded in 1881, and which is the work of his brain and of his heart. The fact is that this incomparable musical contribution to Boston, to America and to the world is in all essentials what Major Higginson's highly developed musical taste and knowledge, his unstinted financial generosity and his unremitting labor of love have made it.

The complications that have brought about Major Higginson's withdrawal are to be regretted because of the loss to the cause of the best music in America which the event signifies. They are no less to be regretted on account of the bitter disappointment which they have brought to a public-spirited citizen in the late evening of his useful life.

Saving comes too late when you get to the bottom.

STANDARD UNION

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

s

APR 29 1918

NEW ALL-AMERICAN ORCHESTRA PLANNED

Brooklyn Organization Hopes to Take Place of Enemy Alien Combinations.

CONTERNO THE CONDUCTOR.

Getting Ready for First Concert in Six Weeks.

Brooklyn is to be the home of a symphony orchestra, to be composed of professional musicians who are American citizens. It aims to take the place of organizations disrupted because of the disqualification og enemy aliens, and contemplates playing a repertoire of the highest class. According to present plans its home will be Brooklyn, where the Academy of Music will be used, and frequent tours about the country will be made.

Giovanni Conterno, at present instructor of music in Brooklyn public schools and in the City College, will be the leader of the orchestra. Mr. Conterno and his father have long been identified with local musical affairs.

No list of backers of the enterprise has been made public. Ex-Borough President Lewis H. Pounds and ex-Mayor David A. Boody are said to be among those interested. Subscriptions are now being sought, and the intention of the promoters is to secure enough big names to make the scheme representative of Brooklyn.

An effort was made to interest Major Henry L. Higginson, who backed the Boston Symphony Orchestra for years, but withdrew after his director, Dr. Karl Muck was interned as a dangerous alien. It is understood his answer was unsatisfactory.

The orchestra contemplates a summer series and hopes to have its first appearance at the Academy in about six weeks.

EVENING GLOBE

ss New York City

THE ENEMY MUSICIANS.

The loyalty test the rulers of the Metropolitan Opera House have at length seen fit to apply to their various employees ought to be administered with impartiality or it will be the flimsiest sort of farce. The first prey bagged consisted of two of the least important and most harmless of the singers. More valuable, and potentially more dangerous, members of the company did not figure in the initial quarry. The labor of the mountain achieved the proverbially minute result.

Much has been made in the public prints of the status of Mme Matzenauer, the eminent contralto of the company, and much has been said of her indispensableness to Mr. Gatti-Casazza's artistic organization. Her status as an enemy is for legal experts to decide, but how could she be indispensable to a company that has at its disposal a contralto of the ability and experience of Louise Homer, another of such brilliant gifts as young Sophie Braslau, and no less an artist than Olive Fremstad willing and ready to return in several of her great contralto rôles? Indispensable with those three women at hand?—as our French brethren would say, "Ca c'est la blague!"

From Boston comes the consoling report that Dr. Muck is not after all to have as successor a man equally notorious for German sympathies—if not for hostile activities—and who is, besides, a much less capable conductor than the accomplished doctor. The gentlemen of Boston have heeded this time rumors from outland regions, and it now seems that the distinguished conductorship in their gift is likely to go either to Arturo Toscanini or to Sir Henry Wood. The devotion of both of these gentlemen to the Allied cause is well known, and as orchestral conductors both are men of the very first order.

EVENING SUN

New York City

RACHMANINOFF WILL SUCCEED MUCK, REPORT

Russian Ready to Accept Call to Boston Symphony.

The report was current in New York musical circles to-day that Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff, the Russian composer, has been chosen conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and that he is prepared to accept. It is said that the composer has been in Boston a week without the fact having become generally known, even to musicians. The report is not confirmed, but it came from a source such that persons prominent in the musical world believe it to be correct.

Rachmanioff, if he become the Boston Symphony leader, will succeed Dr. Carl Muck, who was held following an investigation of his work for the German Government. Following Dr. Mucks arrest Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra, resigned. New guarantors have come forward, it is said, and their proposal to Rachmaninoff he is said to have accepted.

The Russian was born in Nijni Novgorod in 1873.

APR 30 1918

PICK MAN FOR MUCK'S PLACE

Russian Composer Rachmaninoff Said to Be Boston Symphony Choice.

It is reported to-day that Sergei Rachmaninoff, the Russian composer, has been definitely appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, replacing Dr. Karl Muck, recently arrested and now in prison awaiting investigation of his alleged relations with the German government. The arrest of Dr. Muck was shortly followed by the resignation of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and guarantor of the orchestra. It is understood that a new body of guarantors has since been formed, and that the appointment of the new conductor has been made by them.

No confirmation of the report has yet been received from Boston, but it is stated on good authority that Rachmaninoff is at present in America, and has for the past week been in conference with the new directors of Boston's orchestral affairs.

Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff was born in 1873 at Nijni-Novgorod, and studied music under Siloti and Arensky at the Moscow Conservatory, where he won the gold medal in 1891. His home is at present in Petrograd, but eight years ago he made a tour of America, successfully conducting and playing his own compositions.

His second symphony was introduced in New York this year by the Philharmonic Society, under the leadership of Josef Stransky, and was at once recognized as a masterpiece. It was also played here and elsewhere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck's direction.

In addition to his symphonies and piano compositions, of which the C sharp minor prelude is perhaps the most popular in America, Rachmaninoff has to his credit a number of beautiful songs and a one-act opera, "Aleko." He is recognized as one of the most significant musicians of modern Russia.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

ress: New York City

MAY 1 1918

RUSSIAN MAY TAKE DR. MUCK'S PLACE

Sergei Rachmaninoff, Noted Composer, Is Newest Candidate for Boston Symphony Honors.

MANY OTHERS ARE MENTIONED

A new candidate for Dr. Karl Muck's position as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was nominated yesterday, when it was discovered that Sergei Rachmaninoff has been following the example of so many other orchestraless conductors and spending a few days in Boston.

It was not generally known that the Russian composer was in this country until his name began to be mentioned as the new Boston leader. He has long been looked upon as one of the foremost musicians of to-day. His songs and piano compositions are frequently heard in recitals, while both Dr. Muck and Josef Stransky played his Second Symphony during the season just past.

The resignation of Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, followed shortly after the sensational arrest of Dr. Muck by Federal authorities. A new board of guarantors has been formed, however, and it is generally understood that there will be a weeding out of all the enemy aliens who played last year with the orchestra.

Mrs. William Jay, who was at the forefront of the agitation against the Russian director, says that while she does not know the specific charges brought against the doctor, she understands that he was held on fifteen counts. For some time Arturo Toscanini was the favorite candidate for the place. It has even said that Major Higginson had written him a letter asking him to come back. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, has been the most popular nominee, while Leopold Stokowski, the able conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, also figured in the rumor.

Those inclined to favor a leader who is unmistakably pro-American and prefer mention Henry Hadley, Sir Henry Wood, Vincent D'Indy and Pierre Monteux as good men for the place. Another possibility is Henri Verbrugghen, a Belgian, who is also in this country.

Meanwhile all trains bound Boston-ward are filled with conductors all anxious to uphold the artistic traditions of America's foremost orchestra, and some of them with round-trip tickets. Whoever is chosen, however, it is easy to predict that he will play the national anthem with no objections raised.

TRIBUNE

ss: New York City

APR 30 1918

New Yorkers and all lovers of fine music will read of Major Higginson's retirement from the Boston Symphony with very deep regret. For more reasons than one. This fine organization was almost entirely Major Higginson's personal creation. It was a very remarkable thing that in this Boston banker there should have been found such almost unerring judgment in the selection of men and conductors and such tact and decision in administering the affairs of the orchestra. It is, we imagine, almost unique in the whole range of modern symphonic societies. What consequence the transfer from one-man control to a board of directors will have on the Boston Symphony must remain to be seen. We trust that all misgivings will be disappointed.

117

est for May 4, 1918 Literary Digest.

DR. MUCK'S TEARS

DR. MUCK WEPT, it is reported by the press, as he went to his internment-camp. The difference between him and enemy aliens of his artistic profession in Germany is that their cause for tears, if they shed any, was furnished them after their incarceration. Dr. Muck's case has been one occasioning heated discussion, and the camouflage of his Swiss citizenship seems to give his defenders a leg to stand on; but "a well-known and prominent German-American in New York" is quoted in Musical America (New York) as saying: "Whether it is decided that Dr. Muck's claim of Swiss citizenship is valid or not, one thing is certain: he is a Prussian at heart, a Prussian in his manner, as he is a Prussian in his policies. And he always will be such." "Mephisto," which is the pseudonym under which the chief editorial authority of this reliable musical paper appears, gives an examination of the doctor's case that seems cool-headed and unprejudiced. Outside of rumor there has been practically no statement of his culpability other than that of Attorney-General Gregory that "his presence at large is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States." "Mephisto" gathers up such facts or inferences as seem more menacing than the question of his truculent style of playing the "Star-Spangled Banner." Thus:

"Reports in the press are to the effect that Dr. Muck is charged not only with being an enemy alien, in spite of his claim to Swiss citizenship, but that he has been the center from which have radiated a number of sinister influences in the shape of German agents who have been gathering information and fomenting trouble in this country.

"It is claimed that before we got into the war Dr. Muck maintained close relations with Count von Bernstorff, then Ambassador for Germany in this country; that he made many trips to Washington to see von Bernstorff, and met him in New York from time to time. As von Bernstorff had no overpowering interest in music, such conferences were not regarded as necessary for purely artistic reasons.

"There were also reports to the effect that a very intimate friend of Dr. Muck's, Elizabeth Van Endert, was an intermediary between the worthy doctor and the authorities in Berlin. . . . . .

"The matter has considerable interest, outside the prominence of the parties involved, for the reason that when the first outbreak of animosity against the German singers came, many well-intentioned persons objected on the ground that suspicions against these artists were wholly unwarranted, for the reason that they would be the last persons who would be amenable to intrigue or who would work for the Kaiser and his military and junker friends. Since then, however, the revelations before the Senate Committee have shown that the German High Command was astute enough to use some of these very people for their nefarious purposes. There is not any question that Hans Tauscher, Gadski's husband, was deep in the plots."

The public controversy has involved others besides Dr. Muck, and they are not ones who have attempted to put forth any claim for Swiss citizenship. "Mephisto" proceeds:

"You remember that Major Higginson again and again declared, after he had been to Washington, that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had been given a clean bill of health. This certainly excuses the Major, who can not for a moment be suspected of doing anything against the interests of this country. Major Higginson, while he has been criticized for some ill-considered talk at the time the trouble began over Muck's refusal to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' must be looked upon as a loyal citizen, a veteran of the Civil War, a man of unquestioned standing and wealth, who has acted in good faith all along. While Mr. C. A. Ellis has said a lot of foolish things at the same time, Mr. Ellis is a reputable, responsible American citizen. He, too, would never consciously have done anything which would militate against the interests of his country.

"If the charges against Dr. Muck can be substantiated—and it seems from the action of the authorities in Washington that they can be—it simply means that Dr. Muck was able to throw dust in the eyes both of Major Higginson and of Mr. Ellis, and deliberately deceived them. There is no other explanation."

APR 30 1918

PICK MAN FOR MUCK'S PLACE

Russian Composer Rachmaninoff Said to Be Boston Symphony Choice.

It is reported to-day that Sergei Rachmaninoff, the Russian composer, has been definitely appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, replacing Dr. Karl Muck, recently arrested and now in prison awaiting investigation of his alleged relations with the German government. The arrest of Dr. Muck was shortly followed by the resignation of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and guarantor of the orchestra. It is understood that a new body of guarantors has since been formed, and that the appointment of the new conductor has been made by them.

No confirmation of the report has yet been received from Boston, but it is stated on good authority that Rachmaninoff is at present in America, and has for the past week been in conference with the new directors of Boston's orchestral affairs.

Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff was born in 1873 at Nijni-Novgorod, and studied music under Siloti and Arensky at the Moscow Conservatory, where he won the gold medal in 1891. His home is at present in Petrograd, but eight years ago he made a tour of America, successfully conducting and playing his own compositions.

His second symphony was introduced in New York this year by the Philharmonic Society, under the leadership of Josef Stransky, and was at once recognized as a masterpiece. It was also played here and elsewhere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck's direction.

In addition to his symphonies and piano compositions, of which the C sharp minor prelude is perhaps the most popular in America, Rachmaninoff has to his credit a number of beautiful songs and a one-act opera, "Aleko." He is recognized as one of the most significant musicians of modern Russia.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

ess: New York City

RUSSIAN MAY TAKE DR. MUCK'S PLACE

Sergei Rachmaninoff, Noted Composer, Is Newest Candidate for Boston Symphony Honors.

MANY OTHERS ARE MENTIONED

A new candidate for Dr. Karl Muck's position as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was nominated yesterday, when it was discovered that Sergei Rachmaninoff has been following the example of so many other orchestraless conductors and spending a few days in Boston.

It was not generally known that the Russian composer was in this country until his name began to be mentioned as the new Boston leader. He has long been looked upon as one of the foremost musicians of to-day. His songs and piano compositions are frequently heard in recitals, while both Dr. Muck and Josef Stransky played his Second Symphony during the season just past.

The resignation of Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, followed shortly after the sensational arrest of Dr. Muck by Federal authorities. A new board of guarantors has been formed, however, and it is generally understood that there will be a weeding out of all the enemy aliens who played last year with the orchestra.

Mrs. William Jay, who was at the forefront of the agitation against the Prussian director, says that while she does not know the specific charges brought against the doctor, she understands that he was held on fifteen counts.

For some time Arturo Toscanini was the favorite candidate for the place. It was even said that Major Higginson had written him a letter asking him to come back. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, has been the most popular nominee, while Leopold Stokowski, the able conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, also figured in the rumor.

Those inclined to favor a leader who is unmistakably pro-American and pro-Ally mention Henry Hadley, Sir Henry Wood, Vincent D'Indy and Pierre Monteux as good men for the place. Another possibility is Henri Verbrugghen, a Belgian, who is also in this country.

Meanwhile all trains bound Boston-ward are filled with conductors all anxious to uphold the artistic traditions of America's foremost orchestra, and none of them with round-trip tickets. Whoever is chosen, however, it is easy to predict that he will play the national anthem with no objections raised.

TRIBUNE

ess: New York City

APR 30 1918

New Yorkers and all lovers of fine music will read of Major Higginson's retirement from the Boston Symphony with very deep regret. For more reasons than one. This fine organization was almost entirely Major Higginson's personal creation. It was a very remarkable thing that in this Boston banker there should have been found such almost unerring judgment in the selection of men and conductors and such tact and decision in administering the affairs of the orchestra. It is, we imagine, almost unique in the whole range of modern symphonic societies. What consequence the transfer from one-man control to a board of directors will have on the Boston Symphony must remain to be seen. We trust that all misgivings will be disappointed.

est for May 4, 1918

DR. MUCK'S TEARS

DR. MUCK WEPT, it is reported by the press, as he went to his internment-camp. The difference between him and enemy aliens of his artistic profession in Germany is that their cause for tears, if they shed any, was furnished them after their incarceration. Dr. Muck's case has been one occasioning heated discussion, and the camouflage of his Swiss citizenship seems to give his defenders a leg to stand on; but "a well-known and prominent German-American in New York" is quoted in Muscial America (New York) as saying: "Whether it is decided that Dr. Muck's claim of Swiss citizenship is valid or not, one thing is certain: he is a Prussian at heart, a Prussian in his manner, as he is a Prussian in his policies. And he always will be such." "Mephisto," which is the pseudonym under which the chief editorial authority of this reliable musical paper appears, gives an examination of the doctor's case that seems cool-headed and unprejudiced. Outside of rumor there has been practically no statement of his culpability other than that of Attorney-General Gregory that "his presence at large is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States." "Mephisto" gathers up such facts or inferences as seem more menacing than the question of his truculent style of playing the "Star-Spangled Banner." Thus:

"Reports in the press are to the effect that Dr. Muck is charged not only with being an enemy alien, in spite of his claim to Swiss citizenship, but that he has been the center from which have radiated a number of sinister influences in the shape of German agents who have been gathering information and fomenting trouble in this country.

"It is claimed that before we got into the war Dr. Muck maintained close relations with Count von Bernstorff, then Ambassador for Germany in this country; that he made many trips to Washington to see von Bernstorff, and met him in New York from time to time. As von Bernstorff had no overpowering interest in music, such conferences were not regarded as necessary for purely artistic reasons.

"There were also reports to the effect that a very intimate friend of Dr. Muck's, Elizabeth Van Endert, was an intermediary between the worthy doctor and the authorities in Berlin. . . . . .

"The matter has considerable interest, outside the prominence of the parties involved, for the reason that when the first outbreak of animosity against the German singers came, many well-intentioned persons objected on the ground that suspicions against these artists were wholly unwarranted, for the reason that they would be the last persons who would be amenable to intrigue or who would work for the Kaiser and his military and junker friends. Since then, however, the revelations before the Senate Committee have shown that the German High Command was astute enough to use some of these very people for their nefarious purposes. There is not any question that Hans Tauscher, Gadski's husband, was deep in the plots."

The public controversy has involved others besides Dr. Muck, and they are not ones who have attempted to put forth any claim for Swiss citizenship. "Mephisto" proceeds:

"You remember that Major Higginson again and again declared, after he had been to Washington, that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had been given a clean bill of health. This certainly excuses the Major, who can not for a moment be suspected of doing anything against the interests of this country. Major Higginson, while he has been criticized for some ill-considered talk at the time the trouble began over Muck's refusal to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' must be looked upon as a loyal citizen, a veteran of the Civil War, a man of unquestioned standing and wealth, who has acted in good faith all along. While Mr. C. A. Ellis has said a lot of foolish things at the same time, Mr. Ellis is a reputable, responsible American citizen. He, too, would never consciously have done anything which would militate against the interests of his country.

"If the charges against Dr. Muck can be substantiated—and it seems from the action of the authorities in Washington that they can be—it simply means that Dr. Muck was able to throw dust in the eyes both of Major Higginson and of Mr. Ellis, and deliberately deceived them. There is no other explanation."

APR 30 1918

PICK MAN FOR MUCK'S PLACE

Russian Composer Rachmaninoff Said to Be Boston Symphony Choice.

It is reported to-day that Sergei Rachmaninoff, the Russian composer, has been definitely appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, replacing Dr. Karl Muck, recently arrested and now in prison awaiting investigation of his alleged relations with the German government. The arrest of Dr. Muck was shortly followed by the resignation of Major Henry L. Higginson, the founder and guarantor of the orchestra. It is understood that a new body of guarantors has since been formed, and that the appointment of the new conductor has been made by them.

No confirmation of the report has yet been received from Boston, but it is stated on good authority that Rachmaninoff is at present in America, and has for the past week been in conference with the new directors of Boston's orchestral affairs.

Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff was born in 1873 at Nijni-Novgorod, and studied music under Siloti and Arensky at the Moscow Conservatory, where he won the gold medal in 1891. His home is at present in Petrograd, but eight years ago he made a tour of America, successfully conducting and playing his own compositions.

His second symphony was introduced in New York this year by the Philharmonic Society, under the leadership of Josef Stransky, and was at once recognized as a masterpiece. It was also played here and elsewhere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck's direction.

In addition to his symphonies and piano compositions, of which the C sharp minor prelude is perhaps the most popular in America, Rachmaninoff has to his credit a number of beautiful songs and a one-act opera, "Aleko." He is recognized as one of the most significant musicians of modern Russia.

Germans Near Sebastopol.

RUSSIAN MAY TAKE DR. MUCK'S PLACE

Sergei Rachmaninoff, Noted Composer, Is Newest Candidate for Boston Symphony Honors.

MANY OTHERS ARE MENTIONED

A new candidate for Dr. Karl Muck's position as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was nominated yesterday, when it was discovered that Sergei Rachmaninoff has been following the example of so many other orchestraless conductors, and spending a few days in Boston.

It was not generally known that the Russian composer was in this country until his name began to be mentioned as the new Boston leader. He has long been looked upon as one of the foremost musicians of to-day. His songs and piano compositions are frequently heard in recitals, while both Dr. Muck and Josef Stransky played his Second Symphony during the season just past.

The resignation of Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the orchestra, followed shortly after the sensational arrest of Dr. Muck by Federal authorities. A new board of guarantors has been formed, however, and it is generally understood that there will be a weeding out of all the enemy aliens who played last year with the orchestra.

Mrs. William Jay, who was at the forefront of the agitation against the Prussian director, says that while she does not know the specific charges brought against the doctor, she understands that he was held on fifteen counts.

For some time Arturo Toscanini was the favorite candidate for the place. It was even said that Major Higginson had written him a letter asking him to come back. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the pianist, has been the most popular nominee, while Leopold Stokowski, the able conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, also figured in the rumor.

Those inclined to favor a leader who is unmistakably pro-American and pro-Ally mention Henry Hadley, Sir Henry Wood, Vincent D'Indy and Pierre Monteux as good men for the place. Another possibility is Henri Verbrugghen, a Belgian, who is also in this country.

Meanwhile all trains bound Boston-ward are filled with conductors all anxious to uphold the artistic traditions of America's foremost orchestra, and some of them with round-trip tickets. Whoever is chosen, however, it is easy to predict that he will play the national anthem with no objections raised.

TRIBUNE

ess: New York City

APR 30 1918

New Yorkers and all lovers of fine music will read of Major Higginson's retirement from the Boston Symphony with very deep regret. For more reasons than one. This fine organization was almost entirely Major Higginson's personal creation. It was a very remarkable thing that in this Boston banker there should have been found such almost unerring judgment in the selection of men and conductors and such tact and decision in administering the affairs of the orchestra. It is, we imagine, almost unique in the whole range of modern symphonic societies. What consequence the transfer from one-man control to a board of directors will have on the Boston Symphony must remain to be seen. We trust that all misgivings will be disappointed.

est for May 4, 1918

DR. MUCK'S TEARS

DR. MUCK WEPT, it is reported by the press, as he went to his internment-camp. The difference between him and enemy aliens of his artistic profession in Germany is that their cause for tears, if they shed any, was furnished them after their incarceration. Dr. Muck's case has been one occasioning heated discussion, and the camouflage of his Swiss citizenship seems to give his defenders a leg to stand on; but "a well-known and prominent German-American in New York" is quoted in Muscial America (New York) as saying: "Whether it is decided that Dr. Muck's claim of Swiss citizenship is valid or not, one thing is certain: he is a Prussian at heart, a Prussian in his manner, as he is a Prussian in his policies. And he always will be such." "Mephisto," which is the pseudonym under which the chief editorial authority of this reliable musical paper appears, gives an examination of the doctor's case that seems cool-headed and unprejudiced. Outside of rumor there has been practically no statement of his culpability other than that of Attorney-General Gregory that "his presence at large is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States." "Mephisto" gathers up such facts or inferences as seem more menacing than the question of his truculent style of playing the "Star-Spangled Banner." Thus:

"Reports in the press are to the effect that Dr. Muck is charged not only with being an enemy alien, in spite of his claim to Swiss citizenship, but that he has been the center from which have radiated a number of sinister influences in the shape of German agents who have been gathering information and fomenting trouble in this country.

"It is claimed that before we got into the war Dr. Muck maintained close relations with Count von Bernstorff, then Ambassador for Germany in this country; that he made many trips to Washington to see von Bernstorff, and met him in New York from time to time. As von Bernstorff had no overpowering interest in music, such conferences were not regarded as necessary for purely artistic reasons.

"There were also reports to the effect that a very intimate friend of Dr. Muck's, Elizabeth Van Endert, was an intermediary between the worthy doctor and the authorities in Berlin. . . . . .

"The matter has considerable interest, outside the prominence of the parties involved, for the reason that when the first outbreak of animosity against the German singers came, many well-intentioned persons objected on the ground that suspicions against these artists were wholly unwarranted, for the reason that they would be the last persons who would be amenable to intrigue or who would work for the Kaiser and his military and junker friends. Since then, however, the revelations before the Senate Committee have shown that the German High Command was astute enough to use some of these very people for their nefarious purposes. There is not any question that Hans Tauscher, Gadski's husband, was deep in the plots."

The public controversy has involved others besides Dr. Muck, and they are not ones who have attempted to put forth any claim for Swiss citizenship. "Mephisto" proceeds:

"You remember that Major Higginson again and again declared, after he had been to Washington, that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had been given a clean bill of health. This certainly excuses the Major, who can not for a moment be suspected of doing anything against the interests of this country. Major Higginson, while he has been criticized for some ill-considered talk at the time the trouble began over Muck's refusal to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' must be looked upon as a loyal citizen, a veteran of the Civil War, a man of unquestioned standing and wealth, who has acted in good faith all along. While Mr. C. A. Ellis has said a lot of foolish things at the same time, Mr. Ellis is a reputable, responsible American citizen. He, too, would never consciously have done anything which would militate against the interests of his country.

"If the charges against Dr. Muck can be substantiated—and it seems from the action of the authorities in Washington that they can be—it simply means that Dr. Muck was able to throw dust in the eyes both of Major Higginson and of Mr. Ellis, and deliberately deceived them. There is no other explanation."

Musical America
118 May 4 –

HIGGINSON'S WITHDRAWAL

Major Higginson's complete severance of relationship with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he founded and maintained, marks the sensational climax to a half year of hectic doings. It adds, likewise, to the impenetrable singularity of this worthy gentleman's attitude throughout the past winter of discontent. The orchestra passes now under the direction of a syndicate, a board of nine trustees, Bostonian music-lovers all of them, who have filed papers for incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company. This would seem to insure the continuance of the Boston Symphony and music-lovers will, therefore, breathe freely. Its disbandment would be nothing short of calamitous, for the organization is one of the fairest flowers the artistic initiative of this country has put forth.

Members of the new syndicate are reported as declaring that Major Higginson withdrew because he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking. The creation of a controlling board does, indeed, demonstrate the major's reported reluctance to witness the disbandment of the orchestra. He himself has preserved in connection with his latest move the taciturnity that has characterized his deportment all season. Probably few will accept at its face value the assurance that he feels himself unequal to the burden which the maintenance of the orchestra involves. That might have passed scrutiny before the Muck troubles. It hardly will go unchallenged now. The precise reason for the major's decision may clarify itself ultimately. Just at present many will probably dispose themselves to regard as the outcome of pique, of a sort of ingrown petulance, what at other times might have been deemed attributable to financial stress—for talk of such stress has been circulating for some years. A statement of the sort may sound ungracious, but the manner of the venerable major since last November has been such as to elicit strange suspicions. It was explicable, perhaps, but unhandsome all the same. His unyielding support of Muck laid him open to much criticism. But for his years and his Civil War record his patriotism would have been seriously impugned. His dogged and, as events have proved it, impolitic defense of the conductor from the "Star-Spangled Banner" episode last fall to the Mrs. Jay crusade last March was explained as hard-headed New England pertinacity. He had roundly declared several times that the conductorship of the orchestra was to be upon the shoulders of Muck or nobody. But when the Government pronounced the latter dangerous there remained for Major Higginson, as it seemed, only the alternative of carrying out his threat or of backing down. Yet he cut the Gordian knot and salved his pride by removing himself.

All lovers of the finest in symphonic performance will pray that his retirement, whatever its true cause, may not work the Boston Symphony ill. We cannot afford to dispense with the ministrations of such a body. A new conductor, of unexceptionable tendencies as concerns political sentiment, is promised and a reorganization of the orchestra to insure its undiluted Americanism. That is eminently as it should be and artistically the orchestra should profit. Some weeds have sprung up in it of late years, to the extirpation of which insufficient attention has been paid, owing chiefly to the fulsome praise of undiscriminating admirers or of persons vitally interested in exalting the Bostonians for the purpose of defaming other orchestras.

Musical Leader
May 4 –

* * *

The climax in the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not unexpected. At the time of Dr. Muck's arrest it was said that Major Higginson was tired of carrying the burden of the orchestra with the responsibilities due to the number of enemy aliens within the ranks, but he had given Boston and other musical centers where the orchestra has appeared too liberal an education to allow a lapse at this time; that he was dogged in his determination to stick to the ship until the crash came is but an example of the tenacity which made the great orchestra the triumphant power it has been all these years. After thirty-seven years of control of the orchestra Major Higginson has retired as its sponsor and the future of the organization will lie in charge of nine trustees who have already filed papers for what will be known as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. These are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

It is said that the choice of a conductor lies between Ossip Gabrilowitsch, whose orchestral concerts in New York have attracted such favorable attention, and Arturo Toscanini, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Much as the public worshipped at the Toscanini shrine in opera, Gabrilowitsch has already become a popular idol of the most exacting musicians, and people are eagerly awaiting the announcement that he has been chosen as the first conductor under the new regime. There is no doubt that he would be not only a great and efficient man for the place, but also a drawing attraction of the first rank.

It is noteworthy that since the first Boston Symphony concert Oct. 22, 1881, there has never been other than a German conductor in command of the forces, as may be shown from the list of those who wielded the baton—George Henschel, Arthur Nikisch, Wilhelm Gericke (two terms), Emil Paur, Karl Muck (two terms) and Max Fiedler, the latter filling the post until Dr. Muck could be released from the German government long enough to extend his musical influence in this country. The orchestra will of necessity suffer a change of personnel when at least twenty, if not more, Germans and Austrians will be released from their contracts, including probably the concertmaster Witek, unless he is one of those who hold first papers.

Major Higginson is said to have spent about $20,000 annually upon the orchestra, notwithstanding the sold-out houses in every city where the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave concerts before the antagonism against Teutonic conditions broke into the receipts. Muck received $28,000 a y

Literary Digest
May 4

DR. MUCK'S TEARS

DR. MUCK WEPT, it is reported by the press, as he went to his internment-camp. The difference between him and enemy aliens of his artistic profession in Germany is that their cause for tears, if they shed any, was furnished them after their incarceration. Dr. Muck's case has been one occasioning heated discussion, and the camouflage of his Swiss citizenship seems to give his defenders a leg to stand on; but "a well-known and prominent German-American in New York" is quoted in Muscial America (New York) as saying: "Whether it is decided that Dr. Muck's claim of Swiss citizenship is valid or not, one thing is certain: he is a Prussian at heart, a Prussian in his manner, as he is a Prussian in his policies. And he always will be such." "Mephisto," which is the pseudonym under which the chief editorial authority of this reliable musical paper appears, gives an examination of the doctor's case that seems cool-headed and unprejudiced. Outside of rumor there has been practically no statement of his culpability other than that of Attorney-General Gregory that "his presence at large is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States." "Mephisto" gathers up such facts or inferences as seem more menacing than the question of his truculent style of playing the "Star-Spangled Banner." Thus:

"Reports in the press are to the effect that Dr. Muck is charged not only with being an enemy alien, in spite of his claim to Swiss citizenship, but that he has been the center from which have radiated a number of sinister influences in the shape of German agents who have been gathering information and fomenting trouble in this country.

"It is claimed that before we got into the war Dr. Muck maintained close relations with Count von Bernstorff, then Ambassador for Germany in this country; that he made many trips to Washington to see von Bernstorff, and met him in New York from time to time. As von Bernstorff had no overpowering interest in music, such conferences were not regarded as necessary for purely artistic reasons.

"There were also reports to the effect that a very intimate friend of Dr. Muck's, Elizabeth Van Endert, was an intermediary between the worthy doctor and the authorities in Berlin. . . . . .

"The matter has considerable interest, outside the prominence of the parties involved, for the reason that when the first outbreak of animosity against the German singers came, many well-intentioned persons objected on the ground that suspicions against these artists were wholly unwarranted, for the reason that they would be the last persons who would be amenable to intrigue or who would work for the Kaiser and his military and junker friends. Since then, however, the revelations before the Senate Committee have shown that the German High Command was astute enough to use some of these very people for their nefarious purposes. There is not any question that Hans Tauscher, Gadski's husband, was deep in the plots."

The public controversy has involved others besides Dr. Muck, and they are not ones who have attempted to put forth any claim for Swiss citizenship. "Mephisto" proceeds:

"You remember that Major Higginson again and again declared, after he had been to Washington, that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had been given a clean bill of health. This certainly excuses the Major, who can not for a moment be suspected of doing anything against the interests of this country. Major Higginson, while he has been criticized for some ill-considered talk at the time the trouble began over Muck's refusal to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' must be looked upon as a loyal citizen, a veteran of the Civil War, a man of unquestioned standing and wealth, who has acted in good faith all along. While Mr. C. A. Ellis has said a lot of foolish things at the same time, Mr. Ellis is a reputable, responsible American citizen. He, too, would never consciously have done anything which would militate against the interests of his country.

"If the charges against Dr. Muck can be substantiated—and it seems from the action of the authorities in Washington that they can be—it simply means that Dr. Muck was able to throw dust in the eyes both of Major Higginson and of Mr. Ellis, and deliberately deceived them. There is no other explanation."

Musical Courier
May 4 –

The decision of Major Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1891, and who has virtually carried the financial burden of the annual deficit ever since, to retire from the organization, which will be continued, however, under the direction of a local syndicate of public-spirited and representative citizens, was to be expected. The criticism of the venerable and veteran major at the time he stood by Dr. Muck was warranted. But it was natural that, having for so many years carried the enterprise at a time when without his assistance it would have probably collapsed or been continued in much modified shape, he would come to regard the organization as more or less a personal enterprise, would resent any criticism and in his loyalty to the conductor would perhaps be led to make statements which, in the light of subsequent events, appear unwarranted.

Wonder has been expressed that the major could have made the statements he did, when, as we know now, Dr. Muck was using his position to work in the interest of the Germans, and we also know that at his summer home at Bar Harbor he had a radio apparatus which he used to send messages to our enemies.

It should be remembered, however, that Major Higginson had every reason to place full confidence in Dr. Muck, simply because, after he had made a personal visit to Washington, he had been assured that there was no reason to suspect the doctor. Whether the Department of Justice knew then of the doctor's activities, or whether it was concealing the truth in order to catch him red-handed, as well as to reach some of those who were conspiring with him, will probably not be known.

It is my conviction that while we should give Major Higginson full credit for the public-spirited manner in which he has maintained the symphony orchestra, at the same time the hour has struck when it was really derogatory to the self-respect of the Boston people that one man should bear the burden alone. What right had Boston to pride itself upon its great symphonic organization if it left to the munificence of a single individual the meeting of the annual deficit? Now, however, that this responsibility has been transferred to a number of citizens, Boston has reason, as well as right, to pride itself upon its internationally known symphonic orchestra.

As far as I have been able to learn the general tendency of public opinion was to prefer Ossip Gabrilowitsch as a successor to Dr. Muck, though it has been rumored that Sergei Rachmaninoff, the well-known and popular Russian composer, has been in Boston for some time and that he may be the choice of the new directors of the orchestra. Some have been inclined, not unnaturally, to ask why the opportunity could not have been taken to have appointed an American to the position. Others have asked why a Russian, in view of the attitude of Russia in the great war, should have been preferred to all others.

* * *

UNION
m
Springfield, Mass.
dress :
APR 28 1918
te 384

Maj. Higginson Out of Symphony

Boston Syndicate Will Continue Famous Orchestra; Seeking New Conductor.

BOSTON, April 27—Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881 and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired today from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate. The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Maj. Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking, he was reluctant to see it come to an end and had therefore turned over control to nine trustees who today filed papers for incorportation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dana, M. A. Dewolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made but negotiations are in progress which have for their object the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

Musical America
118 May 4 –

HIGGINSON'S WITHDRAWAL

Major Higginson's complete severance of relationship with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he founded and maintained, marks the sensational climax to a half year of hectic doings. It adds, likewise, to the impenetrable singularity of this worthy gentleman's attitude throughout the past winter of discontent. The orchestra passes now under the direction of a syndicate, a board of nine trustees, Bostonian music-lovers all of them, who have filed papers for incorporation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company. This would seem to insure the continuance of the Boston Symphony and music-lovers will, therefore, breathe freely. Its disbandment would be nothing short of calamitous, for the organization is one of the fairest flowers the artistic initiative of this country has put forth.

Members of the new syndicate are reported as declaring that Major Higginson withdrew because he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking. The creation of a controlling board does, indeed, demonstrate the major's reported reluctance to witness the disbandment of the orchestra. He himself has preserved in connection with his latest move the taciturnity that has characterized his deportment all season. Probably few will accept at its face value the assurance that he feels himself unequal to the burden which the maintenance of the orchestra involves. That might have passed scrutiny before the Muck troubles. It hardly will go unchallenged now. The precise reason for the major's decision may clarify itself ultimately. Just at present many will probably dispose themselves to regard as the outcome of pique, of a sort of ingrown petulance, what at other times might have been deemed attributable to financial stress—for talk of such stress has been circulating for some years. A statement of the sort may sound ungracious, but the manner of the venerable major since last November has been such as to elicit strange suspicions. It was explicable, perhaps, but unhandsome all the same. His unyielding support of Muck laid him open to much criticism. But for his years and his Civil War record his patriotism would have been seriously impugned. His dogged and, as events have proved it, impolitic defense of the conductor from the "Star-Spangled Banner" episode last fall to the Mrs. Jay crusade last March was explained as hard-headed New England pertinacity. He had roundly declared several times that the conductorship of the orchestra was to be upon the shoulders of Muck or nobody. But when the Government pronounced the latter dangerous there remained for Major Higginson, as it seemed, only the alternative of carrying out his threat or of backing down. Yet he cut the Gordian knot and salved his pride by removing himself.

All lovers of the finest in symphonic performance will pray that his retirement, whatever its true cause, may not work the Boston Symphony ill. We cannot afford to dispense with the ministrations of such a body. A new conductor, of unexceptionable tendencies as concerns political sentiment, is promised and a reorganization of the orchestra to insure its undiluted Americanism. That is eminently as it should be and artistically the orchestra should profit. Some weeds have sprung up in it of late years, to the extirpation of which insufficient attention has been paid, owing chiefly to the fulsome praise of undiscriminating admirers or of persons vitally interested in exalting the Bostonians for the purpose of defaming other orchestras.

* * *

The climax in the affairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not unexpected. At the time of Dr. Muck's arrest it was said that Major Higginson was tired of carrying the burden of the orchestra with the responsibilities due to the number of enemy aliens within the ranks, but he had given Boston and other musical centers where the orchestra has appeared too liberal an education to allow a lapse at this time; that he was dogged in his determination to stick to the ship until the crash came is but an example of the tenacity which made the great orchestra the triumphant power it has been all these years. After thirty-seven years of control of the orchestra Major Higginson has retired as its sponsor and the future of the organization will lie in charge of nine trustees who have already filed papers for what will be known as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. These are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

It is said that the choice of a conductor lies between Ossip Gabrilowitsch, whose orchestral concerts in New York have attracted such favorable attention, and Arturo Toscanini, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Much as the public worshipped at the Toscanini shrine in opera, Gabrilowitsch has already become a popular idol of the most exacting musicians, and people are eagerly awaiting the announcement that he has been chosen as the first conductor under the new regime. There is no doubt that he would be not only a great and efficient man for the place, but also a drawing attraction of the first rank.

It is noteworthy that since the first Boston Symphony concert Oct. 22, 1881, there has never been other than a German conductor in command of the forces, as may be shown from the list of those who wielded the baton—George Henschel, Arthur Nikisch, Wilhelm Gericke (two terms), Emil Paur, Karl Muck (two terms) and Max Fiedler, the latter filling the post until Dr. Muck could be released from the German government long enough to extend his musical influence in this country. The orchestra will of necessity suffer a change of personnel when at least twenty, if not more, Germans and Austrians will be released from their contracts, including probably the concertmaster Witek, unless he is one of those who hold first papers.

Major Higginson is said to have spent about $20,000 annually upon the orchestra, notwithstanding the sold-out houses in every city where the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave concerts before the antagonism against Teutonic conditions broke into the receipts. Muck received $28,000 a y

Literary Digest
May 4

DR. MUCK'S TEARS

DR. MUCK WEPT, it is reported by the press, as he went to his internment-camp. The difference between him and enemy aliens of his artistic profession in Germany is that their cause for tears, if they shed any, was furnished them after their incarceration. Dr. Muck's case has been one occasioning heated discussion, and the camouflage of his Swiss citizenship seems to give his defenders a leg to stand on; but "a well-known and prominent German-American in New York" is quoted in Muscial America (New York) as saying: "Whether it is decided that Dr. Muck's claim of Swiss citizenship is valid or not, one thing is certain: he is a Prussian at heart, a Prussian in his manner, as he is a Prussian in his policies. And he always will be such." "Mephisto," which is the pseudonym under which the chief editorial authority of this reliable musical paper appears, gives an examination of the doctor's case that seems cool-headed and unprejudiced. Outside of rumor there has been practically no statement of his culpability other than that of Attorney-General Gregory that "his presence at large is a danger to the public peace and safety of the United States." "Mephisto" gathers up such facts or inferences as seem more menacing than the question of his truculent style of playing the "Star-Spangled Banner." Thus:

"Reports in the press are to the effect that Dr. Muck is charged not only with being an enemy alien, in spite of his claim to Swiss citizenship, but that he has been the center from which have radiated a number of sinister influences in the shape of German agents who have been gathering information and fomenting trouble in this country.

"It is claimed that before we got into the war Dr. Muck maintained close relations with Count von Bernstorff, then Ambassador for Germany in this country; that he made many trips to Washington to see von Bernstorff, and met him in New York from time to time. As von Bernstorff had no overpowering interest in music, such conferences were not regarded as necessary for purely artistic reasons.

"There were also reports to the effect that a very intimate friend of Dr. Muck's, Elizabeth Van Endert, was an intermediary between the worthy doctor and the authorities in Berlin. . . . . .

"The matter has considerable interest, outside the prominence of the parties involved, for the reason that when the first outbreak of animosity against the German singers came, many well-intentioned persons objected on the ground that suspicions against these artists were wholly unwarranted, for the reason that they would be the last persons who would be amenable to intrigue or who would work for the Kaiser and his military and junker friends. Since then, however, the revelations before the Senate Committee have shown that the German High Command was astute enough to use some of these very people for their nefarious purposes. There is not any question that Hans Tauscher, Gadski's husband, was deep in the plots."

The public controversy has involved others besides Dr. Muck, and they are not ones who have attempted to put forth any claim for Swiss citizenship. "Mephisto" proceeds:

"You remember that Major Higginson again and again declared, after he had been to Washington, that Dr. Muck and the orchestra had been given a clean bill of health. This certainly excuses the Major, who can not for a moment be suspected of doing anything against the interests of this country. Major Higginson, while he has been criticized for some ill-considered talk at the time the trouble began over Muck's refusal to play the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' must be looked upon as a loyal citizen, a veteran of the Civil War, a man of unquestioned standing and wealth, who has acted in good faith all along. While Mr. C. A. Ellis has said a lot of foolish things at the same time, Mr. Ellis is a reputable, responsible American citizen. He, too, would never consciously have done anything which would militate against the interests of his country.

"If the charges against Dr. Muck can be substantiated—and it seems from the action of the authorities in Washington that they can be—it simply means that Dr. Muck was able to throw dust in the eyes both of Major Higginson and of Mr. Ellis, and deliberately deceived them. There is no other explanation."

Musical Courier
May 4 –

The decision of Major Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1891, and who has virtually carried the financial burden of the annual deficit ever since, to retire from the organization, which will be continued, however, under the direction of a local syndicate of public-spirited and representative citizens, was to be expected. The criticism of the venerable and veteran major at the time he stood by Dr. Muck was warranted. But it was natural that, having for so many years carried the enterprise at a time when without his assistance it would have probably collapsed or been continued in much modified shape, he would come to regard the organization as more or less a personal enterprise, would resent any criticism and in his loyalty to the conductor would perhaps be led to make statements which, in the light of subsequent events, appear unwarranted.

Wonder has been expressed that the major could have made the statements he did, when, as we know now, Dr. Muck was using his position to work in the interest of the Germans, and we also know that at his summer home at Bar Harbor he had a radio apparatus which he used to send messages to our enemies.

It should be remembered, however, that Major Higginson had every reason to place full confidence in Dr. Muck, simply because, after he had made a personal visit to Washington, he had been assured that there was no reason to suspect the doctor. Whether the Department of Justice knew then of the doctor's activities, or whether it was concealing the truth in order to catch him red-handed, as well as to reach some of those who were conspiring with him, will probably not be known.

It is my conviction that while we should give Major Higginson full credit for the public-spirited manner in which he has maintained the symphony orchestra, at the same time the hour has struck when it was really derogatory to the self-respect of the Boston people that one man should bear the burden alone. What right had Boston to pride itself upon its great symphonic organization if it left to the munificence of a single individual the meeting of the annual deficit? Now, however, that this responsibility has been transferred to a number of citizens, Boston has reason, as well as right, to pride itself upon its internationally known symphonic orchestra.

As far as I have been able to learn the general tendency of public opinion was to prefer Ossip Gabrilowitsch as a successor to Dr. Muck, though it has been rumored that Sergei Rachmaninoff, the well-known and popular Russian composer, has been in Boston for some time and that he may be the choice of the new directors of the orchestra. Some have been inclined, not unnaturally, to ask why the opportunity could not have been taken to have appointed an American to the position. Others have asked why a Russian, in view of the attitude of Russia in the great war, should have been preferred to all others.

* * *

UNION

m _____

dress: _____

APR 28 1918

te _____

Maj. Higginson Out of Symphony

384

Boston Syndicate Will Continue Famous Orchestra; Seeking New Conductor.

BOSTON, April 27—Maj. Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881 and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired today from the organization, which will be continued under the direction of a local syndicate. The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Maj. Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking, he was reluctant to see it come to an end and had therefore turned over control to nine trustees who today filed papers for incorportation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra Company, Inc. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dana, M. A. Dewolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made but negotiations are in progress which have for their object the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

TRIBUNE

s: New York City

MAY 5 - 1918

Major Higginson Retires

MAJOR HENRY L. HIGGINSON'S retirement from control of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he founded more than thirty-seven years ago, is an event of more than passing interest. The New York Tribune said:

"New Yorkers and all lovers of fine music will read of Major Higginson's retirement from the Boston Symphony with very deep regret. For more reasons than one. This fine organization was almost entirely Major Higginson's personal creation. It was a very remarkable thing that in this Boston banker there should have been found such almost unerring judgment in the selection of men and conductors and such tact and decision in administering the affairs of the orchestra."

This regret is shared by "The Portland Press," which says, however:

"The unfortunate experience which Major Higginson recently had with Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor of this orchestra, undoubtedly hastened his withdrawal from the management of this splendid musical organization. When the war came there were twenty-two members of the orchestra who were of Teutonic origin. . . . After his arrest the conductor set up a claim that he was a Swiss citizen and not a citizen of Germany, but although the Swiss government investigated his claim it did not make any demands upon the United States for Dr. Muck's release from custody.

"The Symphony Orchestra has since been purged of all of its Teutonic players and their places supplied by musicians of other nations. It is doubtful if ever again a German or an Austrian finds a place among its members. The newly appointed trustees of the Symphony Orchestra promise to maintain the orchestra at the high standard established under Major Higginson's management, and doubtless will be able to do so. But there will be universal regret to learn that Major Higginson has retired. He has done a great deal for music in the years he has devoted to this organization and the millions of musical students in America fully appreciate it."

There is no question as to Major Higginson's loyalty to his country. He proved that half a century ago. But, as "The Philadelphia Inquirer" puts it, "he resented the restrictions which the war necessitated and commented upon them in a manner that grieved his friends and offended the patriotic sentiment of the American people." This, "The Inquirer" thinks, is the explanation:

"In his eyes the orchestra was a kind of sacrosanct institution existing by itself in a far removed world of art, where the clash of arms and the animosities inseparable from an international conflict should not be permitted to enter, and he could only with difficulty bring himself to associate the performance of music with the exigencies of the ardent patriotism by which the great mass of the American nation is now inspired."

In his "History of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" M. A. de Wolfe Howe traces the inspiration which led to the foundation of the institution to Major Higginson's sojourn in Vienna and other musical centres from 1850 to 1860.

Of the physical injury which overtook Mr. Higginson, in consequence of overlong and over-diligent practice under conditions which no ordinary man would have faced without early capitulation there is no need here to speak, although it was directly bound up with his ultimate decision on March 1, 1860, to return home. He wrote then:

"Up to the present time almost I have hoped to be able to play, but it cannot be, and therefore I . . . have determined to leave here. If you consider the whole thing and remember that I enjoy in the depths of my soul music as nothing else, you'll easily comprehend my stay."

Then came the interruption of the Civil War, regarding which Major Higginson wrote:

"That war taught a great many men that if we were to have a country worthy of the name we must work for it, educate it, as well as fight for it, and this duty lay upon every individual citizen, be it man or woman. . . .

"The end of the Civil War left me without an occupation or money, and with a wife whom it was my first duty to support, so for many years my hope for music lay asleep. At last, in one or two years, ending in 1880, luck had turned my way and enabled me to take up this project in earnest early in 1881."

No successor to Dr. Muck had been named when this edition of The Review went to press.

From POST

Address New York City

Date

Photo. by Bain News Service.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has given up his connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra

From HERALD

Address: New York City

Date

MAJOR HIGGINSON SAYS FAREWELL TO ORCHESTRA

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Saturday. — Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-night bade farewell to the organization at a concert which brought the season to a close and drew a large audience. He was visibly affected when he mounted the platform and it was an effort to speak the words which meant goodby to his chief hobby. The audience, too, was affected deeply.

Major Higginson in no way referred directly to Dr. Karl Muck or to the difficulties into which that conductor had got him. He said the war had brought many troubles to him and to the orchestra and that his strength and nerves were gone. He thanked the public for its support and asked that it give like support to the orchestra under its new management. He spoke a special farewell to the men of the orchestra, thanking them for their loyal work and intelligent study, and said the past year had seen them at their highest point of musical efficiency. He asked them to serve the new management as intelligently and faithfully as they have served him. As he stopped speaking the building shook with applause.

Then Mayor Andrew J. Peters mounted the platform and thanked Major Higginson on behalf of the city of Boston and the "hundreds of thousands of music lovers throughout the country" for his work of many years. Then the two men shook hands and abruptly left the platform.

Theatrical Notes.

TIMES

New York City

MAY - 1910

Dropping the Pilot of Premier Symphony—Citizens of Boston Take Task Major Higginson Resigns.

THREE significant letters added to its name gave striking evidence within the last week of the passing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an institution controlled by one man, its founder and sole guarantor during thirty-seven years, to be succeeded by a governing board of nine trustees and by an organization hereafter to be known as "The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc."

Major Henry Lee Higginson invited to his home twenty-five leading citizens of Boston, all of whom were patrons of his orchestra and persons of musical taste like himself. To these men and women in a private meeting, unreported beyond a formal announcement in the papers next day, he declared the time had come for him to lay the burden down. He left it to the meeting to decide whether the famous orchestra should be abandoned or, with their help, should be continued under the guidance of younger men.

President Emeritus Eliot of Harvard University was one of Major Higginson's guests, and he became the spokesman for the others in a stirring tribute, which should become public some day, recalling the services of the Boston Symphony and of its founder to the cause of music in America. President Eliot said it would be nothing short of a public calamity if the orchestra were to come to an end, and the upshot of it was that his opinion was also the sense of the meeting.

Judge Frederick P. Cabot, who was named as President of the new orchestra board, is a Judge of the Juvenile Court of Massachusetts, and one of the Trustees of Radcliffe College. He is also a relative of Major Higginson, whose mother was Mary Cabot of Boston. M. A. De Wolfe Howe, another of the new board, is official historian of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a former associate editor of The Youth's Companion and The Atlantic Monthly, and biographer of Charles Eliot Norton.

Among the others, Ernest B. Dane is a banker, the President of the Brookline Trust Company. His wife, who was Miss Helen Pratt of New York, has for years maintained weekly organ recitals in the great music room of their Brookline home, as famous in its way as is Mrs. Gardner's art gallery in the Fenway. The rest of the board, recalling several well-known family names of Boston, includes John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone, and Bentley W. Warren.

***

Boston's Choice of a Conductor.

First among the tasks of Major Higginson's successors was the choice of a conductor in place of Dr. Muck, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. It was announced at once that negotiations were in progress which had for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who "will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra."

The Trustees believed their undertaking of the direction of the orchestra to be "justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," and they entered on their duties "with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country." With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no announcement was made pending final action of the board.

Among the names of conductors proposed, according to unofficial reports, were Sergei Rachmaninoff, Arturo Toscanini, Sir Henry Wood, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Leopold Stokowski, and many other more or less remote possibilities. As remarked in Boston, if the choice was to be made from Europe, it was confined to France, Italy, and England of the belligerent countries, to Holland and Scandinavia of the neutral, and to Russia.

Of these, Rachmaninoff alone, on his one visit to America in 1909-10, had conducted the Boston Symphony in his own works. Gabrilowitsch, another member of the group actually here and active now, was generally believed the most available. Toscanini, who would add distinction to a list hitherto drawn from Teutonic countries, has remained in Italy since the war.

For the rest, Sir Henry Wood had made a dignified and enduring rather than brilliant record in London. Stokowski was thought to be under obligation to stand by Philadelphia, for which he left his former Cincinnati post a few years back. Two leading Parisians were already under American contracts—Monteux, at the Metropolitan, and Hasselmans, promised to the Chicago Opera next Fall.

The Boston Symphony players ended their home season last night, led, as for five weeks past, by Ernst Schmidt, one of their own number. The usual series of Sy...

m TIMES

dress: New York City

5 - 19

HIGGINSON SAYS FAREWELL.

Boston Symphony Founder Receives Ovation at Orchestra's Last Concert

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 4.—Major Henry L. Higginson made a farewell address at tonight's closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he has maintained single-handed during thirty-seven years, and an audience representative of the public of Boston joined in a memorable ovation to the founder in Symphony Hall, which was crowded for the occasion. It had already been announced that the orchestra would be incorporated under the direction of a board of nine trustees, already named.

Major Higginson said that the Boston Symphony originally "was set up from the conviction of my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras," and that "to achieve this object it was necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success."

He said the concerts had been to him "a great joy, not only because of the music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me, who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future."

The war had brought troubles this year, he said, which had exhausted his strength and nerves, and therefore his part in the orchestra ceased tonight, except for the remaining popular concerts of the year.

Turning to the orchestra, of which he said he liked to think himself a member, Major Higginson bespoke for the incoming trustees the same intelligent devotion which his men had shown toward him. Finally, he asked the same support of the audience, which rose, and applauded for many minutes after the speaker closed.

119

TRIBUNE

s: New York City

MAY 5 - 1918

Major Higginson Retires

MAJOR HENRY L. HIGGINSON'S retirement from control of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he founded more than thirty-seven years ago, is an event of more than passing interest. The New York Tribune said:

"New Yorkers and all lovers of fine music will read of Major Higginson's retirement from the Boston Symphony with very deep regret. For more reasons than one. This fine organization was almost entirely Major Higginson's personal creation. It was a very remarkable thing that in this Boston banker there should have been found such almost unerring judgment in the selection of men and conductors and such tact and decision in administering the affairs of the orchestra."

This regret is shared by "The Portland Press," which says, however:

"The unfortunate experience which Major Higginson recently had with Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor of this orchestra, undoubtedly hastened his withdrawal from the management of this splendid musical organization. When the war came there were twenty-two members of the orchestra who were of Teutonic origin. . . . After his arrest the conductor set up a claim that he was a Swiss citizen and not a citizen of Germany, but although the Swiss government investigated his claim it did not make any demands upon the United States for Dr. Muck's release from custody.

"The Symphony Orchestra has since been purged of all of its Teutonic players and their places supplied by musicians of other nations. It is doubtful if ever again a German or an Austrian finds a place among its members. The newly appointed trustees of the Symphony Orchestra promise to maintain the orchestra at the high standard established under Major Higginson's management, and doubtless will be able to do so. But there will be universal regret to learn that Major Higginson has retired. He has done a great deal for music in the years he has devoted to this organization and the millions of musical students in America fully appreciate it."

There is no question as to Major Higginson's loyalty to his country. He proved that half a century ago. But, as "The Philadelphia Inquirer" puts it, "he resented the restrictions which the war necessitated and commented upon them in a manner that grieved his friends and offended the patriotic sentiment of the American people." This, "The Inquirer" thinks, is the explanation:

"In his eyes the orchestra was a kind of sacrosanct institution existing by itself in a far removed world of art, where the clash of arms and the animosities inseparable from an international conflict should not be permitted to enter, and he could only with difficulty bring himself to associate the performance of music with the exigencies of the ardent patriotism by which the great mass of the American nation is now inspired."

In his "History of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" M. A. de Wolfe Howe traces the inspiration which led to the foundation of the institution to Major Higginson's sojourn in Vienna and other musical centres from 1850 to 1860.

Of the physical injury which overtook Mr. Higginson, in consequence of overlong and over-diligent practice under conditions which no ordinary man would have faced without early capitulation there is no need here to speak, although it was directly bound up with his ultimate decision on March 1, 1860, to return home. He wrote then:

"Up to the present time almost I have hoped to be able to play, but it cannot be, and therefore I . . . have determined to leave here. If you consider the whole thing and remember that I enjoy in the depths of my soul music as nothing else, you'll easily comprehend my stay."

Then came the interruption of the Civil War, regarding which Major Higginson wrote:

"That war taught a great many men that if we were to have a country worthy of the name we must work for it, educate it, as well as fight for it, and this duty lay upon every individual citizen, be it man or woman. . . .

"The end of the Civil War left me without an occupation or money, and with a wife whom it was my first duty to support, so for many years my hope for music lay asleep. At last, in one or two years, ending in 1880, luck had turned my way and enabled me to take up this project in earnest early in 1881."

No successor to Dr. Muck had been named when this edition of The Review went to press.

From POST

Address New York City

Date

Photo. by Bain News Service.

Major Henry L. Higginson, who has given up his connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra

From HERALD

Address: New York City

Date

MAJOR HIGGINSON SAYS FAREWELL TO ORCHESTRA

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Saturday. — Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-night bade farewell to the organization at a concert which brought the season to a close and drew a large audience. He was visibly affected when he mounted the platform and it was an effort to speak the words which meant goodby to his chief hobby. The audience, too, was affected deeply.

Major Higginson in no way referred directly to Dr. Karl Muck or to the difficulties into which that conductor had got him. He said the war had brought many troubles to him and to the orchestra and that his strength and nerves were gone. He thanked the public for its support and asked that it give like support to the orchestra under its new management. He spoke a special farewell to the men of the orchestra, thanking them for their loyal work and intelligent study, and said the past year had seen them at their highest point of musical efficiency. He asked them to serve the new management as intelligently and faithfully as they have served him. As he stopped speaking the building shook with applause.

Then Mayor Andrew J. Peters mounted the platform and thanked Major Higginson on behalf of the city of Boston and the "hundreds of thousands of music lovers throughout the country" for his work of many years. Then the two men shook hands and abruptly left the platform.

Theatrical Notes.

TIMES

New York City

MAY - 1918

Dropping the Pilot of Premier Symphony—Citizens of Boston Take Task Major Higginson Resigns.

THREE significant letters added to its name gave striking evidence within the last week of the passing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an institution controlled by one man, its founder and sole guarantor during thirty-seven years, to be succeeded by a governing board of nine trustees and by an organization hereafter to be known as "The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc."

Major Henry Lee Higginson invited to his home twenty-five leading citizens of Boston, all of whom were patrons of his orchestra and persons of musical taste like himself. To these men and women in a private meeting, unreported beyond a formal announcement in the papers next day, he declared the time had come for him to lay the burden down. He left it to the meeting to decide whether the famous orchestra should be abandoned or, with their help, should be continued under the guidance of younger men.

President Emeritus Eliot of Harvard University was one of Major Higginson's guests, and he became the spokesman for the others in a stirring tribute, which should become public some day, recalling the services of the Boston Symphony and of its founder to the cause of music in America. President Eliot said it would be nothing short of a public calamity if the orchestra were to come to an end, and the upshot of it was that his opinion was also the sense of the meeting.

Judge Frederick P. Cabot, who was named as President of the new orchestra board, is a Judge of the Juvenile Court of Massachusetts, and one of the Trustees of Radcliffe College. He is also a relative of Major Higginson, whose mother was Mary Cabot of Boston. M. A. De Wolfe Howe, another of the new board, is official historian of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a former associate editor of The Youth's Companion and The Atlantic Monthly, and biographer of Charles Eliot Norton.

Among the others, Ernest B. Dane is a banker, the President of the Brookline Trust Company. His wife, who was Miss Helen Pratt of New York, has for years maintained weekly organ recitals in the great music room of their Brookline home, as famous in its way as is Mrs. Gardner's art gallery in the Fenway. The rest of the board, recalling several well-known family names of Boston, includes John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone, and Bentley W. Warren.

***

Boston's Choice of a Conductor.

First among the tasks of Major Higginson's successors was the choice of a conductor in place of Dr. Muck, now interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. It was announced at once that negotiations were in progress which had for their purpose the engagement of a conductor who "will be welcomed by the public and will maintain the commanding musical position of the orchestra." The Trustees believed their undertaking of the direction of the orchestra to be "justified by guarantees already assured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," and they entered on their duties "with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the city of their city and country." With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no announcement was made, pending final action of the board.

Among the names of conductors proposed, according to unofficial reports, were Sergei Rachmaninoff, Arturo Toscanini, Sir Henry Wood, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Leopold Stokowski, and many other more or less remote possibilities. As remarked in Boston, if the choice was to be made from Europe, it was confined to France, Italy, and England of the belligerent countries, to Holland and Scandinavia of the neutral, and to Russia.

Of these, Rachmaninoff alone, on his one visit to America in 1909-10, had conducted the Boston Symphony in his own works. Gabrilowitsch, another member of the group actually here and active now, was generally believed the most available. Toscanini, who would add distinction to a list hitherto drawn from Teutonic countries, has remained in Italy since the war.

For the rest, Sir Henry Wood had made a dignified and enduring rather than brilliant record in London. Stokowski was thought to be under obligation to stand by Philadelphia, for which he left his former Cincinnati post a few years back. Two leading Parisians were already under American contracts—Monteux, at the Metropolitan, and Hasselmans, promised to the Chicago Opera next Fall.

The Boston Symphony players ended their home season last night, led, as for five weeks past, by Ernst Schmidt, one of their own number. The usual series of

m TIMES

dress: New York City

5 - 19

HIGGINSON SAYS FAREWELL.

Boston Symphony Founder Receives Ovation at Orchestra's Last Concert

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 4.—Major Henry L. Higginson made a farewell address at tonight's closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he has maintained single-handed during thirty-seven years, and an audience representative of the public of Boston joined in a memorable ovation to the founder in Symphony Hall, which was crowded for the occasion. It had already been announced that the orchestra would be incorporated under the direction of a board of nine trustees, already named.

Major Higginson said that the Boston Symphony originally "was set up from the conviction of my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras," and that "to achieve this object it was necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success."

He said the concerts had been to him "a great joy, not only because of the music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me, who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future."

The war had brought troubles this year, he said, which had exhausted his strength and nerves, and therefore his part in the orchestra ceased tonight, except for the remaining popular concerts of the year.

Turning to the orchestra, of which he said he liked to think himself a member, Major Higginson bespoke for the incoming trustees the same intelligent devotion which his men had shown toward him. Finally, he asked the same support of the audience, which rose, and applauded for many minutes after the speaker closed.

120 Transcript May 4 - 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

AUSPICIOUS END TO A TROUBLED YEAR

An Audience Signally Showing Its Pleasure and Loyalty—The Orchestra on Its Mettle in Bach, Beethoven and Berlioz Eloquent—Just Requital for Mr. Schmidt—Tests and Signs of the Day

THOSE who, loving to carp at any change from the established order, profess to doubt the hold that the Symphony Orchestra, in, for and by itself, has upon a sustaining public in this town, should have looked upon the second balcony of Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. No "assisting artist" graced the programme; Mr. Schmidt was again conducting; the chosen pieces—Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, a little Suite out of Bach, Berlioz's overture to his opera "Benvenuto Cellini"—were classics, or common places, of orchestral routine. There was naught indeed to signalize the occasion, except the fact of chronology that the concert was the last of the season. Yet there stood the second balcony, filled—so far as inspection from the parquet might measure it—to the last seat. Mr. Paderewski, Mr. McCormack as "soloist," the most novel and the most interesting of music, a thrice-eminent conductor could not have assembled more listeners in the upper tier—and not a subscriber among them. For these the floor and the first balcony, yesterday with hardly a vacant seat and, likewise, heartily applausive.

But one thing had gathered this audience and stirred this temper—the Boston Symphony Orchestra, keeping its mettle through the vicissitudes of such a troubled year as never before it had known, resolute to its work, zealous to continue under new dispensations as under old—the glories of thirty-seven seasons accumulated on its head, the promise of as many more stretching before its eyes. Conductors may come and go, as change they must; new proprietorships may succeed old, as new conditions bring new responsibilities; but the life of the Symphony Concerts continues in the orchestra itself. Without it, the proprietors would have no public, the conductors no instrument. In sheer self-preservation—if from no higher motive—they are bound to maintain the orchestra at the standards in which it now excels every other. With reason, applause swelled and long continued when the conductor called the band to its feet at the end of Beethoven's Symphony. By exception the audience seemed to linger at the close of the whole concert to clap it.

More than usually, as it seemed in this leave-taking for the present and in this augury for the future, the orchestra was at the top of its bent. The Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte pieced together from familiar Bach by the Hungarian, Bachrich, runs for string choir only. When within plentiful memory have the whole division of violins, the violas, the violoncellos, the basses, played with such homogeneity yet diversity of tone, with such freedom of modulation and force of rhythm, with such large eloquence and delicate lustres, with such sense of tonal pattern in both fanciful and formal motion as they brought to Bach's little pieces? An occasional unison thrilled the ear by stark, sonorous power. Often the interweaving of the parts was as web through which light is shining. The Prelude sounded as a stately pageant in tones; the Adagio gained the exfoliating, pulsing flow, the richness of tonal texture, the depths of tonal beauty that are the essence and the wonder of this eighteenth-century music songful; the Gavotte was undulating tracery, now of earth, again of air. What string choir from Boston to San Francisco, from Paris to Petrograd, may match this quality, may yield this pleasure?

Again, in the more impetuous measures of Berlioz's overture, in the resounding Finale—"pure theatre," if ever there was operatic preluding that deserved such name—the orchestra rose afresh to its tonal power, anew at nervous but controlled full, and to its tonal splendor, once more as uncoarsened as of old. Then it was the voice of stage tumult and stage spectacle; but it was equally the voice of character and emotion when it sang Cellini's air to his mistress, when the speech and the presence of the cardinal sounded from the scene. The playing of Bach's Suite was feat of pure artistry exercised upon pure music in abstract. The playing of Berlioz's overture was equal feat with music that beats with characterizing rhythms, blazes with picturing colors, strides and sings with energy of emotion, energy of illusion. It is possible, almost, to act any of Berlioz's music, and the orchestra was so minded yesterday to his master-overture.

And what fire and freedom it brought to the contrasting measures of Beethoven's "Eroica Symphony"—the measures of the strong man flinging out the passionate energy of his music upon players and hearers, then at will concentrating it in orchestral song of a power and a beauty that a century containing even a Wagner has still to equal. The orchestra touched such fire through the first movement while out of it darted and flashed a matchless detail; of itself, at will of Beethoven, at merest hint from the conductor, it made the "Funeral March" a song of degrees, as the Psalmist has it, in heroic mourning. There was a requiem in the music, as it sounded, requiem nearer to many a listener than ever before. The rhythmic life of the Scherzo has abated not a whit from Dr. Muck's fleet day; the cumulation of the music was artful; only the horns sounded a little dull in the song of the Trio. Through the variations the Finale sounded with that energy and sweep of voice, those sudden wingings of the air in which Beethoven is as a spirit released in melody, that are the joy of his music, yesterday, today, perhaps forever. Of how many virtuosities, fidelities, ardors, diligences were these three performances the sum! It was as though, in a troubled, uncertain time, the orchestra would take leave of its public in a sense by intrinsic and renewing force, by the long familiarity and the exhaustless zeal of the orchestra with the music, Beethoven's Symphony played itself. Yet it was good to hear Mr. Schmidt shunning the excess that would wring the last drop from every measure, that would sharpen and resharpen every detail, that tends to stiffen incisiveness into rigidity. A century of listeners have read what they will into "The Eroica." It may or may not be a tonal epopee of freedom; but as music, it is of superb and sweeping liberty, of a magnificent energy out-flinging from itself, even when it is speech of grief. The more, then, was it welcome to hear Mr. Schmidt not merely "letting the symphony run" (as Mr. Gericke used to say with Schubert), but sustaining and even occasionally spurring the progress. If his hand was energetic, it was also elastic; his ear rang true to quality of tone; his perception respected the beautiful and artful phrasing that the orchestra long since mastered from first bar to last. Except Dvorak's Symphony "From the New World," he has done nothing so well through the six pairs of concerts in which he has led, as he did this "Eroica." Audiences, orchestra, management have been fortunate with him in sudden and exacting emergency. He has held the end of our musical year to nearly normal course; he has made interesting programmes and worthily kept a pledge or two of his predecessor in the production of new work; he has maintained, as best he might, the industry, energy and esprit de corps of the orchestra in a difficult time, with increasing wisdom giving it more and more its head in performance that he knew it could well achieve. He has proved himself a conductor of more than respectable, routine abilities. He deserved thoroughly the hearty applause that yesterday, as in sum of the six weeks, the audience returned him.

"Beethoven's Symphony played itself," it is easy to write, and truthfully. So in measure also did Bach's little Suite and Berlioz's colorful and resounding Overture. They played themselves, as the phrase goes, because in Symphony and in Overture the composer has written a masterpiece in kind, music of a self-contained eloquence and progress that neither conductor nor orchestra nor yet again hearers may resist. Akin in humbler design and outcome was the little Suite from Bach—in each division doubtless of the day's work to him, but like all the rest that he wrote, music still expressing itself to ears delighting in its substance and stride. It is routine Bach, if the scrupulous hearer chooses; but what of Bach was not routine, since no composer was less aware than he when he had fashioned an enduring masterpiece. "The Eroica" is Beethoven magnificent as the overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" is Berlioz splendid. Thus do the composers sustain the orchestra; while the orchestra sustains the concerts; and the conductor moves as a "tertium" but essential "quid" between. At the beginning of the review, the orchestra seemed the foundation of the Symphony Concerts. At the end, digging deeper, it is the composers and the music they make and adorn that lie below even the orchestra—still firmer, yet more permanent.

H. T. P.

American May 4 - 1918

THE POPS

The thirty-third season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall next Monday evening, May 6, and continue for nine weeks, closing Saturday evening, July 6. Concerts will be given every evening except Sunday from 8 to 11. With the exception of one season, these concerts have been given annually since 1885 and, as a Boston institution, are only less famous than the Symphony concerts themselves. In the beginning they were called Promenade Concerts and were modeled closely after the Bilse concerts of Berlin.

For many years the orchestra was limited to about fifty men, but in the past few seasons this has gradually grown until now the actual playing forces number seventy-five, an orchestra as large as many symphony orchestras, and as large as the Boston Symphony Orchestra travelled with not many years ago. As a matter of fact, with the exception of the leaders of the different sections, practically the entire Symphony Orchestra is on call for the Pops.

It will be welcome news to the patrons of the Pops that Agide Jacchia, the distinguished Italian conductor, has been re-engaged for this season. Mr. Jacchia made a more than favorable impression a year ago. The program for Monday, the opening night, is as follows:

"Marcia Reale"; march, "Solid Men to the Front," Lieut. Sousa; overture, "Mignon," Thomas; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; fantasia, "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo; "La Marseillaise"; prelude to Act I., "Carmen," Bizet; meditation, "Thais" (solo violin, Mr. Hoffman), Massenet; "Marche Miniature," Tschaikowsky; second Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt; "God Save the King"; selection, "Her Regiment," Herbert; intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; waltz, "La Barcarole," Waldteufel; "American Patrol," Meacham; "The Star Spangled Banner."

Transcript May 4 -

In Rising Prospect as Dr. Muck's Successor

(From the drawing by Robert Sterl)

Sergei Vassilievich Rakhmaninov

IF no more than half the gossip, traversing the town about new conductors for the Symphony Orchestra, is to be believed, an increasing possibility for the post is the Russian, Sergei Rakhmaninov. As some say, even, the choice lies for the moment between him, Mr. Toscanini and Sir Henry Wood, since, according to these same voices, the new trustees are resolved upon a leader of long experience and established prestige. In spite of the flaming eloquence, the puissant personality, the illustrious name and the eager ambition that Mr. Toscanini would bring to the Symphony Concerts, they are said to hesitate over his arbitrary will, irascible temper and ungovernable tongue, uncertain how far new conditions would mitigate these infirmities as the Metropolitan Opera House for some years knew and endured them. Nor, as yet, is it assured that Mr. Toscanini would forsake in war time Milan for Boston. Similarly various temperamental traits are said to weigh against Sir H. Wood along with the curious delusion of certain insistent and (as they themselves believe) influential persons that no Englishman can be a conductor of notable ability. As though the record of Sir Henry's career in London, whatever his nationality, did not refute such absurd cavilling!

In this dilemma—again according to the gossip of the hour—Mr. Rakhmaninov is more and more earnestly and favorably considered for the vacant post. In age, at the beginning of his forty-sixth year, he stands in the prime of his powers. Of cosmopolitan habit, as a man who has made many journeys and long sojourns in various European cities and in the United States as well, he would readily adapt himself to a new environment. As cultivated man of the world, accustomed to diverse contacts, he would be the more agreeable to Boston. As composer, his symphonies, tone-poems—like the familiar "Isle of the Dead"—piano-pieces and songs have all set him high in contemporary music; as pianist he is a noted virtuoso on two continents; as conductor he has gained experience and prestige, these twenty years, in the opera houses and concert-halls of Petrograd and Moscow.

Indeed, when during his visit to the United States, in 1909, he led the Boston Orchestra in his tone-poem, the men, from hard experience mistrustful of composer-conductors, quickly discovered in Mr. Rakhmaninov a leader of signal ability; while his hearers were similarly impressed. It is further said, in refutation of a rather shallow reproach, that in recent years he has dwelt as often and as long in Moscow as in Dresden; that from the outset of the war he was zealous for Russian participation; and that, until the revolution and the German conquest began, he abounded in good works for his country. Finally, as doubters are informed, the assertion that he often wrote a "Germanized" music is but an extravagance of æsthetic opinion among envious and extreme young Russians. In fact, the individual quality of his familiar second symphony and of the much-repeated "Isle of the Dead" sufficiently vindicates him on that score by plain evidence of contents. Yet, while all this gossip fills the air, Mr. Rakhmaninov is curiously undiscoverable. Two months ago, seemingly authentic report averred that he had made his way out of Russia and had taken refuge in Copenhagen—or was it Stockholm?—awaiting there remittances to bring him to New York. Since he was without money, a subscription to relieve his necessities was proposed among his American friends. There confirmable fact rests, giving place to fantastic speculation over his actual presence at this hour in Boston, or in New York. If he is in either city, which is almost unbelievable, he hides himself strangely and successfully from his American acquaintances.

Italian Gazette May 4 - 1918

RIMORSO O RIPICCO?

La stampa locale annunziava con gran lusso di particolari le dimissioni del Maggiore in ritiro, banchiere e mecenate della musica Henry L. Higginson dall'impresa della Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nel tempo stesso s'annunziava l'incorporazione della splendida istituzione musicale bostoniana da parte dei seguenti curatori: Frederic P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick B. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone e Bentley W. Warren.

Le dimissioni del vecchio fondatore e sostenitore della orchestra sinfonica, ritenuta la migliore degli Stati Uniti, ufficialmente si dichiarano provocate dal desiderio di un legittimo riposo dopo trentasette anni di energica e affettuosa tutela. Evidentemente però, essendo seguite all'arresto e alle dimissioni del famigerato Dr. Muck, esse hanno tutto il sapore d'un rimorso o d'un ripicco. L'opinione pubblica della nazione reclamava ad alta voce l'allontanamento del maestro, che non confinava le sue attività al culto della musica, ma anche in parte rilevante alle insidie teutoniche contro un paese, che lo ospitava e pagava profumatamente. Ebbene il Maggiore Higginson teneva duro e una volta minacciò le sue dimissioni se si persisteva nella patriottica campagna. I fatti svoltisi in seguito mostrarono che l'opinione pubblica non s'era errata e il Dr. Muck venne internato come uno straniero pericoloso. Il Maggiore non apparve in bella luce di fronte al paese, egli che dava il suo nome a tante manifestazioni e iniziative patriottiche. Può essere perciò che il rimorso dello scandalo suscitato l'abbia consigliato a ritirarsi dalla musicale impresa. Può essere pure un forte ripicco per la azione doverosa del governo. Riesce penoso a crederlo, ma la seconda ipotesi ha maggior probabilità della prima.

Record May 4 -

HIGGINSON TAKES LEAVE OF SYMPHONY

Patron of Orchestra Is Given Ovation As He Delivers Farewell Address

Major Henry Lee Higginson formally dropped the reins of management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night and the orchestra, for once in its career, played a collective second fiddle on its own program. Major Higginson was the star of the evening.

The founder was told by the Mayor of Boston a small part of what his fellow citizens think of him and how much they appreciate the great public service represented by the thirty-seven years of the orchestra's history. And he was cheered and applauded by a typical Symphony audience.

The farewell address of Major Higginson, to his public and his orchestra, was touching in the extreme. To the audience he said

My friends:

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was set up from the conviction of my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras. In Europe I had seen the pleasure and comfort of such orchestras, and it seemed my duty and was my aim to give our country the best music possible.

To achieve this object, it was necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success, and then to require of him and of his men a high and ever higher standard. To win that standard nothing has been spared and the aim never forgotten; and in this season our orchestra has reached our high-water mark.

The concerts were offered to the whole public, but my chief wish and hope was to meet the needs and satisfy the longing for the beautiful art of the many people leading quiet or busy lives and having little enjoyment;

Continued on Page 4, Column

furthermore to help in the education of the students of music.

To me the concerts have been a great joy, not only because of the lovely music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine; and this year it is they who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future. To these unknown friends and to all of our audiences far and wide I offer my heartiest thanks. Thus the faith and the vision of my youth have been justified.

I had hoped to have carried on the concerts during my lifetime, but this war has brought us many troubles, and among them the problems of the orchestra during this season, which have exhausted my strength and nerves. Therefore, my part in our orchestra ceases tonight, except for the popular concerts of this year.

The conductors, the members of our orchestra and the office management have done their work excellently from first to last, and have deserved the warmest thanks and praise.

Turning and speaking directly to the orchestra, he continued:

For many years we—you and I—have been good comrades, an honor and a great pleasure for me.

In these years we have worked hand and glove together, and have kept true to our rule, laid down at the start, of intelligent study under one conductor at a time—and we have reaped the reward of success sure to follow.

We have played in many cities of the United States, and have won great applause and, better still, have deserved it.

Each year has marked an advance in the quality of our music, and this year has seen our high point.

I like to think myself a member of our orchestra, and have done my best to help you, and, on your side, you have served with an intelligence and devotion not to be forgotten by the audiences or by me. I congratulate you, and thank you for our success fairly won.

"My time for work is past, and now a number of excellent men and women have taken my place. Of you I ask for them the same intelligence and devotion as in years gone by.

"My best wishes go out to [illegible]

In closing Major [illegible] said:

Our orchestra [illegible]

TIGHT BINDING

Italian Gazette May 4-1918

Monitor May 4-

Herald May 4-1918

Post May 5-421

"POPS" SERALI
ALLA SYMPHONY HALL

Lunedì sera, 6 Maggio, alle 8 pre e al suono della marcia reale italiana verrà inaugurata nella Symphony Hall la trentatreesima stagione dei concerto estivi, chiamati "Pops." Nel programma oltre la marcia reale, verranno eseguiti: la Marsigliese, il "God save the King" e lo "Star Spangled Banner" in onore delle quattro potenze alleate, che realmente combattono contro la barbarie teutoniche.

I concerti verranno diretti dal maestro Agide Jacchia, che l'anno scorso tanto successo riportò con la sua sapiente e magistrale concertazione. Quest'anno s'è creduto di non ripetere l'innovazione apportata l'anno scorso, quando cioè si eseguirono degli a soli vocali. I frequentatori assidui della Symphony manifestarono all'amministrazione della stagione il desiderio che fosse mantenuto l'uso costante dei programmi strumentali, con qualche occasionale a solo eseguito da qualcuno dei suonatori più periti.

La stagione dei "Pops" si chiuderà il 6 luglio. Vi saranno concerti ogni sera, dalle 8 alle 11, con il solito programma di dodici numeri di musica mista con due brevi riposi.

I cambiamenti, che saranno apportati tra breve negli affari della Symphony Orchestra, non hanno alcuna influenza sul progresso della stagione dei "Pops." Quest'anno l'orchestra conterà circa 75 membri della Symphony; vi mancheranno solo pochi primi strumenti tra le varie sezioni.

Il seguente è il programma di lunedì sera:

Marcia Reale Italiana; March, "Solid Men to the Front" Lieut. Sousa; Overture, "Mignon" di Thomas; Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" di Vollstedt; Fantasia, "Pagliacci" di Leoncavallo; La Marseillaise; Preludio atto I, "Carmen" di Bizet; Meditazione "Thais" con solo di violino, di Massenet; "Marche Miniature" di Tschaikowsky; Second Hungarian Rhapsody di Liszt; God Save the King; Selection, "Her Regiment" di Herbert; Intermezzo "Cavalleria Rusticana" di Mascagni; Waltz, "La Barcarole" di Waldteufel; "American Patrol" di Meacham; The Star Spangled Banner.

I programmi delle altre sere comprendono scelta musica di Verdi, Meyerbeer, Puccini, Rossini, Mendelssohn, Sain-Saens, Delibes, Donizetti, Leoncavallo, Nicolai, Bizet, Handel, Bolzoni, Berlioz, Mascagni, Ponchielli, Brahms, Rubinstein, Waldteufel e altri. Al concerto di venerdì sera verrà eseguita una "Tarantella" com posizione del maestro Jacchia.

AT PARK THEATRE

Globe May 5

POPS SEASON TO OPEN ON SUNDAY

AGIDE JACCHIA
This year's conductor at the Pops at Symphony Hall

The 33d season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall Monday evening and continue for nine weeks, closing Saturday evening, July 6. Concerts will be given every evening except Sunday, from 8 to 11. Monday's program:—

MARIA REALE
March, "Solid Men to the Front" Lieut. Sousa
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ..... Leoncavallo
LA MARSEILLAISE
Prelude to Act I, "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Meditation, "Thais," solo violin, Mr. Hoffmann ..... Massenet
Marche Miniature" ..... Tschaikowsky
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ..... Liszt
GOD SAVE THE KING
Selection, "Her Regiment" ..... Herbert
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Waltz, "La Barcarole" ..... Waldteufel
American Patrol" ..... Meacham
THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER

Symphony Orchestra

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—In Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented its twenty-fourth and last program of the season, playing the third ("Eroica") symphony of Beethoven, a set of Bach pieces (prelude, adagio and gavotte) arranged for string orchestra by Bachrich, and the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz. The orchestra will repeat the program tonight, when its founder, Henry L. Higginson, now retiring from the responsibility of sustaining the concerts, will make a brief address.

The list of selections originally announced to be given on this occasion was different from that finally performed; but one piece, the "Eroica" symphony, remained, according to original intention. Beethoven, whose music has been the most systematically cultivated, perhaps, of any writer's in the course of the 37 years that the orchestra has existed, was first in honor at this time. The composer whose name stands in gold over the proscenium arch of Symphony Hall was the one through whom the institution of the old order spoke its farewell.

The work was admirably interpreted, with all the finish of other times and with all the sonority of today. This favorite repertory piece, indeed, was presented in a way that must have made all who could recall the Music Hall symphony concerts of the eighties believe, without reserve, in the idea of artistic continuity.

Will the tradition be preserved in the orchestra of the new order? Undoubtedly it will, since the style of interpretation rests, more probably, on the discrimination of the listeners than on any decisions of sustainers, managers or trustees. And the unalterable fact of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts is the audiences. Their appreciation of music remains, no matter who directs policies. In the last analysis, their appreciation and the fame of the orchestra prove to be one and the same thing.

The first question that arises is in regard to the conductor. Whoever he is he will doubtless have to find a way to bind the sentiment of the past four decades and that of the coming decade together; but assuredly he may do this without being of the same nationality as his recent predecessors. The next question will be that of the unionism or the non-unionism of the membership. And whatever settlement is found, the standards of playing must remain as high as before. At the same time, the members must be men loyally disposed toward the United States. There may be persons who think that unionism and high standards of performance are incompatible. But have they ever heard the Philadelphia Orchestra play?

Minor questions are those of soloists and the deficit. As for the soloists, they should unquestionably be selected without any regard for the private business arrangements of the manager. As for the deficit, nobody having given the matter thought imagines that the amount the concerts cost over income is anything which the community, in these days of opera and symphony guarantee funds, would hesitate to make up.

Boston Concert Notes

BOSTON, Mass. — The pop concerts, given by an orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra players, open in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, with Agide Jacchia conducting. Programs of popular music will be played every week-day evening until July 6, from 8 to 11 o'clock. On Thursday evening of next week, the program will be arranged partly with reference to the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors Conference, which will be holding sessions in Boston.

MAJ. HIGGINSON MAKES ADIEUS

Mayor Thanks Founder of Symphony at Final Concert

PATRON PRAISES HIS ORCHESTRA

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the central figure last night of an impressive scene in which, at the close of the concert in Symphony Hall, he took formal leave of the orchestra, paid tribute to the conductors and members for their devotion, thanked its audiences and bespoke continued support for those who were to take up the work which he felt obliged to lay down.

Friends of the orchestra and of Maj. Higginson filled the hall and the great assembly, listeners and musicians, literally overwhelmed him with applause. He first set forth his wishes and aims in founding the orchestra, then turned to its conductor and members with warm words of praise, and finally addressed a closing word of confidence to the public.

Mayor Thanks Founder

It fell to Mayor Peters to voice the gratitude of the citizens of Boston, and his tribute added the note of personal affection to the occasion of farewell. Maj. Higginson was too deeply touched to make more than a few words of reply. "Mr. Mayor," he said, "and members of the orchestra, I thank you all, but especially the mayor, and you don't know how sorry I am to say good-by to you."

"My friends," said Maj. Higginson, "the Boston Symphony orchestra was set up from the conviction of my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras. In Europe I had seen the pleasure and comfort of such orchestras, and it seemed my duty and was my aim to give our country the best music possible.

"To achieve this object it was necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success, and then to require of him and his men a high, and ever higher, standard. To win that standard nothing has been spared and the aim never forgotten; and in this season our orchestra has reached our high-water mark.

"The concerts were offered to the whole public, but my chief wish and hope was to meet the needs and satisfy the longings for the beautiful art of the many people leading quiet or busy lives and having little enjoyment; and, furthermore, to help in the education of the students of music.

"To me the concerts have been a great joy, not only because of the lovely music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and this year it is they who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future. To these unknown friends and to all of our audiences far and wide I offer my heartiest thanks. Thus the faith and the vision of my youth have been justified.

"I had hoped to have carried on the concerts during my lifetime, but this war has brought us many troubles, and among them the problems of the orchestra during the season, which have exhausted my strength and nerves. Therefore my part in our orchestra ceases tonight, except for the popular concerts of this year. The conductors, the members of our orchestra and the office management have done their work excellently from first to last, and have deserved the warmest thanks and praise."

Turning to the orchestra, the speaker proceeded:

"Gentlemen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—For many years we—you and I—have been good comrades, an honor and a great pleasure for me. In these years we have worked hand and glove together, and have kept true to our rule, laid down at the outstart, of intelligent study under one conductor at a time—and we have reaped the reward of success sure to follow. We have played in many cities of the United States, and have won great applause and, better still, have deserved it. Each year has marked an advance in the quality of our music, and this year has seen our high point.

"I like to think myself a member of our orchestra, and have done my best to help you; and, on your side, you have served with an intelligence and devotion not to be forgotten by the audiences or by me. I congratulate you, and thank you for our success fairly won.

"My time for work is past; and now a number of excellent men and women have taken my place. Of you I ask for them the same intelligence and devotion as in years gone by. My best wishes go out to you."

To the audience Maj. Higginson said: "Our orchestra has always been heartily supported by you and by the public throughout our country, else it could not have lived. It must live in all its strength and beauty, and now will be carried on by some friends who have taken it up; and for them I ask the same support which you have given me through all these years."

Mayor Peters said: "We all feel that tonight, when he whose name is so indissolubly connected with the Symphony Orchestra and who has done so much for it is here to say an official good-by, there should go out to him a word of parting from those hosts of people who have benefited from this orchestra during a period running back almost 40 years, and it is to represent them that I am here now.

"A democracy, to be successful, must have service given to its people, and he who in a democracy renders service to the public is he who earns the gratitude of the people. The spirit which actuates this country has been shown by him who had the vision to create this great orchestra.

"In the Harvard Union, at the 80th anniversary of his birthday, Maj. Higginson said he did this for the people, and that represents the contribution of his citizenship. Sir, you have rendered much to your country in many ways; you have in yourself set up a standard of public service since the time of our war; and tonight I have the privilege of thanking you on behalf of the people of this city—those thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands who, unknown most of them to you personally, have shared together, as this great audience has shared tonight, the pleasure and profit of your work for them.

"We want, sir, to doubly thank you, and we want to give to these men who are taking on themselves the future of this orchestra our best wishes and expressions of confidence. But to you, sir, particularly—and it is my privilege as mayor to speak for its people—we want to thank you deeply and humbly as a body of your fellow citizens whom you have served through years of unselfish devotion."

American May 5-1918

TAKES HIS LEAVE OF ORCHESTRA

Maj. Higginson Makes Farewell Address to Symphony

Major Henry L. Higginson never made a speech which became better his character and his long record of sterling citizenship than his address at the last concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night in Symphony Hall. After his address to the audience and orchestra Mayor Andrew J. Peters ascended the platform and addressed words of thanks for the public of this city to Major Higginson.

GIVEN THE "TUSCH"

The last brilliant chord of Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" had sounded the last note of a programme of Major Higginson's own choosing, and the applause of the orchestral performance was just dying down when it suddenly swelled again, as Major Higginson rose from his seat on the floor and made his way down the middle aisle to the stage.

As he ascended the short ladder and stepped on the stage the orchestra rose and gave him the "tusch"—the flourish of trumpets and drums reserved for great and favored men—while the applause of the audience continued. Then Major Higginson spoke, quietly, but in a voice heard to the uttermost limits of the hall, a voice which only came near failing him once or twice when emotion threatened to overcome him.

The purpose of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he said in effect, had been to give the best music and the best possible orchestral performances of it to the people of the city and the country. This had been his dream, conceived when he was studying music in Europe, where he noted the effect of good orchestral music and the pleasure and profit the public got out of it.

Joy From the Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had given him, personally, great joy, but not less great had been his pleasure in the thought of what it could bring the people, especially those people whose lives were toilsome and studious, who had little leisure, and comparatively few bright hours. Many of these people, and many of the people present, had written him letters, and these letters, from a multitude unknown to Major Higginson, were received by him with deep gratification. He took this occasion of thanking the writers.

Major Higginson went on to say that he had believed it necessary, in pursuit of his end, to appoint a conductor who should be given full charge of everything pertaining to the musical performances, and make him responsible for their quality. This policy had succeeded well. The Boston Symphony had quickly risen to a rank second to no other orchestra in the world. The high water mark of its achievement had been the musical achievement of the past winter. Conductors and orchestra had done their task thoroughly and well.

Major Higginson said that he had expected to continue his work with the orchestra during the whole of his lifetime, but that the stress and strain of conditions during the winter past had taxed his strength and his nerve, and now friends had come forward and offered to continue the work. The orchestra was organized to serve the public. The public has admirably supported the orchestra.

Address to Musicians

He bespoke the public support for the new trustees of the destinies of the orchestra, as that support had been given the orchestra in the past.

Then he stepped on the conductor's stand, turned about and addressed the orchestra. He greeted them from a full heart. He felt, he said, almost like a member of the orchestra himself, and had been very proud and happy to be one of them in spirit. Their achievements had cost hard work, but the reward had been very great. Not only Boston, but other cities throughout the country, had welcomed them, "and you deserved it," he added warmly. Saying these things Major Higginson's voice more than once trembled, and he coughed to hide his feelings.

As he turned, Mayor Peters stepped to the platform and spoke of Major Higginson's career of patriotism, public service, altruistic and artistic ideals—a man who had been a great citizen of democracy in the extent of the service which he had done the people.

Deafening applause broke out after Mayor Peters' last words. Major Higginson bowed gravely, then simply raised his hand for silence, and said: "I thank you all. You don't know how hard it is for me to leave you," and quickly left the stage.

TIGHT BINDING

Italian Gazette May 4-1918

Monitor May 4-

Herald May 4-1918

Post May 5-1918

"POPS" SERALI
ALLA SYMPHONY HALL

Lunedì sera, 6 Maggio, alle 8 precise e al suono della marcia reale italiana verrà inaugurata nella Symphony Hall la trentatreesima stagione dei concerto estivi, chiamati "Pops." Nel programma oltre la marcia reale, verranno eseguiti: la Marsigliese, il "God save the King" e lo "Star Spangled Banner" in onore delle quattro potenze alleate, che realmente combattono contro la barbarie teutoniche.

I concerti verranno diretti dal maestro Agide Jacchia, che l'anno scorso tanto successo riportò con la sua sapiente e magistrale concertazione. Quest'anno s'è creduto di non ripetere l'innovazione apportata l'anno scorso, quando cioè si eseguirono degli a soli vocali. I frequentatori assidui della Symphony manifestarono all'amministrazione della stagione il desiderio che fosse mantenuto l'uso costante dei programmi strumentali, con qualche occasionale a solo eseguito da qualcuno dei suonatori più periti.

La stagione dei "Pops" si chiuderà il 6 luglio. Vi saranno concerti ogni sera, dalle 8 alle 11, con il solito programma di dodici numeri di musica mista con due brevi riposi.

I cambiamenti, che saranno apportati tra breve negli affari della Symphony Orchestra, non hanno alcuna influenza sul progresso della stagione dei "Pops." Quest'anno l'orchestra conterà circa 75 membri della Symphony; vi mancheranno solo pochi primi strumenti tra le varie sezioni.

Il seguente è il programma di lunedì sera:

Marcia Reale Italiana; March, "Solid Men to the Front" Lieut. Sousa; Overture, "Mignon" di Thomas; Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" di Vollstedt; Fantasia, "Pagliacci" di Leoncavallo; La Marseillaise; Preludio atto I, "Carmen" di Bizet; Meditazione "Thais" con solo di violino, di Massenet; "Marche Miniature" di Tschaikowsky; Second Hungarian Rhapsody di Liszt; God Save the King; Selection, "Her Regiment" di Herbert; Intermezzo "Cavalleria Rusticana" di Mascagni; Waltz, "La Barcarole" di Waldteufel; "American Patrol" di Meacham; The Star Spangled Banner.

I programmi delle altre sere comprendono scelta musica di Verdi, Meyerbeer, Puccini, Rossini, Mendelssohn, Sain-Saens, Delibes, Donizetti, Leoncavallo, Nicolai, Bizet, Handel, Bolzoni, Berlioz, Mascagni, Pouchielli, Brahms, Rubinstein, Waldteufel e altri. Al concerto di venerdì sera verrà eseguita una "Tarantella" composizione del maestro Jacchia.

AL PARK THEATRE

Globe May 5

POPS SEASON TO OPEN ON SUNDAY

AGIDE JACCHIA
This year's conductor at the Pops at Symphony Hall

The 33d season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall Monday evening and continue for nine weeks, closing Saturday evening, July 6. Concerts will be given every evening except Sunday, from 8 to 11. Monday's program:—

MARIA REALE
March, "Solid Men to the Front" Lieut. Sousa
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ..... Leoncavallo
LA MARSEILLAISE
Prelude to Act I, "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Meditation, "Thais," solo violin, Mr. Hoffmann ..... Massenet
Marche Miniature" ..... Tschaikowsky
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ..... Liszt
GOD SAVE THE KING
Selection, "Her Regiment" ..... Herbert
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Waltz, "La Barcarole" ..... Waldteufel
American Patrol" ..... Meacham
THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER

Symphony Orchestra

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—In Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented its twenty-fourth and last program of the season, playing the third ("Eroica") symphony of Beethoven, a set of Bach pieces (prelude, adagio and gavotte) arranged for string orchestra by Bachrich, and the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz. The orchestra will repeat the program tonight, when its founder, Henry L. Higginson, now retiring from the responsibility of sustaining the concerts, will make a brief address.

The list of selections originally announced to be given on this occasion was different from that finally performed; but one piece, the "Eroica" symphony, remained, according to original intention. Beethoven, whose music has been the most systematically cultivated, perhaps, of any writer's in the course of the 37 years that the orchestra has existed, was first in honor at this time. The composer whose name stands in gold over the proscenium arch of Symphony Hall was the one through whom the institution of the old order spoke its farewell.

The work was admirably interpreted, with all the finish of other times and with all the sonority of today. This favorite repertory piece, indeed, was presented in a way that must have made all who could recall the Music Hall symphony concerts of the eighties believe, without reserve, in the idea of artistic continuity.

Will the tradition be preserved in the orchestra of the new order? Undoubtedly it will, since the style of interpretation rests, more probably, on the discrimination of the listeners than on any decisions of sustainers, managers or trustees. And the unalterable fact of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts is the audiences. Their appreciation of music remains, no matter who directs policies. In the last analysis, their appreciation and the fame of the orchestra prove to be one and the same thing.

The first question that arises is in regard to the conductor. Whoever he is he will doubtless have to find a way to bind the sentiment of the past four decades and that of the coming decade together; but assuredly he may do this without being of the same nationality as his recent predecessors. The next question will be that of the unionism or the non-unionism of the membership. And whatever settlement is found, the standards of playing must remain as high as before. At the same time, the members must be men loyally disposed toward the United States. There may be persons who think that unionism and high standards of performance are incompatible. But have they ever heard the Philadelphia Orchestra play?

Minor questions are those of soloists and the deficit. As for the soloists, they should unquestionably be selected without any regard for the private business arrangements of the manager. As for the deficit, nobody having given the matter thought imagines that the amount the concerts cost over income is anything which the community, in these days of opera and symphony guarantee funds, would hesitate to make up.

Boston Concert Notes

BOSTON, Mass. — The pop concerts, given by an orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra players, open in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, with Agide Jacchia conducting. Programs of popular music will be played every week-day evening until July 6, from 8 to 11 o'clock. On Thursday evening of next week, the program will be arranged partly with reference to the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors Conference, which will be holding sessions in Boston.

MAJ. HIGGINSON MAKES ADIEUS

Mayor Thanks Founder of Symphony at Final Concert

PATRON PRAISES HIS ORCHESTRA

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the central figure last night of an impressive scene in which, at the close of the concert in Symphony Hall, he took formal leave of the orchestra, paid tribute to the conductors and members for their devotion, thanked its audiences and bespoke continued support for those who were to take up the work which he felt obliged to lay down.

Friends of the orchestra and of Maj. Higginson filled the hall and the great assembly, listeners and musicians, literally overwhelmed him with applause. He first set forth his wishes and aims in founding the orchestra, then turned to its conductor and members with warm words of praise, and finally addressed a closing word of confidence to the public.

Mayor Thanks Founder

It fell to Mayor Peters to voice the gratitude of the citizens of Boston, and his tribute added the note of personal affection to the occasion of farewell. Maj. Higginson was too deeply touched to make more than a few words of reply. "Mr. Mayor," he said, "and members of the orchestra, I thank you all, but especially the mayor, and you don't know how sorry I am to say good-by to you."

"My friends," said Maj. Higginson, "the Boston Symphony orchestra was set up from the conviction of my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras. In Europe I had seen the pleasure and comfort of such orchestras, and it seemed my duty and was my aim to give our country the best music possible.

"To achieve this object it was necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success, and then to require of him and his men a high, and ever higher, standard. To win that standard nothing has been spared and the aim never forgotten; and in this season our orchestra has reached our high-water mark.

"The concerts were offered to the whole public, but my chief wish and hope was to meet the needs and satisfy the longings for the beautiful art of the many people leading quiet or busy lives and having little enjoyment; and, furthermore, to help in the education of the students of music.

"To me the concerts have been a great joy, not only because of the lovely music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and this year it is they who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future. To these unknown friends and to all of our audiences far and wide I offer my heartiest thanks. Thus the faith and the vision of my youth have been justified.

"I had hoped to have carried on the concerts during my lifetime, but this war has brought us many troubles, and among them the problems of the orchestra during the season, which have exhausted my strength and nerves. Therefore my part in our orchestra ceases tonight, except for the popular concerts of this year. The conductors, the members of our orchestra and the office management have done their work excellently from first to last, and have deserved the warmest thanks and praise."

Turning to the orchestra, the speaker proceeded:

"Gentlemen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—For many years we—you and I—have been good comrades, an honor and a great pleasure for me. In these years we have worked hand and glove together, and have kept true to our rule, laid down at the outstart, of intelligent study under one conductor at a time—and we have reaped the reward of success sure to follow. We have played in many cities of the United States, and have won great applause and, better still, have deserved it. Each year has marked an advance in the quality of our music, and this year has seen our high point.

"I like to think myself a member of our orchestra, and have done my best to help you; and, on your side, you have served with an intelligence and devotion not to be forgotten by the audiences or by me. I congratulate you, and thank you for our success fairly won.

"My time for work is past; and now a number of excellent men and women have taken my place. Of you I ask for them the same intelligence and devotion as in years gone by. My best wishes go out to you."

To the audience Maj. Higginson said: "Our orchestra has always been heartily supported by you and by the public throughout our country, else it could not have lived. It must live in all its strength and beauty, and now will be carried on by some friends who have taken it up; and for them I ask the same support which you have given me through all these years."

Mayor Peters said: "We all feel that tonight, when he whose name is so indissolubly connected with the Symphony Orchestra and who has done so much for it is here to say an official good-by, there should go out to him a word of parting from those hosts of people who have benefited from this orchestra during a period running back almost 40 years, and it is to represent them that I am here now.

"A democracy, to be successful, must have service given to its people, and he who in a democracy renders service to the public is he who earns the gratitude of the people. The spirit which actuates this country has been shown by him who had the vision to create this great orchestra.

"In the Harvard Union, at the 80th anniversary of his birthday, Maj. Higginson said he did this for the people, and that represents the contribution of his citizenship. Sir, you have rendered much to your country in many ways; you have in yourself set up a standard of public service since the time of our war; and tonight I have the privilege of thanking you on behalf of the people of this city—those thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands who, unknown most of them to you personally, have shared together, as this great audience has shared tonight, the pleasure and profit of your work for them.

"We want, sir, to doubly thank you, and we want to give to these men who are taking on themselves the future of this orchestra our best wishes and expressions of confidence. But to you, sir, particularly—and it is my privilege as mayor to speak for its people—we want to thank you deeply and humbly as a body of your fellow citizens whom you have served through years of unselfish devotion."

American May 5-1918

TAKES HIS LEAVE OF ORCHESTRA

Maj. Higginson Makes Farewell Address to Symphony

Major Henry L. Higginson never made a speech which became better his character and his long record of sterling citizenship than his address at the last concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night in Symphony Hall. After his address to the audience and orchestra Mayor Andrew J. Peters ascended the platform and addressed words of thanks for the public of this city to Major Higginson.

GIVEN THE "TUSCH"

The last brilliant chord of Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" had sounded the last note of a programme of Major Higginson's own choosing, and the applause of the orchestral performance was just dying down when it suddenly swelled again, as Major Higginson rose from his seat on the floor and made his way down the middle aisle to the stage.

As he ascended the short ladder and stepped on the stage the orchestra rose and gave him the "tusch"—the flourish of trumpets and drums reserved for great and favored men—while the applause of the audience continued. Then Major Higginson spoke, quietly, but in a voice heard to the uttermost limits of the hall, a voice which only came near failing him once or twice when emotion threatened to overcome him.

The purpose of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he said in effect, had been to give the best music and the best possible orchestral performances of it to the people of the city and the country. This had been his dream, conceived when he was studying music in Europe, where he noted the effect of good orchestral music and the pleasure and profit the public got out of it.

Joy From the Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had given him, personally, great joy, but not less great had been his pleasure in the thought of what it could bring the people, especially those people whose lives were toilsome and studious, who had little leisure, and comparatively few bright hours. Many of these people, and many of the people present, had written him letters, and these letters, from a multitude unknown to Major Higginson, were received by him with deep gratification. He took this occasion of thanking the writers.

Major Higginson went on to say that he had believed it necessary, in pursuit of his end, to appoint a conductor who should be given full charge of everything pertaining to the musical performances, and make him responsible for their quality. This policy had succeeded well. The Boston Symphony had quickly risen to a rank second to no other orchestra in the world. The high water mark of its achievement had been the musical achievement of the past winter. Conductors and orchestra had done their task thoroughly and well.

Major Higginson said that he had expected to continue his work with the orchestra during the whole of his lifetime, but that the stress and strain of conditions during the winter past had taxed his strength and his nerve, and now friends had come forward and offered to continue the work. The orchestra was organized to serve the public. The public has admirably supported the orchestra.

Address to Musicians

He bespoke the public support for the new trustees of the destinies of the orchestra, as that support had been given the orchestra in the past.

Then he stepped on the conductor's stand, turned about and addressed the orchestra. He greeted them from a full heart. He felt, he said, almost like a member of the orchestra himself, and had been very proud and happy to be one of them in spirit. Their achievements had cost hard work, but the reward had been very great. Not only Boston, but other cities throughout the country, had welcomed them, "and you deserved it," he added warmly. Saying these things Major Higginson's voice more than once trembled, and he coughed to hide his feelings.

As he turned, Mayor Peters stepped to the platform and spoke of Major Higginson's career of patriotism, public service, altruistic and artistic ideals—a man who had been a great citizen of democracy in the extent of the service which he had done the people.

Deafening applause broke out after Mayor Peters' last words. Major Higginson bowed gravely, then simply raised his hand for silence, and said: "I thank you all. You don't know how hard it is for me to leave you," and quickly left the stage.

Musical Courier May 5

MANUFACTURED FROM WHOLE CLOTH.

The disgraceful insinuations against Frederick Stock, which aroused so much ire on the part of orchestra patrons last week, were the direct work of a little clique of people who have not had what they believe to be their deserts at the hands of the conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. In good faith it is stated if a certain violinist had been engaged as soloist every season he would not now be actively propagating slander against Mr. Stock. This violinist is quite a Vicar of Bray in the changing of his sympathies, and if it were the thing to be in sympathy with the Germans, he would be a German. He runs with the hare and turns with the hounds. There are others of the same kind, as, for instance, the good mother of a composer. If the composer's works had been played, the mother would have been cringing to Mr. Stock, regardless of his nationality. The cabal against the conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, to which we referred last week, was manufactured from whole cloth by a few disgruntled people who have their personal grievances. Mr. Stock has ignored all these people who helped along the conspiracy. He has consistently unheeded rumors and shown by his actions that from first to last he stands with the United States. There are those who would be glad to dethrone Mr. Stock, but the question comes, "Who could fill his place?"

Why all this pother about finding a conductor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra? As the Brooklyn "Eagle" pointed out recently, if Dr. Muck had suddenly been killed there is little doubt that a leader could have been found to take his place and very quickly. The writer continues: "Now that there is a whole summer in which to select a new leader and to enable him to conduct rehearsals, it is greatly to be hoped that the orchestra may continue to be the great national institution which it has long been. Major Higginson has been much hurt by some of the comments which have been made on Dr. Muck's retention, but the future of the orchestra, to which he has devoted years of his life and much of his fortune, is more important than any question of personal feeling. However well founded his personal resentment may be, it is to be hoped that Major Higginson will continue the very great service he has done to his countrymen and women by the maintenance of this unrivaled orchestra."

* * *

Globe May 5 –

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

The 33d season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall tomorrow and continue for nine weeks, closing Saturday evening, July 6. Concerts will be given every evening except Sunday from 8 to 11. With the exception of one season, these concerts have been given annually since 1885 and, as a Boston institution, are only less famous than the Symphony concerts themselves. In the beginning they were called promenade concerts, and were modeled closely after the Bilse concerts of Berlin.

For many years the orchestra was limited to about 50 men, but in the past few seasons this has gradually grown until now the actual playing forces number 75, an orchestra as large as many symphony orchestras, and as large as the Boston Symphony Orchestra traveled with not many years ago. With the exception of the leaders of the different choirs, practically the entire orchestra is on call for the Pops.

Agide Jacchia, the admirable Italian conductor, who has been reengaged for the season, has succeeded admirably in imparting "pep" to the orchestra and programs. A talented conductor, he displayed marked versatility. It was to be expected that operatic music would sound well with him, but he succeeded equally well with musical comedy, Vienna waltzes and popular music of the day.

It goes without saying that in these stirring times "war music" will play no small part in the programs. Arrangements have been made of some of the more popular war songs, while the indefatigable Sousa has written some thrilling new marches which will be heard. The plans now do not call for singers as soloists, but from time to time members of the orchestra will appear in this capacity.

A feature of the opening program will be the performance of the National airs of the four principal Allied Nations. The concert will open with the "Marcia Reale" of Italy. In the first intermission "La Marseillaise" will be played; in the second "God Save the King," and the concert will close with "The Star Spangled Banner." A number of new pieces and selections will be played during the week.

Thursday evening, May 9, will bring to the concert the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors' Conference, then in session in Boston. Some special features have been arranged.

The program tomorrow, opening with Lieut Sousa's new march, "Solid Men to the Front," will include the second Rhapsody of Liszt, and these numbers from the operas, the "Mignon" overture, a "Pagliacci" fantasia, arranged by Mr. Jacchia; prelude to Act 1 from "Carmen," the "Meditation" from "Thais,"

Herald May 5

THE POPS

The 33d season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall tomorrow, and continue for nine weeks, closing Saturday evening, July 6. Concerts will be given every evening, except Sunday, from 8 to 11. With the exception of one season, these concerts have been given annually since 1885, and, as a Boston institution, are only less famous than the Symphony Concerts themselves. In the beginning they were called promenade concerts, and were modeled closely after the Bilse concerts of Berlin. Gradually they assumed a more popular character and the public of its own accord dubbed them "The Pops" and such they have remained since their early years.

The actual playing force now numbers 75, an orchestra as large as many symphony orchestras, and as large as the Boston Symphony Orchestra traveled with not many years ago. With the exception of the leaders of the different sections, practically the entire Symphony Orchestra is on call for The Pops. This is one of the reasons why the Pop Concerts of Boston are unique. As the Symphony Orchestra has no rival in this or any other country, the Pop orchestra, comprised of the same men, must have a like distinction. And perhaps this is the chief reason that Boston, of all the cities of this country, has been able to maintain successfully such concerts for a third of a century.

It will be welcome news to the patrons of the Pops that Agide Jacchai, the distinguished Italian conductor, has been re-engaged for this season. Mr. Jacchai made a more than favorable impression a year ago. In the vernacular of the day he is "full of pep," and succeeded admirably in imparting "pep" to the orchestra and programs. Although concerts of this character were strange to him, it required only a short time for him to settle in his place and get into sympathy with his audiences. His long experience and the invaluable routine of the opera house enabled him quickly to fall into Boston ways, and even "college nights," usually a pitfall for the strange conductor, had no terrors for him. It was to be expected that operatic music would sound well with him, but he succeeded equally well with musical comedy, Vienna waltzes and popular music of the day.

"War music" will play no small part in the programs. Arrangements have been made of some of the more popular war songs, while the indefatigable Sousa has written some thrilling new marches which will be heard. The plans now do not call for singers as soloists, but from time to time members of the orchestra will appear in this capacity.

A feature of the opening program will be the performance of the national airs of the four principal allied nations. The concert will open with the "Marcia Reale" of Italy. In the first intermission "La Marseillaise" will be played; in the second, "God Save the King" and the concert will close with "The Star Spangled Banner." A number of new pieces and selections will be played during the week.

Thursday evening, May 9, will bring to the concert the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors' Conference, then in session in Boston. Some special features have been arranged for this.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Solid Men to the Front"....Lt. Sousa
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
"La Marseillaise."
Prelude to Act I., "Carmen".....Bizet
Meditation, "Thais".....Massenet
Solo violin, Mr. Hoffmann.
"Marche Miniature".....Tschaikowsky
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
"God Save the King."
Selection, "Her Regiment".....Herbert
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..Mascagni
Waltz, "La Barcarole".....Waldteufel
"American Patrol".....Meachan
"The Star Spangled Banner."

Herald May 5

THE POPS BEGIN ANEW

Agide Jacchia, the Conductor for the Pops Concerts.

American May 7 – 1918

Advertiser May 5

Boston's "Pops" Are World Famous

THE Pop concerts, which open at Symphony Hall tomorrow night, have been given annually since 1885 and, as a Boston institution, are only less famius than the Symphony concerts themselves. In the beginning they were called Promenade Concerts, and were modeled closely after the Bilse Concerts of Berlin. Gradually they assumed a more popular character and the public of its own accord dubbed them "The Pope" and such they have remained since their early years.

For many years the orchestra was limited to about fifty men, but in the past few seasons this has gradually grown until now the actual playing forces number seventy-five, an orchestra as large as many symphony orchestras, and as large as the Boston Symphony Orchestra travelled with not many years ago. As a matter of fact, with the exception of the leaders of the different sections, practically the entire Symphony Orchestra is on call for the Pops.

This is one of the reasons why the Pop concerts of Boston are unique. As the Symphony Orchestra has no rival in this or any other country, the Pop orchestra, comprised of the same men, must have a like distinction. And perhaps this is the chief reason that Boston, of all the cities of this country has been able to maintain successfully such concerts for a third of a century.

"POPS" HAVE PATRIOTIC OPENING

A splendid program, a most artistic presentation of the various numbers by director and orchestra, and a thoroughly appreciative audience, combined to provide a most auspicious opening for the thirty-third season of Boston's famous Pops, in Symphony Hall. Stirring patriotic numbers featured the offering for the evening, which, if it is representative of the programs to come, assures a delightful season to the thousands of music lovers of this city.

Agide Jacchia, who conducted last year, has been re-engaged. His direction of the great orchestra of symphony players left nothing to be desired. Many encores were demanded, and to satisfy the insistent audience several extra numbers were also introduced.

"The Star Spangled Banner" is, of course, a part of every program at the Pops this year, but the national hymns of allied nations will be played as extras, according to present plans. The "Marseillaise" was greeted with thunderous applause last night.

The program opened with a new march by Sousa, "Solid Men to the Front," which was well received. The overture to "Mignon" and the waltz, "Jolly Fellows," by Vollstedt, followed. The orchestra first showed its real capacity in its offering from "Pagliacci," where all the beauty of Leoncavallo's music was given full play.

The prelude to Act 1 of "Carmen" followed the first intermission. The great orchestra gave a thoroughly adequate interepretation of Bizet's splendid work. Then came one of the feature numbers of the evening—the "Meditation" from "Thais," with Mr. Hoffmann as solo violin.

The audience, which had greeted all the prior numbers with the applause they merited, showed even greater enthusiasm now, and Mr. Hoffmann repeated the number.

Tschaikowsky's charming "Marche Miniature" and "The March of the Little Lead Soldiers" were two delightful selections. Liszt's "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" was rendered with true feeling, and the intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana" hardly fell short of perfection. Other delightful numbers were Waldteufel's "Barcarole," a selection from "Her Regiment," Bolzini's "Minuet," "The American Patrol," and the nationally-popular "Over There," which was played as one of the extras.

Musical Courier May 5

MANUFACTURED FROM WHOLE CLOTH.

The disgraceful insinuations against Frederick Stock, which aroused so much ire on the part of orchestra patrons last week, were the direct work of a little clique of people who have not had what they believe to be their deserts at the hands of the conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. In good faith it is stated if a certain violinist had been engaged as soloist every season he would not now be actively propagating slander against Mr. Stock. This violinist is quite a Vicar of Bray in the changing of his sympathies, and if it were the thing to be in sympathy with the Germans, he would be a German. He runs with the hare and turns with the hounds. There are others of the same kind, as, for instance, the good mother of a composer. If the composer's works had been played, the mother would have been cringing to Mr. Stock, regardless of his nationality. The cabal against the conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, to which we referred last week, was manufactured from whole cloth by a few disgruntled people who have their personal grievances. Mr. Stock has ignored all these people who helped along the conspiracy. He has consistently unheeded rumors and shown by his actions that from first to last he stands with the United States. There are those who would be glad to dethrone Mr. Stock, but the question comes, "Who could fill his place?"

Why all this pother about finding a conductor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra? As the Brooklyn "Eagle" pointed out recently, if Dr. Muck had suddenly been killed there is little doubt that a leader could have been found to take his place and very quickly. The writer continues: "Now that there is a whole summer in which to select a new leader and to enable him to conduct rehearsals, it is greatly to be hoped that the orchestra may continue to be the great national institution which it has long been. Major Higginson has been much hurt by some of the comments which have been made on Dr. Muck's retention, but the future of the orchestra, to which he has devoted years of his life and much of his fortune, is more important than any question of personal feeling. However well founded his personal resentment may be, it is to be hoped that Major Higginson will continue the very great service he has done to his countrymen and women by the maintenance of this unrivaled orchestra."

* * *

Globe May 5

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

ncerts egin row
d continue for nine weeks, rday evening, July 6. Con-

The 33d season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall tomorrow certs will be given every evening except Sunday from 8 to 11. With the exception of one season, these concerts have been given annually since 1885 and, as a Boston institution, are only less famous than the Symphony concerts themselves. In the beginning they were called promenade concerts, and were modeled closely after the Bilse concerts of Berlin.

For many years the orchestra was limited to about 50 men, but in the past few seasons this has gradually grown until now the actual playing forces number 75, an orchestra as large as many symphony orchestras, and as large as the Boston Symphony Orchestra traveled with not many years ago. With the exception of the leaders of the different choirs, practically the entire orchestra is on call for the Pops.

Agide Jacchia, the admirable Italian conductor, who has been reengaged for the season, has succeeded admirably in imparting "pep" to the orchestra and programs. A talented conductor, he displayed marked versatility. It was to be expected that operatic music would sound well with him, but he succeeded equally well with musical comedy, Vienna waltzes and popular music of the day.

It goes without saying that in these stirring times "war music" will play no small part in the programs. Arrangements have been made of some of the more popular war songs, while the indefatigable Sousa has written some thrilling new marches which will be heard. The plans now do not call for singers as soloists, but from time to time members of the orchestra will appear in this capacity.

A feature of the opening program will be the performance of the National airs of the four principal Allied Nations. The concert will open with the "Marcia Reale" of Italy. In the first intermission "La Marseillaise" will be played; in the second "God Save the King," and the concert will close with "The Star Spangled Banner." A number of new pieces and selections will be played during the week.

Thursday evening, May 9, will bring to the concert the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors' Conference, then in session in Boston. Some special features have been arranged.

The program tomorrow, opening with Lieut Sousa's new march, "Solid Men to the Front," will include the second Rhapsody of Liszt, and these numbers from the operas, the "Mignon" overture, a "Pagliacci" fantasia, arranged by Mr Jacchia; prelude to Act 1 from "Carmen," the "Meditation" from "Thais,"

Herald May 5

THE POPS

The 33d season of Pop Concerts will open in Symphony Hall tomorrow, and continue for nine weeks, closing Saturday evening, July 6. Concerts will be given every evening, except Sunday, from 8 to 11. With the exception of one season, these concerts have been given annually since 1885, and, as a Boston institution, are only less famous than the Symphony Concerts themselves. In the beginning they were called promenade concerts, and were modeled closely after the Bilse concerts of Berlin. Gradually they assumed a more popular character and the public of its own accord dubbed them "The Pops" and such they have remained since their early years.

The actual playing force now numbers 75, an orchestra as large as many symphony orchestras, and as large as the Boston Symphony Orchestra traveled with not many years ago. With the exception of the leaders of the different sections, practically the entire Symphony Orchestra is on call for The Pops. This is one of the reasons why the Pop Concerts of Boston are unique. As the Symphony Orchestra has no rival in this or any other country, the Pop orchestra, comprised of the same men, must have a like distinction. And perhaps this is the chief reason that Boston, of all the cities of this country, has been able to maintain successfully such concerts for a third of a century.

It will be welcome news to the patrons of the Pops that Agide Jacchai, the distinguished Italian conductor, has been re-engaged for this season. Mr. Jacchai made a more than favorable impression a year ago. In the vernacular of the day he is "full of pep," and succeeded admirably in imparting "pep" to the orchestra and programs. Although concerts of this character were strange to him it required only a short time for him to settle in his place and get into sympathy with his audiences. His long experience and the invaluable routine of the opera house enabled him quickly to fall into Boston ways, and even "college nights," usually a pitfall for the strange conductor, had no terrors for him. It was to be expected that operatic music would sound well with him, but he succeeded equally well with musical comedy, Vienna waltzes and popular music of the day.

HERALD-ST.

"War music" will play no small part in the programs. Arrangements have been made of some of the more popular war songs, while the indefatigable Sousa has written some thrilling new marches which will be heard. The plans now do not call for singers as soloists, but from time to time members of the orchestra will appear in this capacity.

A feature of the opening program will be the performance of the national airs of the four principal allied nations. The concert will open with the "Marcia Reale" of Italy. In the first intermission "La Marseillaise" will be played; in the second, "God Save the King" and the concert will close with "The Star Spangled Banner." A number of new pieces and selections will be played during the week.

Thursday evening, May 9, will bring to the concert the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors' Conference, then in session in Boston. Some special features have been arranged for this.

The program for tomorrow night is as follows:

March, "Solid Men to the Front"....Lt. Sousa
Overture, "Mignon".....Thomas
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows".....Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
"La Marseillaise."
Prelude to Act I., "Carmen".....Bizet
Meditation, "Thais".....Massenet
Solo violin, Mr. Hoffmann.
"Marche Miniature".....Tschaikowsky
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
"God Save the King."
Selection, "Her Regiment".....Herbert
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..Mascagni
Waltz, "La Barcarole".....Waldteufel
"American Patrol".....Meachan
"The Star Spangled Banner."

Herald May 5

THE POPS BEGIN ANEW

Agide Jacchia, the Conductor for the Pops Concerts.

Adventiser May 5

Boston's "Pops" Are World Famous

THE Pop concerts, which open at Symphony Hall tomorrow night, have been given annually since 1885 and, as a Boston institution, are only less famius than the Symphony concerts themselves. In the beginning they were called Promenade Concerts, and were modeled closely after the Bilse Concerts of Berlin. Gradually they assumed a more popular character and the public of its own accord dubbed them "The Pope" and such they have remained since their early years.

For many years the orchestra was limited to about fifty men, but in the past few seasons this has gradually grown until now the actual playing forces number seventy-five, an orchestra as large as many symphony orchestras, and as large as the Boston Symphony Orchestra travelled with not many years ago. As a matter of fact, with the exception of the leaders of the different sections, practically the entire Symphony Orchestra is on call for the Pops.

This is one of the reasons why the Pop concerts of Boston are unique. As the Symphony Orchestra has no rival in this or any other country, the Pop orchestra, comprised of the same men, must have a like distinction. And perhaps this is the chief reason that Boston, of all the cities of this country has been able to maintain successfully such concerts for a third of a century.

American May 7 - 1918

"POPS" HAVE PATRIOTIC OPENING

A splendid program, a most artistic presentation of the various numbers by director and orchestra, and a thoroughly appreciative audience, combined to provide a most auspicious opening for the thirty-third season of Boston's famous Pops, in Symphony Hall. Stirring patriotic numbers featured the offering for the evening, which, if it is representative of the programs to come, assures a delightful season to the thousands of music lovers of this city.

Agide Jacchia, who conducted last year, has been re-engaged. His direction of the great orchestra of symphony players left nothing to be desired. Many encores were demanded, and to satisfy the insistent audience several extra numbers were also introduced.

"The Star Spangled Banner" is, of course, a part of every program at the Pops this year, but the national hymns of allied nations will be played as extras, according to present plans. The "Marseillaise" was greeted with thunderous applause last night.

The program opened with a new march by Sousa, "Solid Men to the Front," which was well received. The overture to "Mignon" and the waltz, "Jolly Fellows," by Vollstedt, followed. The orchestra first showed its real capacity in its offering from "Pagliacci," where all the beauty of Leoncavallo's music was given full play.

The prelude to Act 1 of "Carmen" followed the first intermission. The great orchestra gave a thoroughly adequate interepretation of Bizet's splendid work. Then came one of the feature numbers of the evening—the "Meditation" from "Thais," with Mr. Hoffmann as solo violin.

The audience, which had greeted all the prior numbers with the applause they merited, showed even greater enthusiasm now, and Mr. Hoffmann repeated the number.

Tschaikowsky's charming "Marche Miniature" and "The March of the Little Lead Soldiers" were two delightful selections. Liszt's "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" was rendered with true feeling, and the intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana" hardly fell short of perfection. Other delightful numbers were Waldteufel's "Barcarole," a selection from "Her Regiment," Bolzini's "Minuet," "The American Patrol," and the nationally-popular "Over There," which was played as one of the extras.

Post May 7 — 1918

Transcript May 7 — 123

Symphony's Bright Future

Jacchia to Conduct the Pops This Week—Reflections on Debussy—The Rhythm of "Ragtime"

The last pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as supported by Major Henry L. Higginson, were given on Friday afternoon and last night in Symphony Hall. The last seasons of the Pops under the same regime commences tomorrow night.

In the audiences of Friday afternoon and yesterday evening were many who had attended the Symphony concerts since their beginnings back in the old Music Hall. The Friday afternoon concerts, partly social, partly musical in their makeup, have been almost those of a big family. Season after season the subscribers to these concerts have come to their seats, nodded to familar neighbors, and taken up the conversation where they left off the last spring. The Saturday night audiences have contained, in the late years especially, a larger portion than the Friday afternoon affairs of music students and professional musicians of the city. The atmosphere at these concerts is a trifle less formal, the talk more on the subject of the new symphony just performed than on the various and sundry tidbits of Friday afternoon gossip, and after the concert a good many of us go over to a chosen resort and continue the argument over there.

As with the audience, so with the orchestra. The men sitting in it have been there for many years. The last one of the men who played in the original body in 1881 has not resigned on pension. The orchestra was founded by Major Higginson for one purpose—the best possible performances of the best music. The member of the orchestra who signed an engagement was sure of a long term, and, in the later years of the body, of a pension if he resigned because of old age, or because an incoming conductor felt it best to replace him with a different man. There has been a remarkable esprit de corps in the body of the orchestra, a spirit reflected in the attitude of the present management. Ideals and traditions have been maintained. These men have worked for the honor of something higher and more durable than themselves.

The same spirit which went to the founding and maintenance of the subscription concerts has been generally maintained in the directing of the "Pop" concerts, of a less pretentious and exacting character, of course, than the concerts of the complete Symphony Orchestra, under its appointed conductor, in the winter time. The size of the "Pop" orchestra has been increased from season to season and to the benefit of the Symphony musicians. The management found after awhile that even in concerts of this nature the life and quality of the performances gained by having a conductor not a member of the orchestra direct its interpretation. Hence the presence of Mr. Jacchia, the second visiting conductor to be engaged. The programmes have been constantly enriched and, in accordance with their character, have been abreast more or less of the musical topics of the times, ranging all the way from famous orchestral masterworks of various kinds to fragments from current musical comedies and the like. They were abreast of the times, too, in a more serious sense. It was at the special request and insistence of Major Higginson that "The Star Spangled Banner" was played at each and every one of the "Pop" concerts, last spring and summer, and the programmes of this season will play not only America's national anthem, but also those of the allies.

And now the Boston Symphony Orchestra faces a new regime, laden with difficult complications, largely brought on by public feeling due to the war. Not unnaturally, the patrons of past days look with some apprehension at the future, since Major Higginson, deeply wounded by aspersions unworthily cast on him in connection with the body which has been his immortal gift to the city of Boston, has given up all active connection with it.

A group of very representative Boston men have persuaded Major Higginson to let them carry on the work, and it is safe to assume that their spirit in doing this is not less altruistic and artistic than was his. They have found public sentiment on their side in the undertaking. This is proven by the financial support which they have already obtained for the future maintenance of the orchestra. The people of Boston will never give up what Major Higginson has bestowed on them.

Thursday evening, May 9, will bring to the "Pops" the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors' Conference, then in session in Boston. Some special features have been arranged for this. The programme for Monday, the opening night, is as follows:

March, "Solid Men to the Front" ..... Lieutenant Sousa
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ..... Leoncavallo
"La Marseillaise."
Prelude to Act I, "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Meditation, "Thais" ..... Massenet
Solo violin, Mr. Hoffmann.
"Marche Miniature" ..... Tschaikowsky
"Second Hungarian Rhapsody" ..... Liszt
"God Save the King."
Selection, "Her Regiment" ..... Herbert
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .. Mascagni
Waltz, "La Barcarole" ..... Waldteufel
"American Patrol" ..... Meacham
"The Star Spangled Banner."

The only astonishing thing about the fight that Claude Achille Debussy, recently deceased, had to make to gain recognition is the stereotyped character of the criticisms brought to bear against him. This is particularly astonishing, not only because one would have thought that the remarkable devolopment of musical criticism in recent years would have resulted in a more generally receptive attitude on the part of both critics and public toward a new manifestation of art, but also because the revolution which Mr. Debussy so admirably and quietly effected was very far from being a revolution of the stereotyped order.

Debussy did not out-Wagner Wagner. He did not follow in the paths laid out by predecessors, as Wagner to a considerable degree did. He started with a conception of music as new as anything under the sun can be—and nothing under the sun can be new—and worked out this conception deliberately, masterfully, with consciousness of his vision. Yet his art was based so thoroughly on fundamental laws of proportion and balance that it is singular he could be as much misunderstood as has proven the case. It was not with a lack of logic, but with inexorable clearsightedness and common sense that he liberated harmony, at a blow, from German formulas. He adopted a harmonic principle, philosophy, which sent those formulas into the dust bin which had been waiting for them, lo, these many years. He dared to be natural, to remove from music a mass of scholastic impedimenta which other men had not, strange as it now appears, initiative enough to dispense with in the first place. He had the Frenchman's instinct for clearness and truth. He knew what he saw and what he heard, and he knew how to record the impression in his art. Very few people know this. Their senses mislead them, and the line between sensuous impressions and intellectual perception is completely lost.

Then there have been the objections to Debussy's "form." It would have paid, at an earlier date than the present, to study the forms of his compositions with a view to finding out whether his clearsightedness as regarded harmony and the musical recording of sensuous impressions would not have been echoed in the proportions and outlines of his productions. "Proportion! Outlines," cries Old Fogy. "They haven't any!" But that is not true. The most amazing thing in the music of Debussy, after one has passed in review his wonders of "harmonic color," his shifting tonal tints, his emotional subtleties, is the underlying order and precision that prevail in all of his representative works. The smallest piano piece, the most insignificant song, the most illusive of Debussy's musical impressions, such as the epoch-making "L'Aprec-midi d'un Faun," or such piano pieces as "La lune descend sur le temple qui fut," "Poissons d'or," or the nocturnes for orchestra and voices—all these things have clearly established structures, which, delicate, intangible as they appear, are nevertheless durable and permanent. And, again, in his treatment of this much-discussed "form," Debussy has been both cognizant and independent of precedent.

His "form" has been compared to the form of fire, a form so subtle and changeable, yet always proportionate in its manifestations, that it seems as near spirit as anything in this world can be. Yet it is amazing, examining his compositions note by note, inch by inch, to observe his general reliance on musical forms long since indorsed by the classicists. "Two-part form," "three-part form," "sonata form," "rondo form"—all these things are present in his works, and in an astonishing number.

We speak of these things, not to appear as a rabid Debussyite, or one who restlessly exchanges old idols for new, but as examples of the narrowness of contemporary opinion toward a master; a narrowness, it is true, which will always exist as long as the world endures, but which, like everything else in the world, is none the less astonishing, with each appearance, on that account. But with Debussy the spectacle is particularly amusing, because he was such a subtle mind, such an adroit fencer. He did not shout his opponents down, as Wagner did, with tongue, pen and music paper. What one might call the physical impact of conflict was not only very distasteful, but wholly unnecessary to him. With the calmness of complete conviction and immeasurable mental superiority he simply locked himself into his tower of ivory and let the Philistines rage as they pleased without. No doubt he was not indifferent to all opinion. No human being is.

But it is probable that he approached as near to genuine indifference and delicate, high-bred scorn of those who had everything in the world but weapons to meet him and fight him on his own ground when he composed. Therefore he was at times a snob in his music, and an enormous number of musical snobs in all corners of the world gathered about his standard. That was the sad limitation of the man. But that limitation, characteristic not of the early Debussy, of "The Blessed Demoiselle." "Pelleas et Melisande," a majority of the songs and piano pieces, the nocturnes for orchestra, the quartet, but rather of the man of prosperous later years, is small indeed beside the wonder and the truth of his representative art that looked on a new world with the eyes of a little child—eyes full of wisdom which heaven has not always bestowed on the most ancient of sages.

American May 7

Editor the AMERICAN:

On the printed program for the "Pops" tonight, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" is given precedence over "The Star Spangled Banner." Why cannot German and Austrian music be eliminated from the "Pops"?

Is this Boston or Berlin?

BAY STATE CITIZEN.

THE "POPS" FOREVER

Calmly and Usefully Filling Their Old Place in a New World, Our Excellent Summer Concerts Begin a Thirty-Third Season—Proved and Pleasurable Practices at Players' Desks and Auditors' Tables—A Likable Leader

MASSENET, Mascagni, and George M. Cohan all earned encores last evening at Symphony Hall, Lieutenant Sousa rubbed elbows with Tschaikowsky, the Little Lead Soldiers of M. Pierné made their accustomed march, the waiters were delightfully busy in assuaging an uncommon opening-night thirst, and the anxieties of symphonic politics floated away in clouds of tobacco smoke. In brief, the unmatched and indispensable "Pops"—now more indispensable than ever—are with us again.

They are the familiar "Pops"—familiar in pattern and procedure, in the assembling of an ample band, ably led and indubitably content to lend their skill to "Over There" as well as to "Mignon" and the Hungarian Rhapsodies, and familiar, too, in all the amenities and privileges that make these summer concerts one of the chief claims of this town to metropolitan life. They are, too, somewhat unfamiliar Pops—just as everything under the sun has somehow changed—in a perceptible reaction to the moods of the day. The sprinkling of uniforms is the outward sign, and even more evident is the new reaction to war-meanings as the music happens to express them. Distributed through the interstices of the opening night's programme were the national airs of Britain, Italy, France and America—the most notably striking item in the result being the perfectly spontaneous demand for the repetition of "La Marseillaise."

The conductor is Agide Jacchia, already known and liked for his pleasantly suave and enthusiastic work with the Pops of last season. The orchestra is of the accustomed and expected size and distribution, and of an excellence that has but one drawback. The good folk of the balconies, with avid thirst for that excellent music, and with scant opportunity for slaking different thirsts—conversational and otherwise—are a little imposing of their point of view on the table-strewed floor. Now we are more than willing to maintain absolute silence during M. Massenet's "Meditation"; even the inevitable Intermezzo demands it, and fragile things like the Mignon Entr' acte deserve it; but we maintain that during Mr. Herbert's "Selections" and Herr Waldteufel's waltzes the ancient perquisites and privileges and usages of the Pops justify us in a few quiet personalities without the need of hard looks from our neighbors.

The announcements for a week do not very amply justify the hope that the comparatively unhackneyed is to loom large in Mr. Jacchia's programmes. The Index Expurgatorious that someone once intelligently suggested for "Zampa," "Quartet for Rigoletto," and others of that ilk is still an event of a doubtful future. However, it is idle to complain on this score so long as "Träumerei" is assured of encores; and it is still early in the season. And Mr. Jacchia promises the "Midsummer Night's Dream" Scherzo for Thursday, and the "Largo" from the New World Symphony for Friday. In passing, let it be noted that no one arose in his place and protested against the presence of certain Teutonic names on Mr. Jacchia's programmes.

Meantime, let us be quietly thankful that the universal upheaval so far leaves undisturbed the early summer routine of Symphony Hall. The abolition of the Boston Pops would be no minor horror of war ;and, of course, never in the preceding thirty-two seasons has there been so ample scope for its informal ministrations as now, when "days of peace and slumberous calm are fled."

F. I.

Globe May 7 1918

"POP" CONCERTS OPEN BRILLIANTLY

Jacchia Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiasm

Allied Flags and Patriotic Music Adds Wartime Flavor

Agide Jacchia, the galvanic Italian conductor, found himself well remembered from last season and warmly welcomed by the big audience for this, as he came on last night at Symphony Hall for the first of another series of "Pop" concerts. Applause continued enthusiastically, then Mr Jacchia turned to conduct the hymn which the English ironically enough once borrowed from the Germans and we, to fit our words to "America," later borrowed from them. On the program it stood as "God Save the King."

Then followed the newest Sousa march—its composer now to be called Lieut Sousa—an inspiring piece, especially in the second strain of the first part, with a songful "trio" leading to a shell-raking barrage by light and heavy artillery of brasses and drums. The military note was emphasized further by the flags of the United States and her Allies displayed over the organ, and the place on the program of Italy's Royal March, the "Marseillaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr Jacchia infused the characteristic "pep" into his conducting of spirited music, particularly that from the operas, as the brilliant conclusion he gave to the "Mignon" overture, the equally brilliant prelude to "Carmen" and the torrid strains of "Pagliacci."

The old second rhapsody of Liszt received a lively waking up. Mr Jacchia swept his men with him, finishing in a frenzy of Hungarian abandon. Extra numbers were added freely. One of the most insistant demands for a repetition folowed the "Thais" mediation, played by Jacques Hoffmann of the first chair, who was obliged to do the last part again.

Tonight the program will include "The Beautiful Blue Danube," a musical river which flows with due neutrality through all civilized lands, a pot-pourri from "Mme Butterfly," the "Peer Gynt" suite, Schubert's "Ave Marie" for solo violin, harp and organ, a selection from "Chu Chin Chow" and the quartet from "Rigolette." Thursday, May 9, will be the night of the Eastern Music Supervisors' conference.

Herald May 7

POP CONCERT SEASON OPENS

Agide Jacchia Again Leads Orchestra in Summer Programs

HAPPY SELECTIONS DELIGHT AUDIENCE

The first Pop concert of the season took place last evening at Symphony Hall. There was a large audience, dotted here and there with uniforms, and the applause was constant and hearty.

Last season Agide Jacchia, an experienced conductor of opera, made these concerts attractive by his spirited conducting, skill in program making and by his ingratiating personality. Re-engaged for this year, he was warmly welcomed last evening. A feature of the first concert was the performance of the national airs of the four principal allied nations: "God Save the King," "Marcia Reale," "La Marseillaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Other numbers on the program included Sousa's "Solid Men to the Front"; overture from Thomas's "Mignon"; Vollstedt's waltz, "Jolly Fellows"; Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody; Herbert's, "Her Regiment"; prelude to the first act of Bizet's "Carmen" and other pieces.

The orchestra responded readily to the baton of a conductor blessed not merely with a knowledge of routine, but an emotional nature. Seldom is there an opportunity to hear music of a light character played by musicians of the first rank. An admirable arrangement of leading themes and melodies from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" was a feature of the evening, while Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody was given with extraordinary brilliance. Extra numbers were

The program this evening will be as follows:

March, "Queen of Sheba" ..... Gounod
"Sonnet" ..... Herold
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube." Strauss
Fantasia, "Madama Butterfly" ... Puccini
Suite, "Peer Gynt" ..... Grieg
(a) Morning Mood. (b) Anitra's Dance. (c) In the Hall of the Mountain King.
"Ave Maria," Solo Violin, Harp and Organ Shubert-Wilhelmj
Valse des Fleurs ..... Tschaikowsky
Overture, "Orpheus" ..... Offenbach
"THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER."
Selection, "Chu Chin Chow" ..... Norton
Quartet from "Rigoletto" ..... Verdi
"Whispering of the Flowers" ..... Blon
March, "The Man Behind the Gun." Lt. Sousa

Post May 6 1918

REPORT ELLIS HAS RESIGNED

Brennan Said to Be Next Symphony Manager

The executive personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was reported last night, is to undergo another important change. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra since its organization by Major Higginson, about 38 years ago, has resigned, according to unofficial reports in high musical circles. He is to be succeeded, it is said, by William H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra for six years.

Mr. Brennan declined to make any statement last night, stating that he preferred the information to come rather from Mr. Ellis, who is now in New York city.

Post May 7 — 1918

Transcript May 7 — 123

Symphony's Bright Future

Jacchia to Conduct the Pops This Week—Reflections on Debussy—The Rhythm of "Ragtime"

The last pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as supported by Major Henry L. Higginson, were given on Friday afternoon and last night in Symphony Hall. The last seasons of the Pops under the same regime commences tomorrow night.

In the audiences of Friday afternoon and yesterday evening were many who had attended the Symphony concerts since their beginnings back in the old Music Hall. The Friday afternoon concerts, partly social, partly musical in their makeup, have been almost those of a big family. Season after season the subscribers to these concerts have come to their seats, nodded to familar neighbors, and taken up the conversation where they letf off the last spring. The Saturday night audiences have contained, in the late years especially, a larger portion than the Friday afternoon affairs of music students and professional musicians of the city. The atmosphere at these concerts is a trifle less formal, the talk more on the subject of the new symphony just performed than on the various and sundry tidbits of Friday afternoon gossip, and after the concert a good many of us go over to a chosen resort and continue the argument over there.

As with the audience, so with the orchestra. The men sitting in it have been there for many years. The last one of the men who played in the original body in 1881 has not resigned on pension. The orchestra was founded by Major Higginson for one purpose—the best possible performances of the best music. The member of the orchestra who signed an engagement was sure of a long term, and, in the later years of the body, of a pension if he resigned because of old age, or because an incoming conductor felt it best to replace him with a different man. There has been a remarkable esprit de corps in the body of the orchestra, a spirit reflected in the attitude of the present management. Ideals and traditions have been maintained. These men have worked for the honor of something higher and more durable than themselves.

The same spirit which went to the founding and maintenance of the subscription concerts has been generally maintained in the directing of the "Pop" concerts, of a less pretentious and exacting character, of course, than the concerts of the complete Symphony Orchestra, under its appointed conductor, in the winter time. The size of the "Pop" orchestra has been increased from season to season and to the benefit of the Symphony musicians. The management found after awhile that even in concerts of this nature the life and quality of the performances gained by having a conductor not a member of the orchestra direct its interpretation. Hence the presence of Mr. Jacchia, the second visiting conductor to be engaged. The programmes have been constantly enriched and, in accordance with their character, have been abreast more or less of the musical topics of the times, ranging all the way from famous orchestral masterworks of various kinds to fragments from current musical comedies and the like. They were abreast of the times, too, in a more serious sense. It was at the special request and insistence of Major Higginson that "The Star Spangled Banner" was played at each and every one of the "Pop" concerts, last spring and summer, and the programmes of this season will play not only America's national anthem, but also those of the allies.

And now the Boston Symphony Orchestra faces a new regime, laden with difficult complications, largely brought on by public feeling due to the war. Not unnaturally, the patrons of past days look with some apprehension at the future, since Major Higginson, deeply wounded by aspersions unworthily cast on him in connection with the body which has been his immortal gift to the city of Boston, has given up all active connection with it.

A group of very representative Boston men have persuaded Major Higginson to let them carry on the work, and it is safe to assume that their spirit in doing this is not less altruistic and artistic than was his. They have found public sentiment on their side in the undertaking. This is proven by the financial support which they have already obtained for the future maintenance of the orchestra. The people of Boston will never give up what Major Higginson has bestowed on them.

Thursday evening, May 9, will bring to the "Pops" the members of the Eastern Music Supervisors' Conference, then in session in Boston. Some special features have been arranged for this. The programme for Monday, the opening night, is as follows:

March, "Solid Men to the Front" ..... Lieutenant Sousa
Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Vollstedt
Fantasia, "Pagliacci" ..... Leoncavallo
"La Marseillaise."
Prelude to Act I., "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Meditation, "Thais" ..... Massenet
Solo violin, Mr. Hoffmann.
"Marche Miniature" ..... Tschaikowsky
"Second Hungarian Rhapsody" ..... Liszt
"God Save the King."
Selection, "Her Regiment" ..... Herbert
Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .. Mascagni
Waltz, "La Barcarole" ..... Waldteufel
"American Parrot" ..... Meacham
"The Star Spangled Banner."

The only astonishing thing about the fight that Claude Achille Debussy, recently deceased, had to make to gain recognition is the stereotyped character of the criticisms brought to bear against him. This is particularly astonishing, not only because one would have thought that the remarkable devolopment of musical criticism in recent years would have resulted in a more generally receptive attitude on the part of both critics and public toward a new manifestation of art, but also because the revolution which Mr. Debussy so admirably and quietly effected was very far from being a revolution of the stereotyped order.

Debussy did not out-Wagner Wagner. He did not follow in the paths laid out by predecessors, as Wagner to a considerable degree did. He started with a conception of music as new as anything under the sun can be—and nothing under the sun can be new—and worked out this conception deliberately, masterfully, with consciousness of his vision. Yet his art was based so thoroughly on fundamental laws of proportion and balance that it is singular he could be as much misunderstood as has proven the case. It was not with a lack of logic, but with inexorable clearsightedness and common sense that he liberated harmony, at a blow, from German formulas. He adopted a harmonic principle, philosophy, which sent those formulas into the dust bin which had been waiting for them, lo, these many years. He dared to be natural, to remove from music a mass of scholastic impedimenta which other men had not, strange as it now appears, initiative enough to dispense with in the first place. He had the Frenchman's instinct for clearness and truth. He knew what he saw and what he heard, and he knew how to record the impression in his art. Very few people know this. Their senses mislead them, and the line between sensuous impressions and intellectual perception is completely lost.

Then there have been the objections to Debussy's "form." It would have paid, at an earlier date than the present, to study the forms of his compositions with a view to finding out whether his clearsightedness as regarded harmony and the musical recording of sensuous impressions would not have been echoed in the proportions and outlines of his productions. "Proportion! Outlines," cries Old Fogy. "They haven't any!" But that is not true. The most amazing thing in the music of Debussy, after one has passed in review his wonders of "harmonic color," his shifting tonal tints, his emotional subtleties, is the underlying order and precision that prevail in all of his representative works. The smallest piano piece, the most insignificant song, the most illusive of Debussy's musical impressions, such as the epoch-making "L'Aprec-midi d'un Faun," or such piano pieces as "La lune descend sur le temple qui fut," "Poissons d'or," or the nocturnes for orchestra and voices—all these things have clearly established structures, which, delicate, intangible as they appear, are nevertheless durable and permanent. And, again, in his treatment of this much-discussed "form," Debussy has been both cognizant and independent of precedent.

His "form" has been compared to the form of fire, a form so subtle and changeable, yet always proportionate in its manifestations, that it seems as near spirit as anything in this world can be. Yet it is amazing, examining his compositions note by note, inch by inch, to observe his general reliance on musical forms long since indorsed by the classicists. "Two-part form," "three-part form," "sonata form," "rondo form"—all these things are present in his works, and in an astonishing number.

We speak of these things, not to appear as a rabid Debussyite, or one who restlessly exchanges old idols for new, but as examples of the narrowness of contemporary opinion toward a master; a narrowness, it is true, which will always exist as long as the world endures, but which, like everything else in the world, is none the less astonishing, with each appearance, on that account. But with Debussy the spectacle is particularly amusing, because he was such a subtle mind, such an adroit fencer. He did not shout his opponents down, as Wagner did, with tongue, pen and music paper. What one might call the physical impact of conflict was not only very distasteful, but wholly unnecessary to him. With the calmness of complete conviction and immeasurable mental superiority he simply locked himself into his tower of ivory and let the Philistines rage as they pleased without. No doubt he was not indifferent to all opinion. No human being is.

But it is probable that he approached as near to genuine indifference and delicate, high-bred scorn of those who had everything in the world but weapons to meet him and fight him on his own ground when he composed. Therefore he was at times a snob in his music, and an enormous number of musical snobs in all corners of the world gathered about his standard. That was the sad limitation of the man. But that limitation, characteristic not of the early Debussy, of "The Blessed Demoiselle." "Pelleas et Melisande," a majority of the songs and piano pieces, the nocturnes for orchestra, the quartet, but rather of the man of prosperous later years, is small indeed beside the wonder and the truth of his representative art that looked on a new world with the eyes of a little child—eyes full of wisdom which heaven has not always bestowed on the most ancient of sages.

American May 7

Editor the AMERICAN:

On the printed program for the "Pops" tonight, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" is given precedence over "The Star Spangled Banner." Why cannot German and Austrian music be eliminated from the "Pops"?

Is this Boston or Berlin?

BAY STATE CITIZEN.

THE "POPS" FOREVER

Calmly and Usefully Filling Their Old Place in a New World, Our Excellent Summer Concerts Begin a Thirty-Third Season—Proved and Pleasurable Practices at Players' Desks and Auditors' Tables—A Likable Leader

MASSENET, Mascagni, and George M. Cohan all earned encores last evening at Symphony Hall, Lieutenant Sousa rubbed elbows with Tschaikowsky, the Little Lead Soldiers of M. Pierné made their accustomed march, the waiters were delightfully busy in assuaging an uncommon opening-night thirst, and the anxieties of symphonic politics floated away in clouds of tobacco smoke. In brief, the unmatched and indispensable "Pops"—now more indispensable than ever—are with us again.

They are the familiar "Pops"—familiar in pattern and procedure, in the assembling of an ample band, ably led and indubitably content to lend their skill to "Over There" as well as to "Mignon" and the Hungarian Rhapsodies, and familiar, too, in all the amenities and privileges that make these summer concerts one of the chief claims of this town to metropolitan life. They are, too, somewhat unfamiliar Pops—just as everything under the sun has somehow changed—in a perceptible reaction to the moods of the day. The sprinkling of uniforms is the outward sign, and even more evident is the new reaction to war-meanings as the music happens to express them. Distributed through the interstices of the opening night's programme were the national airs of Britain, Italy, France and America—the most notably striking item in the result being the perfectly spontaneous demand for the repetition of "La Marseillaise."

The conductor is Agide Jacchia, already known and liked for his pleasantly suave and enthusiastic work with the Pops of last season. The orchestra is of the accustomed and expected size and distribution, and of an excellence that has but one drawback. The good folk of the balconies, with avid thirst for that excellent music, and with scant opportunity for slaking different thirsts—conversational and otherwise—are a little imposing of their point of view on the table-strewed floor. Now we are more than willing to maintain absolute silence during M. Massenet's "Meditation"; even the inevitable Intermezzo demands it, and fragile things like the Mignon Entr' acte deserve it; but we maintain that during Mr. Herbert's "Selections" and Herr Waldteufel's waltzes the ancient perquisites and privileges and usages of the Pops justify us in a few quiet personalities without the need of hard looks from our neighbors.

The announcements for a week do not very amply justify the hope that the comparatively unhackneyed is to loom large in Mr. Jacchia's programmes. The Index Expurgatorious that someone once intelligently suggested for "Zampa," "Quartet for Rigoletto," and others of that ilk is still an event of a doubtful future. However, it is idle to complain on this score so long as "Träumerei" is assured of encores; and it is still early in the season. And Mr. Jacchia promises the "Midsummer Night's Dream" Scherzo for Thursday, and the "Largo" from the New World Symphony for Friday. In passing, let it be noted that no one arose in his place and protested against the presence of certain Teutonic names on Mr. Jacchia's programmes.

Meantime, let us be quietly thankful that the universal upheaval so far leaves undisturbed the early summer routine of Symphony Hall. The abolition of the Boston Pops would be no minor horror of war ;and, of course, never in the preceding thirty-two seasons has there been so ample scope for its informal ministrations as now, when "days of peace and slumberous calm are fled."

F. I.

Herald May 7

POP CONCERT SEASON OPENS

Agide Jacchia Again Leads Orchestra in Summer Programs

HAPPY SELECTIONS DELIGHT AUDIENCE

The first Pop concert of the season took place last evening at Symphony Hall. There was a large audience, dotted here and there with uniforms, and the applause was constant and hearty.

Last season Agide Jacchia, an experienced conductor of opera, made these concerts attractive by his spirited conducting, skill in program making and by his ingratiating personality. Re-engaged for this year, he was warmly welcomed last evening. A feature of the first concert was the performance of the national airs of the four principal allied nations: "God Save the King," the "Marcia Reale," "La Marseillaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Other numbers on the program included Sousa's "Solid Men to the Front"; overture from Thomas's "Mignon"; Vollstedt's waltz, "Jolly Fellows"; Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody; Herbert's, "Her Regiment"; prelude to the first act of Bizet's "Carmen" and other pieces.

The orchestra responded readily to the wishes of a conductor blessed not merely with a knowledge of routine, but an emotional nature. Seldom is there an opportunity to hear music of a light character played by musicians of the first rank. An admirable arrangement of leading themes and melodies from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" was a feature of the evening, while Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody was given with extraordinary brilliance. Extra numbers [illegible]

The program this evening will be as follows:

March, "Queen of Sheba" ..... Gounod
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" ..... Herold
Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube." Strauss
Fantasia, "Madama Butterfly" ..... Puccini
Suite, "Peer Gynt" ..... Grieg
(a) Morning Mood. (b) Anitra's Dance. (c) In the Hall of the Mountain King.
"Ave Maria." Solo Violin, Harp and Organ Shubert-Wilhelmj
Valse des Fleurs ..... Tschaikowsky
Overture, "Orpheus" ..... Offenbach
"THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER."
Selection, "Chu Chin Chow" ..... Norton
Quartet from "Rigoletto" ..... Verdi
"Whispering of the Flowers" ..... Blon
March, "The Man Behind the Gun." Lt. Sousa

Post May 6 — 1918

REPORT ELLIS HAS RESIGNED

Brennan Said to Be Next Symphony Manager

The executive personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was reported last night, is to undergo another important change. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra since its organization by Major Higginson, about 38 years ago, has resigned, according to unofficial reports in high musical circles. He is to be succeeded, it is said, by William H. Brennan, business manager of the orchestra for six years.

Mr. Brennan declined to make any statement last night, stating that he preferred the information to come rather from Mr. Ellis, who is now in New York city.

Globe May 7 1918

"POP" CONCERTS OPEN BRILLIANTLY

Jacchia Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiasm

Allied Flags and Patriotic Music Adds Wartime Flavor

Agide Jacchia, the galvanic Italian conductor, found himself well remembered from last season and warmly welcomed by the big audience for this, as he came on last night at Symphony Hall for the first of another series of "Pop" concerts. Applause continued enthusiastically, then Mr Jacchia turned to conduct the hymn which the English ironically enough once borrowed from the Germans and we, to fit our words to "America," later borrowed from them. On the program it stood as "God Save the King."

Then followed the newest Sousa march—its composer now to be called Lieut Sousa—an inspiring piece, especially in the second strain of the first part, with a songful "trio" leading to a shell-raking barrage by light and heavy artillery of brasses and drums. The military note was emphasized further by the flags of the United States and her Allies displayed over the organ, and the place on the program of Italy's Royal March, the "Marseillaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr Jacchia infused the characteristic "pep" into his conducting of spirited music, particularly that from the operas, as the brilliant conclusion he gave to the "Mignon" overture, the equally brilliant prelude to "Carmen" and the torrid strains of "Pagliacci."

The old second rhapsody of Liszt received a lively waking up. Mr Jacchia swept his men with him, finishing in a frenzy of Hungarian abandon. Extra numbers were added freely. One of the most insistant demands for a repetition folowed the "Thais" mediation, played by Jacques Hoffmann of the first chair, who was obliged to do the last part again.

Tonight the program will include "The Beautiful Blue Danube," a musical river which flows with due neutrality through all civilized lands, a pot-pourri from "Mme Butterfly," the "Peer Gynt" suite, Schubert's "Ave Marie" for solo violin, harp and organ, a selection from "Chu Chin Chow" and the quartet from "Rigolette." Thursday, May 9, will be the night of the Eastern Music Supervisors' conference.

Traveller May 7 - 1918

Pretzel-less Pops Hit Popular Chord

Traveler May 7

Merry Crowd Throngs Symphony Hall for First Concert

By CARL WILMORE

Boston Common, Boston Baked Beans and the Pops; but the greatest of these is the Pops.

Well, you'd almost have thought so if you'd been at Symphony Hall last night. "The Thirty-third Season," said the program—and it's true; and that is why the Pops, like the Common and Beans, are eternal, Bostonian and immutable.

Where else can you find 75 musicians to beat them? Where else can you find such gatherings, night after night, of smart people, and, what is better, brilliant and clever people? Where can you get good entertainment for so little?

How familiar it looked last night—that big electric sign "Pops" outside Symphony Hall! And then, as the Traveler man went in, to see Mr. Lincoln, with his Wild West Jesse James moustachios, head waitering again, with his cheerful smile and his noiseless rubber-soled-and-heeled shoes!

And there were Dan, and Joseph, and Adolph, and Joe, and Fred—for years they have wound their way through the ticklish tables, with claret lemonade and harlequin ice cream.

Music Students Usher

This year there are some new ushers—and good ones, at last. They no longer bang the doors, slam the chairs, push over the tables. The Traveler man caught one listening intently to Liszt's Hungarian rhapsody (No. 2, you know), and right away it dawned on me: music students. A few patrons, seat checks in hand, were waiting to be shown to their tables; but what are patrons, tables checks, Symphony Hall, jobs, or anything else while you hear that Lassan or that Friska? So the patrons waited till the usher-boy came out of it. Then he calmly directed them to table D.

Up in front of the great golden organ last night were stacked the colors of our allies; from the ceiling hung the Stars and Stripes. Early—at 7 o'clock—the two balconies were filled, filled with people who had paid to hear the music, not to eat, or drink, or talk. They frequently looked down upon the gay floor, with envy, no doubt. Or was it contempt for the unappreciative crowd?

Change in 25-Cent Seats

There was a change this year. You know, they used to run that railing so that there was a margin all around the enclosure for the unreserved seats and tables. Inside would sit those who had paid more for their seats, and had had them reserved; while three inches beyond, with nothing but this railing between, sat those who had paid only 25 cents, and they always gave the laugh to the $1 bunch. Their seats were just as good, and only a quarter.

Well this year the rail doesn't run around in a rectangle. It just cuts off about a quarter of the floor, at the rear. In front of it you pay $1 (and war tax, and you have to fuss around with checks, ushers and seats, and you've got to sit where the check says and nowhere else. Back of the rail you pay only 25 cents (and 3 cents of tax), and you can sit anywhere you want to and grab anyone's seat if it looks good to you, and if you can get away with a hat, or a cane, so much the better.

Jacchia Gets Big Hand

Mr. Mudgett, the manager, walked around greeting old friends; Mr. Walter, the press agent, told everybody who would listen how splendid Mr. Jacchia, the conductor, is, how good the ale is and how the seat sale is and so on. When Mr. Jacchia—you might as well learn how to say it, for he's some conductor, call it "Ya-kee-a," accenting the second syllable a bit—appeared, he got a big hand. He was there last year, remember.

"God Save the Queen," started the program; everybody stood up; it was inspiring. Then they played the overture to "Mignon"—and you who have heard this same Pops orchestra play it in barrel-organ style, should have heard it last night under Mr. Jacchia. These Italians may lack precision, severity, calmness; but, goodness, how they can make you feel the music! It wakes you up, you jump, and you yell "It's great!" and what more do you want of music?

Trot About Foyer

Then, while the bottles of ale, beer and wine popped, while they chewed cheese sandwiches and ate ice cream, the orchestra played opera, waltzes, musical comedy, stirring marches and quaint numbers like "The Little Lead Soldiers" and Tschaikowski's marche miniature. What if the waltzes lacked a little of style? What if they forgot their dotted notes in their Liszt? What if they made "Pagliacci" sound a little empty? It's good, all round, and critics had better stay away and not spoil the fun.

There are always two intermissions; during the first, only the "impossible" walk about; but in the second everybody takes a chance on hat or overcoat (if it isn't checked) and trots around the foyer. Here you can see real Boston, in a way; not the Boston of Saturday night, at the Symphony concert, but another Boston.

You see artists, actors, musicians; you see men about town; you see good folks from Acton or from Marshfield, taking a night off; you see the players come out from the back and chat with old friends; you see politicians and statesmen; you see—to tell the truth, and be frank—occasional ladies and gentlemen just on the borderland of Bohemia; well, that makes the Pops the Pops; it wouldn't be the Pops if it were straight-laced and stiff. And—this year—uniforms everywhere.

Taboo Pretzels

One thing is gone. Yes, war is damnable. The pretzels are gone. They have little dinky crackers-and-cheesy things, but no pretzels. Everybody inquired after the pretzels. Why should the Kaiser deprive us of our pretzels, people asked? Let us have pretzels for spite, one man near the Traveler man asserted.

"Pretzels for spite"—bring on the pretzels.

Post May 7 - 1918

SEASON OF POPS OPENED

Orchestra at Zenith of Career Plays Light Music

The Pop concert season of 1918 opened last night in Symphony Hall. The audience was unusually large for this time in the season, partly, perhaps, because of an unusually warm evening for this time of year, and attentive while the music was being played, enthusiastic and requestful of many encores when it was over.

JACCHIA IN HIGH FAVOR

Signs of the times were not lacking in the sight of the many uniforms in the audience, as also in the performance, not only of the national anthem of America, but in the performance of the "Marseillaise" and "God Save the King"—which, happily enough as the two nations are now situated, is the same air as that to which Americans sing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee."

These songs were listened to by an audience which stood, and sang, in more than one case with the orchestra, and showed in a thousand ways how much more than a mere entertainment such performances meant to them.

Agide Jacchia conducted, and again met with great favor. Fortunate in his long experience of the opera, Mr. Jacchia had equal authority over the men and elasticity and "go" in his beat. The programme commenced, appropriately enough, with an unfamiliar march by Lieutenant John Philip Sousa, "Solid Men to the Front." It continued with the overture to "Mignon," Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" music, the prelude to act I. of Bizet's "Carmen," one of the most scintillating preludes in existence; Massenet's "Meditation" from "Thais," the violin solo played by Jacques Hoffmann, a piece stormily redemanded; Tschaikowsky's "Marche Miniature" from the "Nut Cracker Suite"; Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody; selections from Victor Herbert's comic opera, "Her Regiment"; the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana"; Waldteufel's waltz, "La Barcarolle," and Meacham's "American Patrol."

An unusually attractive programme is billed for tonight.

Advertiser May 7

POPS LAUNCHED IN EXCELLENT STYLE

Weather, Audience, Conductor, Band and Program All Suitable to Occasion

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The clock's an hour ahead, but daylight stops,
And as night falls we gladly wend our way
To Hear the opening concert of the Pops.

Now fade the Music Puzzles from our sight,
And Strauss, with Schoenberg, in oblivion sinks.
Sousa and Herbert now impart delight,
And Music soft mingles with softer drinks.

The boast of Gericke, the pride of Paur,
And all that Fiedler, air that Muck e'er gave,
Await alike th' inevitable hour.
When Boston turns to Pops from Music grave.

From Tannhaeuser to Annhaeuser we glide.
From Richard Strauss we go to him named John,
And for the season we have laid aside,
Even the mighty Beethoven of Bonn.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene.
The lists of our Symphonic programs bear.
But now the season's done, then shift the scene,
And let's enjoy a healthy change of Air.

In spite of the above Conductor Agide Jacchia does not by any means intend to feed us on superficial or trashy music. The program of last night presented Ambroise Thomas, Leoncavallo, Bizet, Massenet, Tschaikowsky, Liszt, Mascagni and scarcely a name that might not have appeared in the regular concerts of the season.

The most ambitious work of the evening was Liszt's familiar second Hungarian Rhapsody, which was given as spicily as the subject demanded. The most refined number was the Meditation from Massenet's "Thais" with the artistic Mr. Jaques Hoffmann as solo violinst. Thomas' "Mignon" overture, with its contrast between Mignon's earnest air and Filena's showy Polonaise was one of the very enjoyable numbers, while the piquant Marche Miniature from Tschaikowsky's "Nut-cracker Suite" was the right thing in the right place.

There was also a little rhythmic music for those who like to wag their heads or tap their feet to obvious pulsations, and there was some gymnastic exercise for the audience in rising to its feet to various national airs of the Allies, for Italy, France, England and America were all represented by their national hymns or marches.

We doubt wehther many were familiar with Gabetti's Marcia Reale which represented Italia. Nevertheless all stood up in its honor and applauded it most cordially. There were many encores and recalls through the evening.

Altogether the Pops were launched in excellent style last night; the weather was just right, the audience was in a receptive mood, the conductor was thorough, the band was our symphony men, and the program was well chosen.

Transcript May 7-1918

MUSIC AND PLAYS

"SOLOISTS" AT THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Opportunity for a More Catholic and Liberal Policy—Incidents on Bostonian Stages—"Belinda," Miss Barrymore and a New Playwright—Items from Concert Halls and Theatres

THE "assisting artists" are, indeed, only an accessory to the Symphony Orchestra and the Symphony Concerts, but in the general expectation of liberalized policies at Symphony Hall next autumn, an appreciable public already includes the choice of "soloists." In recent years, the lists have disappointed oftener in those overlooked than in those engaged. It was all very well to hear the "old stand-bys," like Mr. Paderewski, Mr. Kreisler or Mr. Bauer; to enjoy the ripened abilities of Mr. McCormack or Mr. Gabrilowitsch; to hear the young talents of Miss Garrison or Miss Novaes. On the other hand, Mr. Hofmann and Mr. Thibaud are no less established virtuosi of the piano and the violin, yet never once, of late, have they been invited to "assist" the band. Mr. Heifetz soon proved himself as remarkable a violinist in a concerto with orchestra as he is in the miscellaneous pieces of a recital; the curiosity of the public over him ran high; before the end of the season he had been heard in nearly every series of symphony concerts throughout the country, save only those in Symphony Hall. Mr. Powell and Mr. Levitzki have risen fast and by just desert among the younger pianists, yet they come not to the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while Miss Novaes waited through two years of established note for an invitation. Granted that the Symphony Concerts should summon only proved and worthy abilities; but in the season just ended there were Miss Nash and Miss Seydel.

The passing of the old régime ought to end and probably will end the futile and foolish quarrel that has denied Mr. Hofmann, in the prime of his powers as one of the most illustrious pianists of our time, to the public of the Symphony Concerts. By the same token, Mr. Thibaud, violinist of many distinctions, will no longer be called merely to the outlying stage of Sanders Theatre, but will play with the orchestra at home. Still more, however, to be desired is that catholic and discerning eye in conductor and management that will not be blind to the best of the young talents and curiously fasten upon others that in the event have proved mediocre. Most desirable of all, however, will be such sense of the just wish of the public and such regard for it as would have brought Mr. Heifetz on a Friday and a Saturday to Symphony Hall, last winter, even at the increase of a few hundred dollars in the expenditures of the year. The day has come when, within reason, the Symphony Concerts must be deferential to the public frequenting them and not merely let down just favors upon it. Next season the influence of this new day may well affect the choice of "assisting artists."

Globe May 7 - 1918

MAJ HIGGINSON SAYS GOODBY

Bids Farewell to Orchestra He Has Built

Addresses Players and Audience at Final Concert—Mayor Responds

Maj Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last night gave that organization his farewell message before an audience that filled Symphony Hall to the doors. His address came at the conclusion of a concert such as only the Boston Symphony players can give—artistic and ably executed. But while the music was appreciated by the audience, they waited expectantly and rather tensely for the farewell they knew was to come. A feeling of sorrow and regret seemed to permeate the entire building.

Conductor Ernst Schmidt led his musicians through the wonderful overture to the opera "Benvenuto Cellini." The number ended with a crash. A pause followed the applause, and suddenly people at the rear got to their feet.

Continued on the Second Page.

Those in front saw Maj Higginson coming slowly down the center aisle and the whole audience stood while the building rang with applause. Maj Higginson mounted the platform and stood there silently until the applause subsided. Then he spoke, clearly, distinctly and slowly, but with obvious effort.

"My friends, may I say a few words to you?" He paused a second and then continued:

continued above

Continued from Below Globe May 7

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra was set up from the conviction in my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras. In Europe I had seen the pleasure and comfort of such orchestras, and it seemed my duty and was my aim to give our country the best music possible.

"To achieve this object it was necessary to give the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success, and then to require of him and of his men a high and ever higher standard. To win that standard nothing has been spared and the aim never forgotten, and in this season our orchestra has reached our high water mark.

"The concerts were offered to the whole public, but my chief wish and hope was to meet the needs and satisfy the longings for the beautiful art of the many people leading quiet or busy lives and having little enjoyment; and furthermore to help in the education of the students of music.

Vision of Youth Justified

"To me the concerts have been a great joy, not only because of the lovely music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and this year it is they who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future. To these unknown friends and to all of our audiences far and wide I offer my heartiest thanks.

"Thus the faith and the vision of my youth have been justified.

"I had hoped to have carried on the concerts during my lifetime, but this war has brought us many troubles and among them the problems of the orchestra during this season, which have exhausted my strength and nerves. Therefore, my part in our orchestra ceases tonight, except for the popular concerts of this year.

"The conductors, the members of our orchestra and the office management have done their work excellently from first to last and have deserved the warmest thanks and praise."

Then Maj Higginson stopped. He faced the audience for a moment in silence and suddenly swung on his heel and mounted the conductor's stand, facing the orchestra.

"Gentlemen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra," he said, "I am glad to see you again. For many years we—you and I—have been good comrades—an honor and a great pleasure for me. In these years we have worked hand and glove together and have kept true to our rule, laid down at the outstart, of intelligent study under one conductor at a time—and we have reaped the reward of success sure to follow.

"We have played in many cities of the United States and have won great applause; and, better still, have deserved it. Each year has marked an advance in the qualitf of our music, and this year has seen our high point.

"I like to think myself a member of our orchestra and have done my best to help you, and on your side you have served with an intelligence and devotion not to be forgotten by the audiences or by me. I congratulate you and thank you for our success fairly won.

"My time for work is over. It is past, and now a number of excellent men and women have taken my place. Of you I ask for them the same intelligence and devotion as in years gone by.

"My best wishes go out to you all; every one of you."

Mayor Speaks for Public

As Maj Higginson concluded his farewell to his players a roar of applause went up and the musicians led in it. The major faced the audience again. Some thought the ordeal was harder than he had expected, for he was visibly affected. He continued:

"Our orchestra has always been heartily supported by you and by the public throughout the country, else it could not have lived. It must live in all its strength and beauty, and now it will be carried on by some friends who have taken it up, and for them I ask the same support which you have given me through all these years. Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, for your kindness."

The audience had stood throughout the farewell. They had witnessed the founder of a great musical organization performing the hardest task that could have fallen to him, that of severing his connection with one of the labors of his lifetime and saying farewell to his effort in public. They applauded and applauded again, and only stopped when Mayor Andrew J. Peters mounted the platform and grasped Maj Higginson by the hand.

The Mayor spoke feelingly of all the orchestra has meant to the country and of the wonderful results Maj Higginson has obtained.

"There should be said to Maj Higginson some things from the people he has served for 40 years," he said. "As Mayor of Boston and as one who has enjoyed the artistic performances of this great musical body, I shall try to say them now.

"Maj Higginson said on the occasion of his 80th birthday that he made this orchestra for the people, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra represents one of the contrbiutions of his citizenship.

"Sir, you have rendered much to your country in many ways, and tonight I have the privilege of thanking you in behalf of the people of this city and of hundreds of thousands in other parts of the country who have shared in the benefits and pleasures of this orchestra.

"We want, sir, to deeply and humbly thank you for years of unselfish and untiring devotion."

The two men shook hands again amid a thunder of applause. Then Maj Higginson spoke again:

"Mr Mayor, ladies and gentlemen and members of the orchestra, I thank you all and you don't know how sorry I am to say goodby."

Abruptly he turned and left the platform, followed by the Mayor. The members of the orchestra gathered up their instruments and left the stage, and, silently and sadly, the audience filed out into the night.

Transcript May 7 — 1918

125

New Horizons for the Symphony Orchestra

Pressing and Perplexing Problems of Personnel and Policy Awaiting the Decision of the Trustees in a Near Future

NINE citizens of Boston have seldom done their city, the arts and the public pleasure better service than the corporate body that, for the time, has saved the Symphony Orchestra from imminent dispersal. Disbandment threatened, in part because of tactless blunders of management; in part because of the inability of "the founder and sustainer," at eighty-four and in broken health, to cope with the new conditions of a new time. Those blunders, beginning in flat resistance to the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" as preface to each concert—now become routine with every orchestra in the country—proceeding with the serio-comic assertion of Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship, whereas, until he came to Boston, he had lived and worked his whole life as a German subject, and culminating in an obvious reluctance to remove his name from programmes and posters after he had been interned, had alienated a public valuable to the orchestra and irritated a public hardly aware before of the existence of the band. In the eyes of the one public, policies at Symphony Hall seemed to exalt the fortunes of Dr. Muck over those of the orchestra; in the eyes of the other, insistence upon those policies or reluctant recession from them was continuing affront to the general temper and impulses of war time.

Bitter bickerings and increasing public disaffection inevitably ensued; in a few months it was clear that the Symphony Concerts could not continue under the dictatorship, however intelligent and benevolent, that had hitherto directed them. As a private undertaking, the Symphony Orchestra had ministered for thirty-seven years to the pleasure of countless audiences. Now circumstances, beyond any control, had made it a public institution amenable to public opinion. The long-standing aloofness of the old proprietorship, however admirable in devotion and result, was manifestly shattered. The hour for a new régime was as obviously striking; and the old was wise when it resigned itself to new conditions, toward which it would always have been alien and resentful, and transferred the orchestra to the present trustees. No more undeserved fate, none more painful to it and the public that had long enjoyed it, could have befallen than disbandment at the hands of those who had upbuilt it into the foremost orchestra of Europe and America, who had made it far and wide the chief artistic glory of Boston, who for thirty years had swelled with it the stream of pleasure and profit from music.

A New Regime Well Received

Not only will the Symphony Orchestra continue, but a new day seems dawning upon it. No one may reasonably question the individual and collective disinterestedness of the new trustees. Not one of them has a single axe to grind, except the welfare and the permanence of the band. As little may the representative quality of the board be questioned, since it includes diversified interests in financial resource, in music and the performance of music, in public spirit and communal obligation. A single end—the maintenance of the Symphony Orchestra at its present standards or at as near an approximation to them as is possible in war time—unites these abilities and devotions. Being human and being new to an intricate understanding, the trustees will doubtless make mistakes and, almost as certainly, correct them. In the phrase of the theorists of the new education, they will learn by doing. At the start and with reason they enjoy the confidence, the encouragement of the particular public of the Symphony Concerts and of the general public to which the Symphony Orchestra is a glorified, if somewhat hazy, "Boston institution." In a whole week of comment, none has cavilled at them except the malicious old men of club arm-chairs whose custom it is to deride every new, disinterested and wholehearted undertaking, and those who already perceive that they cannot get their wilful way in the policies of the new board.

In a sense, the fairest promise of the new régime lies in the fact that a public necessity brought it into being; that it will depend upon public support; that it is aware of public opinion; that it bids fair to be, within reason, amenable to it. The chief source and cause of the errors and mischances of the retiring management was isolation from public sentiment and indifference to it, until the public voice fairly shouted in its ears. It honestly believed that its power and the artistic prestige of the orchestra could maintain through a war against Germany a German conductor at the post he had adorned; that it need not in new conditions alter a jot or tittle of the policies and the routine of thirty-seven years. In the last analysis, like many in the concert-going generation of which it is a part, it held music and the performance of music as something fundamentally and inevitably German. These faiths and practices, however sincere, however fruitful of outcome in their day, have now become futilities. The new trustees, like the rest of us, must have learned by the experiences of the

That public opinion falls roughly into two categories. In one, it proceeds from those who have never frequented the Symphony Concerts, who never will frequent them, who would be mightily bored if they did, who never gave them a thought until war-time agitations began. That opinion will pursue the conductor, the management, the personnel, the policies of the orchestra, until it is content that nothing therein offends its war-time convictions and exactions. Once these are "placated," as the politicians say, the Symphony Concerts will pass out of its ken and interest and it will heed them scarcely more than it did before the United States became a "co-belligerent" against Germany. In the other category lies the opinion of those frequenters, sustainers, enjoyers, of the Symphony Concerts and of the art of music in general, who in honest resolution refuse to attend them under a German or an Austrian conductor or with German or Austrian subjects conspicuous in the seats of the orchestra. It is not necessary to consider the validity in the abstract of any of these convictions. In the concrete, they exist; they have menaced the present as they threaten the future of the orchestra. The wisdom of expediency, which is not to be despised, counsels the trustees to deal with them accordingly.

Problems of Personnel

There is no reason to doubt that the new board is as enlightened in these matters as any bystanders. Presumably it sees no less clearly than they that the war-time controversies of the last six months must be definitively stilled and ended; that along no other way does salvation for the orchestra lie. There is, then, every reason to believe that it will choose a conductor whose past and present sympathies and allegiances in the war are beyond the lightest question. As surely, it will risk no leader, whatever his current professions, whose talk and letters of old can be raked like dead embers for fresh fires of controversy. On that score the future seems clear and sure. Much more obscure and difficult is the problem of the German and Austrian subjects who sit in the orchestra, who in many instances serve it well, who in some cases would be difficult to replace by men of equal ability. Moreover, it is quite true that not a few among them are more tactful and even anti-German in attitude toward the war than certain of their naturalized fellows. As some say, all but nine of these "aliens" have taken out "first papers" and are so on the way to citizenship of the United States. As others aver, "flirst papers" are no saving grace in these days, and every man should be dismissed who is not a French or an American citizen or a subject of one or another sovereign at war with Germany or neutral therein. It is easy to appreciate the point of view that sees in the discharge of many of these men a needless dismissal of able tactful, faithful musicians, a sacrifice that might well be avoided in the quality and the unity of the orchestra. On the other hand, so long as German and Austrian subjects sit in it, there will be war-time outcry against it and them. As not a few believe, these are the days when "peace at any price" is a necessity to the future financial and artistic, of the Symphony Orchestra, however hard the gaining of it may bear upon any individual member.

In this matter, the trustees must decide between the policy of prudence and the policy of peril. If they follow the former, they and the new conductor will be face to face with the difficult finding of new men to fill the vacancies. Hitherto, the Symphony Orchestra has been chiefly recruited from France, Belgium, Germany, Austria and, occasionally, Britain. By war-time conditions these "sources of supply" are practically closed. In Paris, London, Milan; in Amsterdam, Stockholm, Copenhagen—for neutral capitals—a fit and willing man might be picked up here and there; but only by diligent and lucky searching. Youth has gone to the field, irrespective of position or talent; age is not altogether desirable in an orchestra already middle-aged. Virtually, the field of choice for new men is these United States. If needed, recruits of sufficient performance and promise for the string choir should not be difficult to gather; for wind and brass, they will lie not so ready to hand; yet they may be discoverable. In a sense, new conductors of requisite ability are more plentiful than, say, equally able horn-players. Obviously also, an appreciable change in the personnel of the orchestra—for the last four years virtually intact—would lay a new task upon the incoming conductor, since he must fuse the recruits into the several choirs. Yet many such a leader might prefer an instrument, in a measure of his own fashioning, to one received, however perfect, from another hand.

Granted the discoveries, the discovered are likely to be almost invariably "Union Men"; while the Symphony Orchestra, through all its thirty-seven years, has been rigidly "non-union." It was kept such because the old régime instinctively and frankly disliked "unions"; because it sought its forces primarily from Europe; because it believed that a "non-union" orchestra was bound to be superior in accomplishment to a "unionized" band. To maintain the Symphony Orchestra as such, it cheerfully made burdensome contracts, incurred what would otherwise have been superfluous expenditures. Now among enlightened men in early middle age—and the new trustees are happily such—mere blind dislike of "unions" is a vanishing or a vanished prejudice. The "unions" are facts, here existent, here to stay; to be dered accordingly. Europe, as a source of orchestral supply, is shut for the present, perhaps for several years to come. It is absurd to say, in the face of a superlative operatic orchestra developed and maintained by the Metropolitan Opera House, that a "unionized" band in which the conductor and the management pick men carefully, insist upon high standards and proportionate industry, maintain discipline, yet deal fairly, may not be an orchestra of the first rank. Financial prudence will probably be a factor in the policies of the new régime. Worse fates might befall the new Symphony Orchestra than to be quietly and fairly "unionized."

"Trips," Purse and Prestige

Again, should the orchestra be cleared of German and Austrian subjects, it would have access to sundry cities from which the licensing authorities, under motives which need not be closely scrutinized, have "barred" it this season, which it was counted provocative to visit. From the projected schedule for 1917-1918 twenty-eight such concerts, if recollection does not slip, were so eliminated with no small loss to the orchestral treasury. Six concerts in Baltimore, five in Washington, six in a mid-winter western journey, sundry others in Providence, Springfield, Hartford, were foregone. Now it is difficult for the locally minded Bostonian taking his seat regularly in Symphony Hall and mindful of no other place, to realize the importance of these "trips" and "out-of-town" concerts to both the prestige and the purse of the orchestra.

Continued on Following Page

The annual schedule has usually listed a hundred or a hundred and ten concerts. Fifty of these befell in Boston; the other fifty or sixty elsewhere. In almost every other city, they filled the largest possible auditorium at the highest possible prices. The financial return from them was the most considerable item in the income of the orchestra. They contributed, moreover, materially to its prestige. Outside the Metropolitan Opera House—a different métier—no orchestra that New York heard compared with the "Boston Symphony"; none such, likewise, was known to Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, the Western cities of annual or biennial pilgrimage. The New England public was admiring and loyal. Less by virtue of its concerts in Boston than by its concerts elsewhere the Symphony Orchestra has become the national institution and pride that even the controversies of the last six months have proved it to be. These "outside publics," moreover, judge it for what it is and what it accomplishes. With them in quite as high degree as with audiences in Boston, the new conductor must prove his mettle, maintain established and expected standards of programmes and performance. The more the necessity, then, that he be a leader of personality, power, prestige.

A practical wisdom thus seems to demand that the new trustees shall reëstablish the orchestra in the full circle of these "out-of-town" concerts; that it shall regain and retain these "outside" publics, essential equally to its purse and its fame. The way to both results is the removal of every ground for war-time controversy, however prejudiced or irritating; the choice of a conductor and of recruits that will maintain the best standards of the past; the employment of an expert and disinterested management. It is an open secret that there will be changes in the old management; they need not, they should not, involve the loss of some of the abilities, experience and devotion now concerned in it. The new Symphony Orchestra no less than the old, deserves such service.

Opportunities

At home in Boston, furthermore, the new régime is not without other and exacting problems. The audience at the Symphony Concerts of Friday afternoons seems a constant quantity, usually filling the hall to the last place. In contrast the audience of Saturday evenings, in parquet and balconies alike, tends to diminish. At best, it is uneven according to the vogue of the "soloist" or the note of some piece on the programme; at most, it seldom fills the hall. It is more and more imperative to find and to encourage newcomers to these evening concerts. Perhaps they exist potentially in that public which has altered the aspect of operatic audiences in recent years in Boston or which flocks to the Sunday Concerts of celebrities of various degrees. Once persuade and cultivate it to the pleasures of symphonic music and a symphony orchestra of the first quality and it might gradually swell these audiences of Saturday. Perhaps, again, the newcomers lurk among those who know and even crave such pleasures, but may not afford in a lump the cost of a subscription to twenty-four concerts and but seldom the relatively high price of places for a single evening. Why not, by way of experiment, give this potential public an opportunity to subscribe to six, eight, twelve of the concerts, and tempt it with an elastic tariff for single Saturdays? The new management in a changing day may well take thought of such an innovation.

Again in the season now ended and in the face of all the vicissitudes of conductor and orchestra, the Boston Symphony Chorus has come into being. It has raised the art and the pleasure of choral singing to a pitch that this town has not known in years. It has provided means and opportunity for signal performances of choral symphonies, of choral music in which the choir, rather than the orchestra, is the preponderant element. It has rounded out, so to say, the forces available to Symphony Hall; already it has proved itself worthy complement of the Symphony Orchestra, new stream from it of public pleasure and profit. Nearly all the conductors from whom the new leader will be chosen, have trained and swayed choruses as well as orchestras. Not one among them but would rejoice in the service of such a choir as last winter developed. There is no reason ...and symphony." There is the new ... gious ecstasy of the race wh...

THE MUSICAL LEADER

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1918

Transcript May 6

MR. HIGGINSON'S ATTITUDE. Extremely interesting would it be to know Mr. Higginson's real attitude in regard to the internment of Dr. Muck. That the founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra should at this crucial time relinquish management of the famous organization, which has been the boast of the "Hub" all these years, is most extraordinary, and makes it appear almost as if he resented the action taken by the Government of the United States and was in complete sympathy with the German-Swiss citizen, Dr. Karl Muck. If Mr. Higginson knew good and sufficient reasons why Dr. Muck should not be interned, it was his (Higginson's) duty to have made the position clear and so relieved the situation. As the New York "Tribune" says: "It is well to know where we stand in regard to foreign conductors." The same paper, in an able editorial demanding of all REAL LOYALTY, says:

The internment of Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald has intensified the public's desire to know just where our various conductors stand on the subject of the war. Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald are alien enemies, and they never made any concealment of their sympathies. But there are other well known musicians whose positions are still a little nebulous, even though technically they may not be classed as enemies. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is about to choose another leader, and if New York may be permitted to advise the doings of our New England Athens—and, after all, the Boston Orchestra is our nation's brightest musical gem and therefore to be as jealously guarded by New York as it is by its more fortunate sister city—it is to be hoped that it will choose a leader whose loyalty to the cause of civilization both is and always has been unquestioned. Such a leader certainly can be found. Indeed, such a leader must be found. For a conductor to wave a baton in Boston, even if it is for "The Star Spangled Banner," while his heart turns fondly to Munich or Berlin, is not what we call loyalty to civilization. America today has no place for patriotic camouflage and Boloism, musical or otherwise.

REBUILDING THE BOSTON SYMPHONY. A great institution came near to collapse and it is but another manifestation of "kultur." The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for years the pride of all America, is sacrificed on the altar of the Hun. The day may come, however, when it will be greater and better and more honest, a glorification to art and not to any one man, be he patron or conductor. The Boston Symphony can be reconstructed and its ranks filled by people in this country and of this country. Although men have serious work ahead of them as soldiers, workmen or farmers, there will always be a class for the dissemination of art in a world which, without it, would be a very sorry place. The orchestra can be rebuilt (not so the old cathedrals of Rheims and Louvain), and according to W. J. Henderson, of the New York "Sun," will probably be heard with satisfaction. Here is what the "Sun" critic writes:

May 9

Major Henry L. Higginson, it appears, could not survive the loss of Dr. Karl Muck. Not long ago he threatened to disband the Boston Symphony Orchestra if the United States incommoded his conductor. Well, Dr. Muck has been sent to the attractive resort prepared by this paternal Government for the safe keeping of aliens who have tried to destroy it. He and Dr. Kunwald, late of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, can conduct German concerts in turn.

Major Higginson, unable to go on with his artistic labors without his Muck, withdraws from the support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and lo! it is discovered that the orchestra does not necessarily have to perish on that account. It seems that in Boston there are some sound patriots who optimistically believe that it is possible to operate an American orchestra without a German conductor. Whether these joyous citizens are right or not remains to be seen. But it will be a new experience for Boston to see a non-Teutonic wielder of the baton.

The new patrons of the Eastern orchestra have the commendable example of Cincinnati, which, having lost the services of Dr. Kunwald, also lost no time in discerning the availability of a distinguished Belgian conductor, Eugen Ysaye, the violinist, who long ago earned celebrity as an orchestral director.

All sorts of stories are afloat about the choice of the next conductor of the Boston Orchestra. None of them seems to have any final settlement. It has been told that there was a discussion of possible candidates, with Sir Henry Wood as first choice, Arturo Toscanini as second and others trailing along in the rear. It has been asserted without hesitation that Ossip Gabrilowitsch is the choice. It has been narrated with details that Sergei Vasilovitch Rachmaninoff, the distinguished Russian composer, is to be engaged.

American Conductors Scarce

But it has not even been hinted that the next conductor in Boston will be an American. There seem to be no Americans in sight except in certain quarters where the word "American" is believed to be a powerful "circulation getter."

American conductors of symphonic calibre are indeed scarce. Reginald de Koven once upon a time conducted some symphony concerts in Washington. It is said that they were very interesting indeed. Henry Hadley conducted the Seattle and afterward the San Francisco orchestra. But with all respect for these two artists of the baton, no one would consider either as a serious rival for Toscanini or even that industrious workman Sir Henry Wood.

Meanwhile the unregenerate Teutons of the Boston organization are to be dismissed. There will be no great trouble here, for there are plenty of competent orchestral musicians of American birth. When all is comfortably settled, let us hope that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue to be heard with as much satisfaction in the future as in the [illegible] We certainly should [illegible] and fade for want of the sun[illegible]

FINAL RITES AT THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Mr. Higginson and Mayor Peters Make Speeches; and Mr. Ellis, After Thirty-Three Years of Service, Leaves the Management—Rakhmaninov's Whereabouts—Debussy on "Pelleas"—An Authors' and Actors' Playhouse—Items and Incidents

THE audience for the final Symphony concert of the season and the last under Mr. Higginson's control was larger than any company assembled in Symphony Hall on a Saturday evening for many months. It contained a perceptible sprinkling of his friends and kinsfolk, some of whom are rarely seen at a Symphony Concert unless it is an exceptional occasion; but it still lacked the "invincible band" who bought its usual seats at the beginning of the season and then left them vacant in protest against a German conductor and German and Austrian subjects in the ranks of the orchestra. As on Friday, the band was on its mettle and the Eroica Symphony of Beethoven, the little Suite of Bach, and Berlioz's Overture to his opera of "Benvenuto Cellini" were played with irreproachable skill and manifold eloquence. The listeners, in turn, were on their mettle to applaud the orchestra and, called to its feet at the end of the Symphony, it received richly deserved reward not only for exemplary ability but for exemplary fortitude through a harassing season.

At the end of the music Mr. Higginson proceeded to the stage from his usual seat in the parquet; while the orchestra sounded a fanfare and the audience rose, applauding generally and sincerely for at least two minutes—no short time, as plaudits are usually measured. Reading from a manuscript and seeming to have himself well in hand, Mr. Higginson then addressed in turn the standing company before him and the standing orchestra behind him. He recounted his purposes in the founding and the maintenance of the concerts, the finer recompense that they have brought him; touched modestly upon the glories of the band, thanked the men for their share therein; affirmed the surrender of his responsibilities to other hands and commended his successors to the loyalties and good will of an established public. Long and hearty applause answered him. When it had subsided Mayor Peters took the stage and in the name of Boston and Bostonians in general returned thanks to Mr. Higginson as public benefactor with the orchestra, contributing alike to the pleasures of the community and to the repute of the city at home and abroad as a capital of the arts. More applause, through which Mr. Higginson spoke a hesitating but moved acknowledgment, cloaked a final moment, and the audience departed. Once more the past of the Symphony Concerts, so summed, and ended in a perturbed present, seemed good omen of their future.

Mr. Ellis Withdraws

The issue of the usual complimentary cards of admission to the Pop Concerts establishes as fact, out of current rumor through the past fortnight, the withdrawal of Mr. C. A. Ellis from the management of the Symphony Orchestra. Hitherto, these cards have borne his signature; now they bear that of Mr. W. H. Brennan as manager. For the moment, Mr. Ellis happens to be in New York, in the interests of Miss Farrar, and may not speak for himself; but for some time his friends have known that he had handed his resignation to the new trustees of the orchestra and that they, upon his insistence, had regretfully accepted it. When Mr. Higginson founded the band in 1881, he confided the daily management of its affairs to the staff of old Music Hall. As it began to give concerts out of town, he called Mr. Ellis from the offices of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company, to take charge of these "trips." Subsequently, in 1885, Mr. Ellis became full manager of the orchestra, in which post he has continued through the present spring—in all for thirty-three years. During that time, in the concerts at home, in the journeys abroad, in exceptional undertakings like the expedition to the World's Fair at San Francisco, in the general conduct of the manifold and exacting business of the band and of Symphony Hall, Mr. Ellis has maintained an equal wisdom, diligence and devotion. Both in Boston and in the other cities that the orchestra regularly visits, and much more than the public of the concerts or the public at large suspects, it owes to his foresight, resolution and ambition the advance to present standards, achievements and prestige that have made it in the arts an institution of national and international place and fame. His counsels have materially aided in the choice of conductor and "assisting artists," in dealings with the personnel of the band, in financial policies that neither scrimped nor wasted, in the widening of the field of the concerts, in relations with the public, in many a decision of temporary or enduring importance. Once the decision had been made, whether or not he altogether agreed with it, he has executed it loyally and ably. Not even Mr. Higginson himself has served the orchestra with a wiser and a more unremitting devotion.

So doing Mr. Ellis has gained the confidence of musicians and of the public and has risen to a distinction in his calling in both the United States and Europe beyond any other American manager of concerts. Only in the vicissitudes of the year now ended has there been any disposition within or without the Symphony Orchestra and Symphony Hall to question his policies. Mr. Ellis, however, felt that he belonged to the Higginsonian régime and resolved, accordingly, to leave his post when the orchestra passed to new control. He is no longer a young man and exacting private interests press for his attention. Henceforth he will devote himself to these in the direction of the affairs of Miss Farrar, Mme. Melba, Mr. Kreisler and possibly of other eminent singers and virtuosi.

THE MUSICAL LEADER

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1918

Transcript May 6-

MR. HIGGINSON'S ATTITUDE. Extremely interesting would it be to know Mr. Higginson's real attitude in regard to the internment of Dr. Muck. That the founder and supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra should at this crucial time relinquish management of the famous organization, which has been the boast of the "Hub" all these years, is most extraordinary, and makes it appear almost as if he resented the action taken by the Government of the United States and was in complete sympathy with the German-Swiss citizen, Dr. Karl Muck. If Mr. Higginson knew good and sufficient reasons why Dr. Muck should not be interned, it was his (Higginson's) duty to have made the position clear and so relieved the situation. As the New York "Tribune" says: "It is well to know where we stand in regard to foreign conductors." The same paper, in an able editorial demanding of all REAL LOYALTY, says:

The internment of Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald has intensified the public's desire to know just where our various conductors stand on the subject of the war. Dr. Muck and Mr. Kunwald are alien enemies, and they never made any concealment of their sympathies. But there are other well known musicians whose positions are still a little nebulous, even though technically they may not be classed as enemies. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is about to choose another leader, and if New York may be permitted to advise the doings of our New England Athens—and, after all, the Boston Orchestra is our nation's brightest musical gem and therefore to be as jealously guarded by New York as it is by its more fortunate sister city—it is to be hoped that it will choose a leader whose loyalty to the cause of civilization both is and always has been unquestioned. Such a leader certainly can be found. Indeed, such a leader must be found. For a conductor to wave a baton in Boston, even if it is for "The Star Spangled Banner," while his heart turns fondly to Munich or Berlin, is not what we call loyalty to civilization. America today has no place for patriotic camouflage and Boloism, musical or otherwise.

* * *

REBUILDING THE BOSTON SYMPHONY. A great institution came near to collapse and it is but another manifestation of "kultur." The Boston Symphony Orchestra, for years the pride of all America, is sacrificed on the altar of the Hun. The day may come, however, when it will be greater and better and more honest, a glorification to art and not to any one man, be he patron or conductor. The Boston Symphony can be reconstructed and its ranks filled by people in this country and of this country. Although men have serious work ahead of them as soldiers, workmen or farmers, there will always be a class for the dissemination of art in a world which, without it, would be a very sorry place. The orchestra can be rebuilt (not so the old cathedrals of Rheims and Louvain), and according to W. J. Henderson, of the New York "Sun," will probably be heard with satisfaction. Here is what the "Sun" critic writes:

> Major Henry L. Higginson, it appears, could not survive the loss of Dr. Karl Muck. Not long ago he threatened to disband the Boston Symphony Orchestra if the United States incommoded his conductor. Well, Dr. Muck has been sent to the attractive resort prepared by this paternal Government for the safe keeping of aliens who have tried to destroy it. He and Dr. Kunwald, late of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, can conduct German concerts in turn.
>
> Major Higginson, unable to go on with his artistic labors without his Muck, withdraws from the support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and lo! it is discovered that the orchestra does not necessarily have to perish on that account. It seems that in Boston there are some sound patriots who optimistically believe that it is possible to operate an American orchestra without a German conductor. Whether these joyous citizens are right or not remains to be seen. But it will be a new experience for Boston to see a non-Teutonic wielder of the baton.
>
> The new patrons of the Eastern orchestra have the commendable example of Cincinnati, which, having lost the services of Dr. Kunwald, also lost no time in discerning the availability of a distinguished Belgian conductor, Eugen Ysaye, the violinist, who long ago earned celebrity as an orchestral director.
>
> All sorts of stories are afloat about the choice of the next conductor of the Boston Orchestra. None of them seems to have any final settlement. It has been told that there was a discussion of possible candidates, with Sir Henry Wood as first choice, Arturo Toscanini as second and others trailing along in the rear. It has been asserted without hesitation that Ossip Gabrilowitsch is the choice. It has been narrated with details that Sergei Vasilovitch Rachmaninoff, the distinguished Russian composer, is to be engaged.

American Conductors Scarce

But it has not even been hinted that the next conductor in Boston will be an American. There seem to be no Americans in sight except in certain quarters where the word "American" is believed to be a powerful "circulation getter."

American conductors of symphonic calibre are indeed scarce. Reginald de Koven once upon a time conducted some symphony concerts in Washington. It is said that they were very interesting indeed. Henry Hadley conducted the Seattle and afterward the San Francisco orchestra. But with all respect for these two artists of the baton, no one would consider either as a serious rival for Toscanini or even that industrious workman Sir Henry Wood.

Meanwhile the unregenerate Teutons of the Boston organization are to be dismissed. There will be no great trouble here, for there are plenty of competent orchestral musicians of American birth. When all is comfortably settled, let us hope that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue to be heard with as much satisfaction in the future as in the [illegible] We certainly should not [illegible] and fade for want of the suns[illegible] Higginson's smile [illegible] [illegible]

FINAL RITES AT THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Mr. Higginson and Mayor Peters Make Speeches; and Mr. Ellis, After Thirty-Three Years of Service, Leaves the Management—Rakhmaninov's Whereabouts—Debussy on "Pelleas"—An Authors' and Actors' Playhouse—Items and Incidents

THE audience for the final Symphony concert of the season and the last under Mr. Higginson's control was larger than any company assembled in Symphony Hall on a Saturday evening for many months. It contained a perceptible sprinkling of his friends and kinsfolk, some of whom are rarely seen at a Symphony Concert unless it is an exceptional occasion; but it still lacked the "invincible band" who bought its usual seats at the beginning of the season and then left them vacant in protest against a German conductor and German and Austrian subjects in the ranks of the orchestra. As on Friday, the band was on its mettle and the Eroica Symphony of Beethoven, the little Suite of Bach, and Berlioz's Overture to his opera of "Benvenuto Cellini" were played with irreproachable skill and manifold eloquence. The listeners, in turn, were on their mettle to applaud the orchestra and, called to its feet at the end of the Symphony, it received richly deserved reward not only for exemplary ability but for exemplary fortitude through a harassing season.

At the end of the music Mr. Higginson proceeded to the stage from his usual seat in the parquet; while the orchestra sounded a fanfare and the audience rose, applauding generally and sincerely for at least two minutes--no short time, as plaudits are usually measured. Reading from a manuscript and seeming to have himself well in hand, Mr. Higginson then addressed in turn the standing company before him and the standing orchestra behind him. He recounted his purposes in the founding and the maintenance of the concerts, the finer recompense that they have brought him; touched modestly upon the glories of the band, thanked the men for their share therein; affirmed the surrender of his responsibilities to other hands and commended his successors to the loyalties and good will of an established public. Long and hearty applause answered him. When it had subsided Mayor Peters took the stage and in the name of Boston and Bostonians in general returned thanks to Mr. Higginson as public benefactor with the orchestra, contributing alike to the pleasures of the community and to the repute of the city at home and abroad as a capital of the arts. More applause, through which Mr. Higginson spoke a hesitating but moved acknowledgment, cloaked a final moment, and the audience departed. Once more the past of the Symphony Concerts, so summed, and ended in a perturbed present, seemed good omen of their future.

Mr. Ellis Withdraws

The issue of the usual complimentary cards of admission to the Pop Concerts establishes as fact, out of current rumor through the past fortnight, the withdrawal of Mr. C. A. Ellis from the management of the Symphony Orchestra. Hitherto, these cards have borne his signature; now they bear that of Mr. W. H. Brennan as manager. For the moment, Mr. Ellis happens to be in New York, in the interests of Miss Farrar, and may not speak for himself; but for some time his friends have known that he had handed his resignation to the new trustees of the orchestra and that they, upon his insistence, had regretfully accepted it. When Mr. Higginson founded the band in 1881, he confided the daily management of its affairs to the staff of old Music Hall. As it began to give concerts out of town, he called Mr. Ellis from the offices of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company, to take charge of these "trips." Subsequently, in 1885, Mr. Ellis became full manager of the orchestra, in which post he has continued through the present spring—in all for thirty-three years. During that time, in the concerts at home, in the journeys abroad, in exceptional undertakings like the expedition to the World's Fair at San Francisco, in the general conduct of the manifold and exacting business of the band and of Symphony Hall, Mr. Ellis has maintained an equal wisdom, diligence and devotion. Both in Boston and in the other cities that the orchestra regularly visits, and much more than the public of the concerts or the public at large suspects, it owes to his foresight, resolution and ambition the advance to present standards, achievements and prestige that have made it in the arts an institution of national and international place and fame. His counsels have materially aided in the choice of conductor and "assisting artists," in dealings with the personnel of the band, in financial policies that neither scrimped nor wasted, in the widening of the field of the concerts, in relations with the public, in many a decision of temporary or enduring importance. Once the decision had been made, whether or not he altogether agreed with it, he has executed it loyally and ably. Not even Mr. Higginson himself has served the orchestra with a wiser and a more unremitting devotion.

So doing Mr. Ellis has gained the confidence of musicians and of the public and has risen to a distinction in his calling in both the United States and Europe beyond any other American manager of concerts. Only in the vicissitudes of the year now ended has there been any disposition within or without the Symphony Orchestra and Symphony Hall to question his policies. Mr. Ellis, however, felt that he belonged to the Higginsonian régime and resolved, accordingly, to leave his post when the orchestra passed to new control. He is no longer a young man and exacting private interests press for his attention. Henceforth he will devote himself to these in the direction of the affairs of Miss Farrar, Mme. Melba, Mr. Kreisler and possibly of other eminent singers and virtuosi.

Traveler May 15 — 1918

MUCK INVOLVED IN PLANS FOR GERMAN REVOLT

Transcript May 17-1918

Mr. Jacchia and The Pops

These many years at The Pops, no conductor has entered so wholeheartedly into his work as does Mr. Jacchia. The concerts have now continued for a fortnight and not for a single evening has programme or performance lapsed into routine. Within the limits that the purposes and the policies of The Pops impose, his lists of pieces have been more diversified than those of any predecessor. He has resurrected forgotten waltzes in substitution for others that annual repetition had made hackneyed; ventured a movement from a favorite symphony; discovered that audiences hear Wagner gladly; ranged lightly over current musical plays; found "fantasias" from overlooked operas; made known a new Italian composer or two, like Trucco; chosen his short, light pieces shrewdly and variously; while next Wednesday, when the concert is labelled "Italian Night," he purposes to play for the first time in Boston, a piece that not a few musicians and amateurs of music in this town have long wished to hear—the orchestral Rhapsody, "Italia," by Alfredo Casella. Mr. Fiedler acquired the score but never utilized it; Dr. Muck overlooked it; and it has lain neglected in the library at Symphony Hall until the other day Mr. Jacchia came upon it. Yet in Chicago, in New York, in Paris, in Italian cities, "Italia," a songful, sonorous, glowing music, vibrant with rhythm and color, has been played to no little applause. Casella, moreover, is a risen figure in the younger generation of Italian composers, a musician, known and admired in Paris and in Rome alike, for his individuality, his fire, his faith and practice in ultra-modern gospels. Not one of his orchestral pieces—indeed only a Sonata for piano and violoncello—has been heard hitherto in Boston. As Mr. Jacchia is with his programmes, so also is he with his orchestra. He holds it well in hand; he spurs it to work at both rehearsals and concerts; it feels his rhythmic beat, his songful phrasing, his transmitting zest—and answers to them. For long, the band at The Pops has not sounded so much alive. And audiences know; for nightly they are larger and seemingly better pleased than for two or three seasons past.

VISITED SPOT WHERE GUNS WERE STORED

Dr. Karl Muck, the recently deposed leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was today brought into the alleged plot for a German uprising in the United States.

Ivan Norodny, vice-president of the American-Russian Asiatic Corporation in New York, testified that in company with a man named Muck, "a second German officer," and the notorious Capt. Hans Tauscher, he had dinner and then went to a warehouse where he was shown many boxes containing 100,000 rifles.

At the Federal building today it was stated that the "man named Muck" referred to is none other than Dr. Muck, whose refusal to allow his orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" started a controversy and was the visible reason for his being interned.

His internment caused an immense sensation in Boston.

Transcript May 13-1918

TOSCANINI AND THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The Pleasures and Perils of the Classics Under a Latin Conductor—The Dismal Fates of War Plays in Boston—Closing Theatres — Debussy's Funeral — New Pieces in New York and London—Items and Incidents

A WEEK ago, the eddies of speculation that flow around and around the choice of a new conductor for the Symphony Orchestra were diligently casting up Mr. Rakhmaninov; now as cheerfully they have whirled up Mr. Toscanini. Everyone who professes to be well informed "knows" that the post has been offered to the Italian and that only "the usual congestion" of the cables hinders an immediate reply; for all these quidnuncs are sure that Mr. Toscanini would decide so intricate and grave a matter as quickly as he would pick a dish for dinner from the "carte de jour" of a restaurant. On the other hand, those who do not "know" and do not expect to "know," until the trustees of the orchestra announce their choice, console themselves with good words for the Milanese conductor. Hitherto, they say, only musicians of the north, of German or Hungarian blood, have led the band. Never has it had a Latin conductor except in the seven or eight concerts at which, years ago, Mr. d'Indy was its guest. Moreover, that solitary and austere spirit is not exactly an exemplar of what passes as the Latin temperament in the arts. No one would expect Mr. d'Indy to "Méditerraniser la musique"; but it was this very phrase that best described some of Mr. Toscanini's conducting, say in "Tristan," at the Metropolitan Opera House. Certainly the process would be interesting, stimulating, exciting to hear with symphonies, like those of Beethoven or Brahms, that in measure have become stereotyped in our concerts, however much individual conductors may impose their own versions upon hearers. In whatever he might undertake, Mr. Toscanini could not help striking fire, since it is his nature with any and all music so to do. Even "Trovatore" has blazed and "L'Elisir d'Amore" given off sparks under his kindling hand. Moreover, in what "The Fionzaleys" have done, we all know and most of us applaud what Latins can do—granted the individual ability and imagination—with music once foolishly regarded as in a kind of Teutonic preserve. Musically Boston would certainly be a warmer place than it has been these many years were Mr. Toscanini to "Méditerraniser" the Symphony Concerts.

...ioned
etc.
82. Gide... Woodford ... Land in Avon. A... ...and fo... owned by Jesse Wilco... and land ow... by Abner Hart. Witnesses, Thomas ... Bishop and Mary A. Carpenter. Befor... Thomas F. Bishop, J. P. Recorded i... Avon, vol. 1, page 59, by George Norton town clerk.

83. Adna T. Hart and Lydia Hart his wife, both of Avon, to Roger Woodford of same place. March 15, 1832. Land in Avon, in Lovely Street district. Mentions land of Reuben Hawley, Titus Woodruff, Leva Douglass, Francis Woodruff. These lands are under the incumbrance of a dower belonging to Ann Tuller of said Avon. Witnesses, Francis Woodruff and Zerah Woodford, before Zerah Woodford J. P. Recorded in Avon, vol. i., page 64 by Geo. Norton, Town Clerk.

84. Will of Roger Woodford of Avon Hartford Co., Conn. Feb. 19th, 1834. Proved Jan. 4, 1842, by Probate Court. John ...

Traveller May 13-1918

Mystery of Pretzel-less Pops Solved

The pretzel mystery has been explained.

Ever since the Traveler announced pretzels, for years a feature of the Pops, had disappeared, the world has been wondering: "Where have the pretzels gone?"

Now comes Billy Walter of Symphony Hall with an official explanation. Here it is:

"We have nothing pe rsonal against pretzels. We consider them enemy aliens, of course, but they are not active agents of the Kaiser. Moreover, I rather agree with one patron of the Pops who said he desired to eat 'pretzels for spite.'

"But the fact is, we can't get them. They are not baking them any more."

Traveler May 15 — 1918

MUCK INVOLVED IN PLANS FOR GERMAN REVOLT

Dr. Karl Muck, the recently deposed leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was today brought into the alleged plot for a German uprising in the United States.

Ivan Norodny, vice-president of the American-Russian Asiatic Corporation in New York, testified that in company with a man named Muck, "a second German officer," and the notorious Capt. Hans Tauscher, he had dinner and then went to a warehouse where he was shown many boxes containing 100,000 rifles.

At the Federal building today it was stated that the "man named Muck" referred to is none other than Dr. Muck, whose refusal to allow his orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" started a controversy and was the visible reason for his being interned.

His internment caused an immense sensation in Boston.

Transcript May 17-1918

Mr. Jacchia and The Pops

These many years at The Pops, no conductor has entered so wholeheartedly into his work as does Mr. Jacchia. The concerts have now continued for a fortnight and not for a single evening has programme or performance lapsed into routine. Within the limits that the purposes and the policies of The Pops impose, his lists of pieces have been more diversified than those of any predecessor. He has resurrected forgotten waltzes in substitution for others that annual repetition had made hackneyed; ventured a movement from a favorite symphony; discovered that audiences hear Wagner gladly; ranged lightly over current musical plays; found "fantasias" from overlooked operas; made known a new Italian composer or two, like Trucco; chosen his short, light pieces shrewdly and variously; while next Wednesday, when the concert is labelled "Italian Night," he purposes to play for the first time in Boston, a piece that not a few musicians and amateurs of music in this town have long wished to hear—the orchestral Rhapsody, "Italia," by Alfredo Casella. Mr. Fiedler acquired the score but never utilized it; Dr. Muck overlooked it; and it has lain neglected in the library at Symphony Hall until the other day Mr. Jacchia came upon it. Yet in Chicago, in New York, in Paris, in Italian cities, "Italia," a songful, sonorous, glowing music, vibrant with rhythm and color, has been played to no little applause. Casella, moreover, is a risen figure in the younger generation of Italian composers, a musician, known and admired in Paris and in Rome alike, for his individuality, his fire, his faith and practice in ultra-modern gospels. Not one of his orchestral pieces—indeed only a Sonata for piano and violoncello—has been heard hitherto in Boston. As Mr. Jacchia is with his programmes, so also is he with his orchestra. He holds it well in hand; he spurs it to work at both rehearsals and concerts; it feels his rhythmic beat, his songful phrasing, his transmitting zest—and answers to them. For long, the band at The Pops has not sounded so much alive. And audiences know; for nightly they are larger and seemingly better pleased than for two or three seasons past.

VISITED SPOT WHERE GUNS WERE STORED

Transcript May 13-1918

TOSCANINI AND THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The Pleasures and Perils of the Classics Under a Latin Conductor—The Dismal Fates of War Plays in Boston—Closing Theatres — Debussy's Funeral — New Pieces in New York and London—Items and Incidents

A WEEK ago, the eddies of speculation that flow around and around the choice of a new conductor for the Symphony Orchestra were diligently casting up Mr. Rakhmaninov; now as cheerfully they have whirled up Mr. Toscanini. Everyone who professes to be well informed "knows" that the post has been offered to the Italian and that only "the usual congestion" of the cables hinders an immediate reply; for all these quidnuncs are sure that Mr. Toscanini would decide so intricate and grave a matter as quickly as he would pick a dish for dinner from the "carte de jour" of a restaurant. On the other hand, those who do not "know" and do not expect to "know," until the trustees of the orchestra announce their choice, console themselves with good words for the Milanese conductor. Hitherto, they say, only musicians of the north, of German or Hungarian blood, have led the band. Never has it had a Latin conductor except in the seven or eight concerts at which, years ago, Mr. d'Indy was its guest. Moreover, that solitary and austere spirit is not exactly an exemplar of what passes as the Latin temperament in the arts. No one would expect Mr. d'Indy to "Méditerraniser la musique"; but it was this very phrase that best described some of Mr. Toscanini's conducting, say in "Tristan," at the Metropolitan Opera House. Certainly the process would be interesting, stimulating, exciting to hear with symphonies, like those of Beethoven or Brahms, that in measure have become stereotyped in our concerts, however much individual conductors may impose their own versions upon hearers. In whatever he might undertake, Mr. Toscanini could not help striking fire, since it is his nature with any and all music so to do. Even "Trovatore" has blazed and "L'Elisir d'Amore" given off sparks under his kindling hand. Moreover, in what "The Flonzaleys" have done, we all know and most of us applaud what Latins can do—granted the individual ability and imagination—with music once foolishly regarded as in a kind of Teutonic preserve. Musically Boston would certainly be a warmer place than it has been these many years were Mr. Toscanini to "Méditerraniser" the Symphony Concerts.

Traveler May 13-1918

Mystery of Pretzel-less Pops Solved

The pretzel mystery has been explained.

Ever since the Traveler announced pretzels, for years a feature of the Pops, had disappeared, the world has been wondering: "Where have the pretzels gone?"

Now comes Billy Walter of Symphony Hall with an official explanation. Here it is:

"We have nothing personal against pretzels. We consider them enemy aliens, of course, but they are not active agents of the Kaiser. Moreover, I rather agree with one patron of the Pops who said he desired to eat 'pretzels for spite.'

"But the fact is, we can't get them. They are not baking them any more."

...ioned
etc.
82. Gide... Woodford ... Land in Avon. ... ...and fo... owned by Jesse Wilco... and land ov... by Abner Hart. Witnesses, Thomas ... Bishop and Mary A. Carpenter. Befor... Thomas F. Bishop, J. P. Recorded i... Avon, vol. 1, page 59, by George Norton town clerk.

83. Adna T. Hart and Lydia Hart his wife, both of Avon, to Roger Woodford of same place. March 15, 1832. Land in Avon, in Lovely Street district. Mentions land of Reuben Hawley, Titus Woodruff, Leva Douglass, Francis Woodruff. These lands are under the incumbrance of a dower belonging to Ann Tuller of said Avon. Witnesses, Francis Woodruff and Zerah Woodford, before Zerah Woodford J. P. Recorded in Avon, vol. i., page 64 by Geo. Norton, Town Clerk.

84. Will of Roger Woodford of Avon Hartford Co., Conn. Feb. 19th, 1834. Proved Jan. 4, 1842, by Probate Court. John ...

Traveler May 15 – 1918

MUCK INVOLVED IN PLANS FOR GERMAN REVOLT

Transcript May 17-1918

Mr. Jacchia and The Pops

These many years at The Pops, no conductor has entered so wholeheartedly into his work as does Mr. Jacchia. The concerts have now continued for a fortnight and not for a single evening has programme or performance lapsed into routine. Within the limits that the purposes and the policies of The Pops impose, his lists of pieces have been more diversified than those of any predecessor. He has resurrected forgotten waltzes in substitution for others that annual repetition had made hackneyed; ventured a movement from a favorite symphony; discovered that audiences hear Wagner gladly; ranged lightly over current musical plays; found "fantasias" from overlooked operas; made known a new Italian composer or two, like Trucco; chosen his short, light pieces shrewdly and variously; while next Wednesday, when the concert is labelled "Italian Night," he purposes to play for the first time in Boston, a piece that not a few musicians and amateurs of music in this town have long wished to hear—the orchestral Rhapsody, "Italia," by Alfredo Casella. Mr. Fiedler acquired the score but never utilized it; Dr. Muck overlooked it; and it has lain neglected in the library at Symphony Hall until the other day Mr. Jacchia came upon it. Yet in Chicago, in New York, in Paris, in Italian cities, "Italia," a songful, sonorous, glowing music, vibrant with rhythm and color, has been played to no little applause. Casella, moreover, is a risen figure in the younger generation of Italian composers, a musician, known and admired in Paris and in Rome alike, for his individuality, his fire, his faith and practice in ultra-modern gospels. Not one of his orchestral pieces—indeed only a Sonata for piano and violoncello—has been heard hitherto in Boston. As Mr. Jacchia is with his programmes, so also is he with his orchestra. He holds it well in hand; he spurs it to work at both rehearsals and concerts; it feels his rhythmic beat, his songful phrasing, his transmitting zest—and answers to them. For long, the band at The Pops has not sounded so much alive. And audiences know; for nightly they are larger and seemingly better pleased than for two or three seasons past.

icon
Bren
, tha estra under he finally ac-the po
now seems temarily filling, one will bring to it an ability, devotion, experience, tact and fair-mindedness that the board could hardly find in another

Here in Boston

Diligent search in both Boston and New York confirms the probability that Mr. Rakhmaninov, the Russian composer and conductor, is not now in the United States. He has, however, a close friend and "personal representative" at New York in Mr. Modest Altschuler, the conductor of the Russian Symphony Orchestra. According to him, Mr. Rakhmaninov is "in Scandinavia," and in easy communication with Mr. Altschuler. The "personal representative" hints at an American tour next autumn for Mr. Rakhmaninov as pianist and conductor, should he not be called to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

VISITED SPOT WHERE GUNS WERE STORED

Dr. Karl Muck, the recently deposed leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was today brought into the alleged plot for a German uprising in the United States.

Ivan Norodny, vice-president of the American-Russian Asiatic Corporation in New York, testified that in company with a man named Muck, "a second German officer," and the notorious Capt. Hans Tauscher, he had dinner and then went to a warehouse where he was shown many boxes containing 100,000 rifles.

At the Federal building today it was stated that the "man named Muck" referred to is none other than Dr. Muck, whose refusal to allow his orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner" started a controversy and was the visible reason for his being interned.

His internment caused an immense sensation in Boston.

Transcript May 13 – 1918

TOSCANINI AND THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The Pleasures and Perils of the Classics Under a Latin Conductor—The Dismal Fates of War Plays in Boston—Closing Theatres — Debussy's Funeral — New Pieces in New York and London—Items and Incidents

A WEEK ago, the eddies of speculation that flow around and around the choice of a new conductor for the Symphony Orchestra were diligently casting up Mr. Rakhmaninov; now as cheerfully they have whirled up Mr. Toscanini. Everyone who professes to be well informed "knows" that the post has been offered to the Italian and that only "the usual congestion" of the cables hinders an immediate reply; for all these quidnuncs are sure that Mr. Toscanini would decide so intricate and grave a matter as quickly as he would pick a dish for dinner from the "carte de jour" of a restaurant. On the other hand, those who do not "know" and do not expect to "know," until the trustees of the orchestra announce their choice, console themselves with good words for the Milanese conductor. Hitherto, they say, only musicians of the north, of German or Hungarian blood, have led the band. Never has it had a Latin conductor except in the seven or eight concerts at which, years ago, Mr. d'Indy was its guest. Moreover, that solitary and austere spirit is not exactly an exemplar of what passes as the Latin temperament in the arts. No one would expect Mr. d'Indy to "Méditerraniser la musique"; but it was this very phrase that best described some of Mr. Toscanini's conducting, say in "Tristan," at the Metropolitan Opera House. Certainly the process would be interesting, stimulating, exciting to hear with symphonies, like those of Beethoven or Brahms, that in measure have become stereotyped in our concerts, however much individual conductors may impose their own versions upon hearers. In whatever he might undertake, Mr. Toscanini could not help striking fire, since it is his nature with any and all music so to do. Even "Trovatore" has blazed and "L'Elisir d'Amore" given off sparks under his kindling hand. Moreover, in what "The Flonzaleys" have done, we all know and most of us applaud what Latins can do—granted the individual ability and imagination—with music once foolishly regarded as in a kind of Teutonic preserve. Musically Boston would certainly be a warmer place than it has been these many years were Mr. Toscanini to "Méditerraniser" the Symphony Concerts.

Traveller May 13-1918

Mystery of Pretzel-less Pops Solved

The pretzel mystery has been explained.

Ever since the Traveler announced pretzels, for years a feature of the Pops, had disappeared, the world has been wondering: "Where have the pretzels gone?"

Now comes Billy Walter of Symphony Hall with an official explanation. Here it is:

"We have nothing personal against pretzels. We consider them enemy aliens, of course, but they are not active agents of the Kaiser. Moreover, I rather agree with one patron of the Pops who said he desired to eat 'pretzels for spite.'

"But the fact is, we can't get them. They are not baking them any more."

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.

The New Boston Symphony

So indissolubly have the munificence and directing will of Maj Henry L. Higginson been linked with the Boston symphony orchestra that the news of his retirement will seem to many to end a stage of the orchestra's career. The orchestra passes out of his hands to be managed by a syndicate composed largely of Boston lawyers and bankers, though also including one man of letters, M. A. DeWolf Howe, editor of two Harvard alumni publications, and author of the only published history of the orchestra, and John Ellerton Lodge, Senator Lodge's son, a musician by nature and an expert in Chinese and Japanese art. It will not seem the same orchestra and, of course, it may not be the same orchestra. But it is reasonable to assume that the syndicate which has now taken charge will adopt the scrupulously artistic policy of the orchestra's founder and patron.

Whether a board of trustees or a single wealthy patron is better fitted to control a great orchestra is a question that might be debated at length. Probably in a majority of cases we should decide in favor of a board—assuming that the men who composed it were capable of taking a broad public view of their duties, were animated by high and disinterested ideals, and were able to lay aside personal preferences for the good of the whole. But Maj Higginson has proved himself, at least in his government of the orchestra's affairs, a man who has combined all these qualities. He has taken a justifiable pride in the orchestra's attainments. His wealth and his disposition to employ it generously for the orchestra's benefit have made him indifferent to clamor and criticism when he has felt that he had adopted the right course.

Maj Higginson's disregard of the clamor against Dr Muck, in so far as it represented merely mischievous or misinformed agitation, is only one instance of his standing by a conductor in the face of criticism. Animosities arise easily in the musical world and in the fashionable world, but it is safe to say that Maj Higginson paid little heed to them, and kept steadfastly on his course of developing the orchestra to the highest attainable point of perfection. There was a time when Mr Gericke was not popular with the orchestra's patrons; he was never popular with his men. But Col Higginson saw the value of the conductor's services, and gave him a free hand. And the orchestra's highest attainments were largely made possible by Mr Gericke's artistic ideals and austere devotion to duty. It is easy to see how different the course of events might have been had Maj Higginson not followed the best counsel.

It is announced that guarantees already secured will go a long way toward placing the orchestra on a sound financial basis. Presumably the orchestra has been self-supporting in recent years. It is to be hoped that Boston will give the new trustees the support and co-operation which was denied to the Boston opera venture.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
APR 29 1918

MAJOR HIGGINSON'S RETIREMENT.

Many admirers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who looked upon the retirement of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor with complacency, if not with delight, will be stirred to deep regret by the announcement of the retirement of Major Higginson from the active control of that organization. Conductors are plentiful and an active canvass is going on of three for the leadership of this orchestra, but in all our history we have never had an enthusiast who has devoted so much time, loving care and money to the perfection of an ideal musical instrument as Major Higginson has thrown into the work of creating and sustaining this finest orchestra in the world. He has done a work for music for which his city and his country will long hold him in grateful remembrance.

But regrettable as is the severance of his active relation with the orchestra, he has merely anticipated the inevitable by a few years. Sturdy as Major Higginson is in mind and body, he was born in 1834. He probably had that fact in mind when a few years ago he gave to the orchestra an endowment of $1,000,000, so that its work might go on unhampered whether under his eye or that of another. He has now appointed nine trustees, who have incorporated themselves to continue the work in the spirit of its founder.

The first principle of Major Higginson's management was that perfection was never to be sacrificed to financial needs. He has paid his players so well that he has had his pick from among all the musicians of the world, and has been able to command their entire time for rehearsals and concerts. In addition he has bought in many cases the finest instruments for their use, a fact which has had something to do with the unrivaled tone of the Boston strings. That his trustees are to continue that policy is indicated by the announcement that "they are justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis." These guarantees are apparently in addition to Major Higginson's $1,000,000 endowment. In that case the Boston orchestra will still be able to look the world over for conductors and players and will give to the country the best music in the best possible performances regardless of its drawing power. It speaks volumes for the musical taste of Brooklyn that the orchestra so conducted has for years sold every seat in the Academy and maintained a long waiting list of subscribers. That happy condition of affairs will no doubt continue under the new direction.

From EVENING GLOBE
Address: New York City
Date

MAJOR HIGGINSON'S WISDOM.

When the venerable Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded and for thirty-seven years sustained single handed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took public farewell of that orchestra at the closing concert of its season Saturday night, a situation resulted which inevitably must appeal to all who were present or, being absent, have heard of it. Nothing less than the best orchestra in this country, if not in the whole world, grew out of Major Higginson's enthusiasm, generosity, and steadfastness. For a generation the orchestra has exhibited the highest type of orchestral playing not only to the people of Boston but, through its tours, to the people of many other cities. It has constantly played the best standard music in the best way, and it has been a diligent missioner for worthy new music. Devoted to an ideal so lofty, it has proved the most ennobling influence in our musical life, our highest inspiration in tonal art.

Major Higginson in saying in the course of his farewell talk that its concerts had been to him "a great joy, not only because of the music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future," furnishes pathetic and convincing proof of what the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to mean to the general public. It is regrettable that the last year Major Higginson was to stand behind the orchestra he cherished should have been marked by troubles foreign to the serene realm of art and, one can guess, harrowing to the venerable founder.

Fortunately the orchestra has survived a situation which for a time threatened to kill it. For the gentlemen of Boston who as trustees will now endeavor to carry on the work hitherto devolving on Major Higginson alone, the latter bespoke from the players and the public the same devotion and support they had accorded him, and furthermore he avowed his belief that to achieve great and permanent orchestras it is necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success. That dictum is a true pearl of wisdom which the trustees of the orchestra should treasure jealously and observe scrupulously. Of course the conductor should be worthy of such responsibility. As soon as he proves not to be the trustees should depose him. But the greatest conductor on earth cannot fully express himself artistically without such undivided responsibility. Otherwise there is dissension, anxiety, preoccupation with questions that have no direct bearing on art, and at last confusion and ruin.

Most of the men who have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been artistically entirely worthy of such responsibility. Otherwise the orchestra could not have risen to its high estate. If the trustees now follow the advice implied in Major Higginson's dictum they will obtain, as apparently they can, a conductor of the first order, and then give him an absolutely untrammelled hand.

WORLD
New York City
MAY 5 - 1918

HIGGINSON'S SWAN SONG TO BOSTON ORCHESTRA

"War Has Brought Troubles," His One Reference to Dr. Muck in Speech on Retiring.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, May 4.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporters of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave that organization his farewell message to-night before an audience that filled Symphony Hall to the doors. It was the last regular concert of the season and it marked the severance of the Major's connection with the orchestra.

He was cheered when, at the end of the concert, he stepped forward and said:

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra was set up from the conviction of my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras. It seemed my duty and was my aim to give our country the best music possible. To achieve this object, it was necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success, and then to require of him and of his men a high and ever higher standard. To win that standard nothing has been spared and the aim never forgotten; and in this season our orchestra has reached our high-water mark.

"I had hoped to have carried on the concerts during my lifetime, but this war has brought us many troubles, and among them the problems of the orchestra during this season, which have exhausted my strength and nerves. Therefore, my part in our orchestra ceases to-night, except for the popular concerts of this year.

"Our orchestra must live in all its strength and beauty, and now will be carried on by some friends who have taken it up; and for them I ask the same support which you have given me through all these years."

His remark about the war bringing many troubles was taken as a reference to the fate of Dr. Karl Muck, who was the leader of the orchestra and is now interned as an enemy alien.

As he ended Mayor Andrew J. Peters mounted the platform and thanked Major Higginson for "the years of unselfish and untiring devotion in making the Boston Symphony Orchestra what it is."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., which has taken over the orchestra, is controlled by a Board of Trustees comprising M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, C. P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

From
Address: New York City.
MAY 8 - 1918
Date

A PATRON OF MUSIC

To a great many people Major Henry L. Higginson's retirement as the patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will seem to be something very near a tragedy. It will seem so not merely because this public-spirited American, a veteran of the Civil War, a discriminating lover of music, and a wise user of wealth, ceases to be the chief supporter of the great orchestra he founded thirty-seven years ago, but because his retirement comes at a time when he has been associated with the defense of the orchestra's conductor, Karl Muck, who has been arrested and interned as a dangerous alien enemy.

It is in a way a tragedy, for Major Higginson has stoutly maintained that Dr. Muck was to be trusted and that the agitation against him was unintelligent. There is no longer any doubt that, in spite of a technical plea of Swiss citizenship, Dr. Muck's nationality is German; and there has never been any question at any time that his sympathies were with the Hun. The fact that the Federal Government has now taken action to put him where he is incapable of rendering any injury to the country has undoubtedly caused those who have been Dr. Muck's apologists a great deal of distress. It will be hard for people to dissociate Major Higginson from this episode. It is most unfortunate, for there have been few men in America whose patriotism, whose large-minded interest in art, whose virile modesty, has been so exemplary. At Harvard his name will be always associated with Soldiers' Field, the University's athletic ground, and with the Harvard Union, the University's great democratic club and center of college activities.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will, it is announced, be continued under the control of a corporate board of trustees.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.

MAJ HIGGINSON RETIRES

LEAVES BOSTON SYMPHONY

Organization Will Be Incorporated and Directed by Syndicate

Maj Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston symphony orchestra in 1881 and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired yesterday from the organization which will be continued under the direction of a Boston syndicate. The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Maj Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking, he was reluctant to see it come to an end and had therefore turned over control to nine trustees who yesterday filed papers for incorporation as the Boston symphony orchestra company, incorporated. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dana, M. A. Dewolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are in progress which have for their object the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.
MAY 2 - 1918

Maj. Higginson's retirement from the personal management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's affairs is a disappointment to many people. Maj. Higginson had made a personal pet of the orchestra, and his withdrawal of patronage must be regarded as the result of Dr. Muck's tactless and untimely demonstrations. Music has charms to soothe sometimes, but not always.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.

The New Boston Symphony

So indissolubly have the munificence and directing will of Maj Henry L. Higginson been linked with the Boston symphony orchestra that the news of his retirement will seem to many to end a stage of the orchestra's career. The orchestra passes out of his hands to be managed by a syndicate composed largely of Boston lawyers and bankers, though also including one man of letters, M. A. DeWolf Howe, editor of two Harvard alumni publications, and author of the only published history of the orchestra, and John Ellerton Lodge, Senator Lodge's son, a musician by nature and an expert in Chinese and Japanese art. It will not seem the same orchestra and, of course, it may not be the same orchestra. But it is reasonable to assume that the syndicate which has now taken charge will adopt the scrupulously artistic policy of the orchestra's founder and patron.

Whether a board of trustees or a single wealthy patron is better fitted to control a great orchestra is a question that might be debated at length. Probably in a majority of cases we should decide in favor of a board—assuming that the men who composed it were capable of taking a broad public view of their duties, were animated by high and disinterested ideals, and were able to lay aside personal preferences for the good of the whole. But Maj Higginson has proved himself, at least in his government of the orchestra's affairs, a man who has combined all these qualities. He has taken a justifiable pride in the orchestra's attainments. His wealth and his disposition to employ it generously for the orchestra's benefit have made him indifferent to clamor and criticism when he has felt that he had adopted the right course.

Maj Higginson's disregard of the clamor against Dr Muck, in so far as it represented merely mischievous or misinformed agitation, is only one instance of his standing by a conductor in the face of criticism. Animosities arise easily in the musical world and in the fashionable world, but it is safe to say that Maj Higginson paid little heed to them, and kept steadfastly on his course of developing the orchestra to the highest attainable point of perfection. There was a time when Mr Gericke was not popular with the orchestra's patrons; he was never popular with his men. But Col Higginson saw the value of the conductor's services, and gave him a free hand. And the orchestra's highest attainments were largely made possible by Mr Gericke's artistic ideals and austere devotion to duty. It is easy to see how different the course of events might have been had Maj Higginson not followed the best counsel.

It is announced that guarantees already secured will go a long way toward placing the orchestra on a sound financial basis. Presumably the orchestra has been self-supporting in recent years. It is to be hoped that Boston will give the new trustees the support and co-operation which was denied to the Boston opera venture.

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.
MAY 9

Maj. Higginson's retirement from the personal management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's affairs is a disappointment to many people. Maj. Higginson had made a personal pet of the orchestra, and his withdrawal of patronage must be regarded as the result of Dr. Muck's tactless and untimely demonstrations. Music has charms to soothe sometimes, but not always.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAY 9 1918

MAJOR HIGGINSON'S RETIREMENT.

Many admirers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who looked upon the retirement of Dr. Karl Muck as conductor with complacency, if not with delight, will be stirred to deep regret by the announcement of the retirement of Major Higginson from the active control of that organization. Conductors are plentiful and an active canvass is going on of three for the leadership of this orchestra, but in all our history we have never had an enthusiast who has devoted so much time, loving care and money to the perfection of an ideal musical instrument as Major Higginson has thrown into the work of creating and sustaining this finest orchestra in the world. He has done a work for music for which his city and his country will long hold him in grateful remembrance.

But regrettable as is the severance of his active relation with the orchestra, he has merely anticipated the inevitable by a few years. Sturdy as Major Higginson is in mind and body, he was born in 1834. He probably had that fact in mind when a few years ago he gave to the orchestra an endowment of $1,000,000, so that its work might go on unhampered whether under his eye or that of another. He has now appointed nine trustees, who have incorporated themselves to continue the work in the spirit of its founder.

The first principle of Major Higginson's management was that perfection was never to be sacrificed to financial needs. He has paid his players so well that he has had his pick from among all the musicians of the world, and has been able to command their entire time for rehearsals and concerts. In addition he has bought in many cases the finest instruments for their use, a fact which has had something to do with the unrivaled tone of the Boston strings. That his trustees are to continue that policy is indicated by the announcement that "they are justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis." These guarantees are apparently in addition to Major Higginson's $1,000,000 endowment. In that case the Boston orchestra will still be able to look the world over for conductors and players and will give to the country the best music in the best possible performances regardless of its drawing power. It speaks volumes for the musical taste of Brooklyn that the orchestra so conducted has for years sold every seat in the Academy and maintained a long waiting list of subscribers. That happy condition of affairs will no doubt continue under the new direction.

AN
Springfield, Mass.

MAJ HIGGINSON RETIRES

LEAVES BOSTON SYMPHONY

Organization Will Be Incorporated and Directed by Syndicate

Maj Henry L. Higginson, who founded the Boston symphony orchestra in 1881 and who has since sustained it in its years of financial stress, retired yesterday from the organization which will be continued under the direction of a Boston syndicate. The plans of the orchestra had been regarded by the public as somewhat indefinite since the recent arrest and internment as a dangerous enemy alien of Dr Karl Muck, conductor.

Members of the syndicate said that while Maj Higginson felt he could no longer bear the burden of the undertaking, he was reluctant to see it come to an end and had therefore turned over control to nine trustees who yesterday filed papers for incorporation as the Boston symphony orchestra company, incorporated. The trustees are Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dana, M. A. Dewolfe Howe, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, Galen P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

"The trustees believe the undertaking to be justified by guarantees already secured toward placing it upon a sound financial basis," an announcement stated. "They enter upon their duties with a full realization of the significance of the orchestra to the life of their city and country. With regard to the selection of a conductor for next year, no final announcement can yet be made, but negotiations are in progress which have for their object the engagement of a conductor who will be welcomed by the public and

EVENING GLOBE
New York City
Date

MAJOR HIGGINSON'S WISDOM.

When the venerable Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded and for thirty-seven years sustained single handed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took public farewell of that orchestra at the closing concert of its season Saturday night, a situation resulted which inevitably must appeal to all who were present or, being absent, have heard of it. Nothing less than the best orchestra in this country, if not in the whole world, grew out of Major Higginson's enthusiasm, generosity, and steadfastness. For a generation the orchestra has exhibited the highest type of orchestral playing not only to the people of Boston but, through its tours, to the people of many other cities. It has constantly played the best standard music in the best way, and it has been a diligent missioner for worthy new music. Devoted to an ideal so lofty, it has proved the most ennobling influence in our musical life, our highest inspiration in tonal art.

Major Higginson in saying in the course of his farewell talk that its concerts had been to him "a great joy, not only because of the music, but chiefly because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future," furnishes pathetic and convincing proof of what the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to mean to the general public. It is regrettable that the last year Major Higginson was to stand behind the orchestra he cherished should have been marked by troubles foreign to the serene realm of art and, one can guess, harrowing to the venerable founder.

Fortunately the orchestra has survived a situation which for a time threatened to kill it. For the gentlemen of Boston who as trustees will now endeavor to carry on the work hitherto devolving on Major Higginson alone, the latter bespoke from the players and the public the same devotion and support they had accorded him, and furthermore he avowed his belief that to achieve great and permanent orchestras it is necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success. That dictum is a true pearl of wisdom which the trustees of the orchestra should treasure jealously and observe scrupulously. Of course the conductor should be worthy of such responsibility. As soon as he proves not to be the trustees should depose him. But the greatest conductor on earth cannot fully express himself artistically without such undivided responsibility. Otherwise there is dissension, anxiety, preoccupation with questions that have no direct bearing on art, and at last confusion and ruin.

Most of the men who have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been artistically entirely worthy of such responsibility. Otherwise the orchestra could not have risen to its high estate. If the trustees now follow the advice implied in Major Higginson's dictum they will obtain, as apparently they can, a conductor of the first order, and then give him an absolutely untrammelled hand.

From
Address: New York City.
Date

A PATRON OF MUSIC

To a great many people Major Henry Lee Higginson's retirement as the patron of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will seem to be something very near a tragedy. It will seem so not merely because this public-spirited American, a veteran of the Civil War, a discriminating lover of music, and a wise user of wealth, ceases to be the chief supporter of the great orchestra he founded thirty-seven years ago, but because his retirement comes at a time when he has been associated with the defense of the orchestra's conductor, Karl Muck, who has been arrested and interned as a dangerous alien enemy.

It is in a way a tragedy, for Major Higginson has stoutly maintained that Dr. Muck was to be trusted and that the agitation against him was unintelligent. There is no longer any doubt that, in spite of a technical plea of Swiss citizenship, Dr. Muck's nationality is German; and there has never been any question at any time that his sympathies were with the Hun. The fact that the Federal Government has now taken action to put him where he is incapable of rendering any injury to the country has undoubtedly caused those who have been Dr. Muck's apologists a great deal of distress. It will be hard for people to dissociate Major Higginson from this episode. It is most unfortunate, for there have been few men in America whose patriotism, whose large-minded interest in art, whose virile modesty, has been so exemplary. At Harvard his name will be always associated with Soldiers' Field, the University's athletic ground, and with the Harvard Union, the University's great democratic club and center of college activities.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will, it is announced, be continued under the control of a corporate board of trustees.

WORLD
New York City
MAY 5 - 1918

HIGGINSON'S SWAN SONG TO BOSTON ORCHESTRA

"War Has Brought Troubles," His One Reference to Dr. Muck in Speech on Retiring.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, May 4.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporters of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave that organization his farewell message to-night before an audience that filled Symphony Hall to the doors. It was the last regular concert of the season and it marked the severance of the Major's connection with the orchestra.

He was cheered when, at the end of the concert, he stepped forward and said:

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra was set up from the conviction of my youth that our country should have great and permanent orchestras. It seemed my duty and was my aim to give our country the best music possible. To achieve this object, it was necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success, and then to require of him and of his men a high and ever higher standard. To win that standard nothing has been spared and the aim never forgotten; and in this season our orchestra has reached our high-water mark.

"I had hoped to have carried on the concerts during my lifetime, but this war has brought us many troubles, and among them the problems of the orchestra during this season, which have exhausted my strength and nerves. Therefore, my part in our orchestra ceases to-night, except for the popular concerts of this year.

"Our orchestra must live in all its strength and beauty, and now will be carried on by some friends who have taken it up; and for them I ask the same support which you have given me through all these years."

His remark about the war bringing many troubles was taken as a reference to the fate of Dr. Karl Muck, who was the leader of the orchestra and is now interned as an enemy alien.

As he ended Mayor Andrew J. Peters mounted the platform and thanked Major Higginson for "the years of unselfish and untiring devotion in making the Boston Symphony Orchestra what it is."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., which has taken over the orchestra, is controlled by a Board of Trustees comprising M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Frederick P. Cabot, Ernest B. Dane, John E. Lodge, Frederick E. Lowell, Arthur Lyman, Henry B. Sawyer, C. P. Stone and Bentley W. Warren.

SUN
: New York City.
MAY 5 1918

Major Henry L. Higginson, it appears, could not survive the loss of Dr. Karl Muck. Not long ago he threatened to disband the Boston Symphony Orchestra if the United States incommoded his conductor. Well, Dr. Muck has been sent to the attractive resort prepared by this paternal Government for the safe keeping of aliens who have tried to destroy it. He and Dr. Kuhnwald, late of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, can conduct German concerts in turn.

Boston Orchestra to Go On.

Major Higginson, unable to go on with his artistic labors without his Muck, withdraws from the support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and lo! it is discovered that the orchestra does not necessarily have to perish on that account. It seems that in Boston there are some sound patriots who optimistically believe that it is possible to operate an American orchestra without a German conductor. Whether these joyous citizens are right or not remains to be seen. But it will be a new experience for Boston to see a non-Teutonic wielder of the baton.

The new patrons of the Eastern orchestra have the commendable example of Cincinnati, which, having lost the services of Dr. Kuhnwald, also lost no time in discerning the availability of a distinguished Belgian conductor, Eugene Ysaye, the violinist, who long ago earned celebrity as an orchestral director.

All sorts of stories are afloat about the choice of the next conductor of the Boston orchestra. None of them seems to have any final settlement. It has been told that there was a discussion of possible candidates, with Sir Henry Wood as first choice, Arturo Toscanini as second and others trailing along in the rear. It has been asserted without hesitation that Ossip Gabrilowitsch is the choice. It has been narrated with details that Sergei Vasilovitch Rachmaninov, the distinguished Russian composer, is to be engaged.

American Conductors Scarce.

But it has not even been hinted that the next conductor in Boston will be an American. There seem to be no Americans in sight except in certain quarters where the word "American" is believed to be a powerful "circulation getter."

American conductors of symphonic calibre are indeed scarce. Reginald de Koven once upon a time conducted some symphony concerts in Washington. It is said that they were very interesting indeed. Henry Hadley conducted the Seattle and afterward the San Francisco orchestra. But with all respect for these two artists of the baton, no one would consider either as a serious rival for Toscanini or even that industrious workman Sir Henry Wood.

Meanwhile the unregenerate Teutons of the Boston organization are to be dismissed. There will be no great trouble here, for there are plenty of competent orchestral musicians of American birth. When all is comfortably settled, let us hope that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue to be heard with as much satisfaction in the future as in the past. We certainly should not like to see it wither and fade for want of the sunshine of Major Henry L. Higginson's smile. It is a national institution, while the Major is strictly Bostonian.

NORTH AMERICAN
ress Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 7 - 1918

STOKOWSKI MAKES 16 SHIFTS IN ORCHESTRA

Fills Vacancies Caused by Draft and Resignations; Few Changes Left

BOSTON REPORT DENIED

To date sixteen changes have been made in the personnel of the Philadelphia Orchestra for next season. Leopold Stokowski is still holding trials in this city and New York, and it is expected that in a few days the list of new members of the organization will have been completed.

Two first violins have been drafted—Antonio and Louis Ferrara; one has enlisted and four have resighed. Earl Pfouts, always highly regarded, is in the latter class. William Leon Arkless, viola; Bernard Argiewicz and George Schott, cellists; Daniel Maquarre, solo flutist; A. Dupuis, oboeist; John D'Orio, French horn, and E. Rozanel, trumpet, have resigned.

The statement in a Boston newspaper of recent date that the orchestra was in a state of disruption on account of differences between conductor and men, was emphatically denied yesterday by Arthur Judson, manager.

He pointed out that virtually since its foundation it has been the policy of the orchestra to make from seven to twelve changes each year for the purpose of improving its personnel. These, with the inroads of the draft and the inevitable resignations, have made the number of normal changes slightly higher.

"The appearance of such an article in a Boston newspaper at this time," said Mr. Judson, "is significant in view of the fact that the Philadelphia Orchestra has just completed arrangements for its first series of public concerts in New York city, a field Boston has heretofore considered its own."

The troubles of the Boston Orchestra, which began with Mr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem early in the season, are far from settled. Sir Henry Wood, of London, and Sergius Rachmaninoff, the Russian composer, are now named as possible conductors next season.

CLUB FELLOW
: New York City
MAY 8 - 1918

OUR honored ex-Governor Warfield is very much upset over the recent turn of events in his family. Mr. Warfield, whose most patriotic duty last Winter was the prevention of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from appearing in Baltimore, is now very much perturbed because Mr. Malone and his Compulsory Work Bureau is after his nephew, Royal Warfield Gill. Mr. Warfield seems to think that it is persecution that the Compulsory Work Bureau is doing in trying to make the handsome Royal do something not only for the community but for himself for that matter. Governor Warfield thinks that he and his family are being criticized. Well Governor Warfield is quite right. The "Ex" has been criticized for years, but The Warfield had not sense of humor enough to realize it, and now his family are coming in for it good and plenty. Despite the great "Ex," Royal has got to go to work, and that's an end to it. So Mr. Warfield had best take his medicine with good grace.

RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 8 1918

Pierre Monteux.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY AND ITS CONDUCTOR?

A Volcanic Upheaval in the 37-Year-Old Organization.

OUT THE OLD—IN THE NEW

Eight Pre-eminent Men With Whose Names Gossip is Rife.

HERR DOCTOR KARL MUCK, with his entertaining humoresque based on "The Star-Spangled Banner," and his Swiss citizenship (which, by the bye, the Administration of Switzerland doesn't much seem disposed to defend), is at last happily retired for some months.

With him, now, too, in the curious tangle of Boston Symphony affairs, has gone the civil war veteran and music devotee, Major Henry Lee Higginson; he, obviously, not to an internment camp.

Higginson and His Committee.

Major Higginson founded the orchestra 37 years ago; and it has been his enthusiasm and his financial support which have made of that body of players the foremost organization of its kind in the world. Now he is an old man; and evidently too much upset by the Muck business to follow the company's fortunes further. Luckily, though, he has found a splendid committee of citizens into whose able hands to entrust the high tradition; so that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue hereafter to delight us as before.

But first must come a new conductor. The Boston director's stand is so important and imposing a position that practically no musician could afford to refuse it. Yet the name of the first man we mention is said absolutely (both in the public prints and in private gossip) to have been offered the place, and to have declined. This is our own Leopold Stokowski.

However, when we remember that Stokowski has a long-term unexpired contract with the Philadelphia Orchestra, and that he must be rather pleasantly settled here, the reported declination does not seem so strange.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Next in order of interest with us is Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Also nearly a Philadelphian now (he lives in Bryn Mawr), Gabrilowitsch seems, on the face of it, to be the favorite in the Boston succession. He has lately proved his orchestra-directing ability; and Philadelphia will wish him every luck in his candidacy—if it happens that he really is a candidate.

Americanly Inclined.

Neither of these two men are American-born; but they come nearer to it than any of the other musicians spoken of in this matter. Both have married American wives; and Gabrilowitsch's wife is the daughter of certainly one of the most characteristic Americans we have yet developed.

Hardly necessary to mention, no German, Austrian, Bulgarian or Turk need apply for this job. The allies, though, and a neutral or so are well represented in the lists. France leads with two, Pierre Monteux and Vincent D'Indy. We already know Monteux fairly well; and some of us have even watched D'Indy wield the director's stick.

England's name is to the fore with Sir Henry J. Wood. Russia has Rachmaninoff. Italy—Arturo Toscanini. And finally Switzerland enters (as it were) Ernest Bloch.

A stirring roster of names—that! No musician or music-lover can well read through them without a bit of a stir. Several of the men are composers of approximately the first rank, all are world-notable in some department of their art.

But we in Philadelphia could undoubtedly do worse than applaud for Ossip Gabrilowitsch. May his name come up in the cards!

F. H.

m HERALD
lress: New York City
e
AY 15 191

HEAR MR. TOSCANINI WILL LEAD BOSTON ORCHESTRA

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Tuesday.—Frederick P. Cabot, one of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when asked this evening regarding a statement in Musical America, published to-day to the effect that Arturo Toscanini, formerly leading Italian conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, now in Italy, has been offered the conductorship of the Boston Symphony, refused to confirm or deny it.

"We have said repeatedly," he declared, "that when we have anything to announce it will be published broadcast throughout the country. No one person or publication has any authority to make any statement regarding the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra unless it comes from the trustees and they have never given such a statement.

"For the present we have nothing further to say other than what was contained in our first statement when we took charge of the orchestra." Sir Henry Wood, of London, also has been mentioned as a likely choice. Mr. Cabot also declined to discuss this report.

129

SUN

: New York City.

MAY 5 1918

Major Henry L. Higginson, it appears, could not survive the loss of Dr. Karl Muck. Not long ago he threatened to disband the Boston Symphony Orchestra if the United States incommoded his conductor. Well, Dr. Muck has been sent to the attractive resort prepared by this paternal Government for the safe keeping of aliens who have tried to destroy it. He and Dr. Kuhnwald, late of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, can conduct German concerts in turn.

Boston Orchestra to Go On.

Major Higginson, unable to go on with his artistic labors without his Muck, withdraws from the support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and lo! it is discovered that the orchestra does not necessarily have to perish on that account. It seems that in Boston there are some sound patriots who optimistically believe that it is possible to operate an American orchestra without a German conductor. Whether these joyous citizens are right or not remains to be seen. But it will be a new experience for Boston to see a non-Teutonic wielder of the baton.

The new patrons of the Eastern orchestra have the commendable example of Cincinnati, which, having lost the services of Dr. Kuhnwald, also lost no time in discerning the availability of a distinguished Belgian conductor, Eugene Ysaye, the violinist, who long ago earned celebrity as an orchestral director.

All sorts of stories are afloat about the choice of the next conductor of the Boston orchestra. None of them seems to have any final settlement. It has been told that there was a discussion of possible candidates, with Sir Henry Wood as first choice, Arturo Toscanini as second and others trailing along in the rear. It has been asserted without hesitation that Ossip Gabrilowitsch is the choice. It has been narrated with details that Sergei Vasilovitch Rachmaninov, the distinguished Russian composer, is to be engaged.

American Conductors Scarce.

But it has not even been hinted that the next conductor in Boston will be an American. There seem to be no Americans in sight except in certain quarters where the word "American" is believed to be a powerful "circulation getter."

American conductors of symphonic calibre are indeed scarce. Reginald de Koven once upon a time conducted some symphony concerts in Washington. It is said that they were very interesting indeed. Henry Hadley conducted the Seattle and afterward the San Francisco orchestra. But with all respect for these two artists of the baton, no one would consider either as a serious rival for Toscanini or even that industrious workman Sir Henry Wood.

Meanwhile the unregenerate Teutons of the Boston organization are to be dismissed. There will be no great trouble here, for there are plenty of competent orchestral musicians of American birth. When all is comfortably settled, let us hope that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue to be heard with as much satisfaction in the future as in the past. We certainly should not like to see it wither and fade for want of the sunshine of Major Henry L. Higginson's smile. It is a national institution, while the Major is strictly Bostonian.

NORTH AMERICAN

ress Philadelphia, Pa.

MAY 7 - 1918

STOKOWSKI MAKES 16 SHIFTS IN ORCHESTRA

Fills Vacancies Caused by Draft and Resignations; Few Changes Left

BOSTON REPORT DENIED

To date sixteen changes have been made in the personnel of the Philadelphia Orchestra for next season. Leopold Stokowski is still holding trials in this city and New York, and it is expected that in a few days the list of new members of the organization will have been completed.

Two first violins have been drafted—Antonio and Louis Ferrara; one has enlisted and four have resigned. Earl Pfouts, always highly regarded, is in the latter class. William Leon Arkless, viola; Bernard Argiewicz and George Schott, cellists; Daniel Maquarre, solo flutist; A. Dupuis, oboeist; John D'Orio, French horn, and E. Rozanel, trumpet, have resigned.

The statement in a Boston newspaper of recent date that the orchestra was in a state of disruption on account of differences between conductor and men, was emphatically denied yesterday by Arthur Judson, manager.

He pointed out that virtually since its foundation it has been the policy of the orchestra to make from seven to twelve changes each year for the purpose of improving its personnel. These, with the inroads of the draft and the inevitable resignations, have made the number of normal changes slightly higher.

"The appearance of such an article in a Boston newspaper at this time," said Mr. Judson, "is significant in view of the fact that the Philadelphia Orchestra has just completed arrangements for its first series of public concerts in New York city, a field Boston has heretofore considered its own."

The troubles of the Boston Orchestra, which began with Mr. Muck's refusal to play the national anthem early in the season, are far from settled. Sir Henry Wood, of London, and Sergius Rachmaninoff, the Russian composer, are now named as possible conductors next season.

CLUB FELLOW

: New York City

MAY 8

OUR honored ex-Governor Warfield is very much upset over the recent turn of events in his family. Mr. Warfield, whose most patriotic duty last Winter was the prevention of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from appearing in Baltimore, is now very much perturbed because Mr. Malone and his Compulsory Work Bureau is after his nephew, Royal Warfield Gill. Mr. Warfield seems to think that it is persecution that the Compulsory Work Bureau is doing in trying to make the handsome Royal do something not only for the community but for himself for that matter. Governor Warfield thinks that he and his family are being criticized. Well Governor Warfield is quite right. The "Ex" has been criticized for years, but The Warfield had not sense of humor enough to realize it, and now his family are coming in for it good and plenty. Despite the great "Ex," Royal has got to go to work, and that's an end to it. So Mr. Warfield had best take his medicine with good grace.

RECORD

s: Philadelphia, Pa.

MA

Pierre Monteux.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY AND ITS CONDUCTOR?

A Volcanic Upheaval in the 37-Year-Old Organization.

OUT THE OLD—IN THE NEW

Eight Pre-eminent Men With Whose Names Gossip is Rife.

HERR DOCTOR KARL MUCK, with his entertaining humoresque based on "The Star-Spangled Banner," and his Swiss citizenship (which, by the bye, the Administration of Switzerland doesn't much seem disposed to defend), is at last happily retired for some months.

With him, now, too, in the curious tangle of Boston Symphony affairs, has gone the civil war veteran and music devotee, Major Henry Lee Higginson; he, obviously, not to an internment camp.

Higginson and His Committee.

Major Higginson founded the orchestra 37 years ago; and it has been his enthusiasm and his financial support which have made of that body of players the foremost organization of its kind in the world. Now he is an old man; and evidently too much upset by the Muck business to follow the company's fortunes further. Luckily, though, he has found a splendid committee of citizens into whose able hands to entrust the high tradition; so that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue hereafter to delight us as before.

But first must come a new conductor. The Boston director's stand is so important and imposing a position that practically no musician could afford to refuse it. Yet the name of the first man we mention is said absolutely (both in the public prints and in private gossip) to have been offered the place, and to have declined. This is our own Leopold Stokowski.

However, when we remember that Stokowski has a long-term unexpired contract with the Philadelphia Orchestra, and that he must be rather pleasantly settled here, the reported declination does not seem so strange.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Next in order of interest with us is Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Also nearly a Philadelphian now (he lives in Bryn Mawr), Gabrilowitsch seems, on the face of it, to be the favorite in the Boston succession. He has lately proved his orchestra-directing ability; and Philadelphia will wish him every luck in his candidacy—if it happens that he really is a candidate.

Americanly Inclined.

Neither of these two men are American-born; but they come nearer to it than any of the other musicians spoken of in this matter. Both have married American wives; and Gabrilowitsch's wife is the daughter of certainly one of the most characteristic Americans we have yet developed.

Hardly necessary to mention, no German, Austrian, Bulgarian or Turk need apply for this job. The allies, though, and a neutral or so are well represented in the lists. France leads with two, Pierre Monteux and Vincent D'Indy. We already know Monteux fairly well; and some of us have even watched D'Indy wield the director's stick.

England's name is to the fore with Sir Henry J. Wood. Russia has Rachmaninoff. Italy—Arturo Toscanini. And finally Switzerland enters (as it were) Ernest Bloch.

A stirring roster of names—that! No musician or music-lover can well read through them without a bit of a stir. Several of the men are composers of approximately the first rank, all are world-notable in some department of their art.

But we in Philadelphia could undoubtedly do worse than applaud for Ossip Gabrilowitsch. May his name come up in the cards!

F. H.

m HERALD

lress: New York City

e

APR 15 1918

HEAR MR. TOSCANINI WILL LEAD BOSTON ORCHESTRA

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Tuesday.—Frederick P. Cabot, one of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when asked this evening regarding a statement in Musical America, published to-day to the effect that Arturo Toscanini, formerly leading Italian conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, now in Italy, has been offered the conductorship of the Boston Symphony, refused to confirm or deny it.

"We have said repeatedly," he declared, "that when we have anything to announce it will be published broadcast throughout the country. No one person or publication has any authority to make any statement regarding the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra unless it comes from the trustees and they have never given such a statement.

"For the present we have nothing further to say other than what was contained in our first statement when we took charge of the orchestra." Sir Henry Wood, of London, also has been mentioned as a likely choice. Mr. Cabot also declined to discuss this report.

From PUBLIC LEDGER PRESS
Address Philadelphia, Pa. Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 9 - MAY 12 1918

continuation

A New Era in Music

THE retirement of Henry L. Higginso as the sole patron and financial sup porter of the Boston Symphony Orchestr is more than a retirement of a Maecena from control of something that his taste and his money called into being; it is the close of one period in the development c music in America and the beginning of a new era. Just what the character of the organization, which is to be supported by a group of prominent citizens in Boston, may be is not significant save in so far as the reorganized Boston Symphony Orchestra now takes its place among the organizations which, in this country, are now representative of the broader musical interests of the centers in which they exist and not alone the whim of the personality nor the purse of any one individual. This is true even in the case of the New York Symphony Orchestra, endowed by Mr. Flagler, and the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, of Chicago, whose endowment is a memorial to the great conductor whose name it bears, and also representative of the collective efforts of a large body of Chicagoans who banded together to put the orchestra on its feet financially and give it a permanent home. The other orchestras, moreover, now in being throughout the country, however varied their methods and their management, all represent a decided effort to rally to their support the musical elements in the community as a whole, and in this sense they reveal a very democratic tendency. In addition, within the last few years, irrespective of the war, the movement to develop an American feeling has been most marked.

This American attitude, which has been conspicuously a feature of the policy of the Philadelphia Orchestra directors ever since the founding of the Orchestra Association, will gain force with the years. Now that the Boston Symphony Orchestra practically puts itself on the same plane and with the same plan of arousing the interest of the many and not the few in its management, it can be seen that the old order of things is now gone for good. This old order, which was represented brilliantly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its founder, was based, fundamentally, on the idea that music in America was an exotic, scarcely "naturalized from Europe," to use a scientific term, and that this exotic, instead of being the outcome of the efforts of the community, should be given more or less free to the community through the munificence of some wealthy patron of the arts. Along with this exotic idea also went the idea that it was absolutely necessary to have the European cachet over everything. The conductor must be imported and most of the musicians. That they should be a part of the local or national life or have any sympathy with it was not considered important. In fact, it was considered so unimportant that, at its best, however worthy of all praise the Boston Symphony organization may have been as decreed by Mr. Higginson, the group of musicians, in a way, suggested high-class helots in music. Indeed, though the percentage of alienism varied from year to year, the kind of thing that Mr. Higginson built up was the sort of thing that existed in imperial Rome when the technically trained Greeks became the cultural entertainers of their Roman masters, who had the desire for the best but were perfectly willing that in these matters the outsiders should do the interpreting, leaving to them the pleasant position of the determining and appreciative patrons. Of course, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra there was a more serious side to the problem; and the munificence of Mr. Higginson, every one must admit, came at a critical time (1881) in the history of the development of music in America, and was of the most stimulating and pervasive character. Since his determination to have "the best music, played in the best way, by the best," resulted in a world-famous organization which, curiously enough—and money does not alone explain it—quite met the challenge of Europe and surpassed it.

However, long before the issue of the war and the bitter alienism of Doctor Muck made the continuance of the Boston Symphony impossible along the old lines it was very plain that, despite everything that could be said in its favor, the Higginson idea belonged to the past and not to the future. The very attitude of the patron in the Muck controversy revealed the fact that he refused to see the era that impended. This was natural and excusable; but the logic of events is too much for any one in these cataclysmic days. For all that Mr. Higginson did those who believe in the newer development of music in America will be eternally grateful. He did something that was rare when he began it and had qualities of rarity after thirty-seven years. But even if the war had not hastened it, events were making rapid headway which would have compelled a change in Boston Symphony methods along less artificial and more national lines. Of this the new organization is symptomatic.

RAKHMANINOV MAY CONDUCT BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Out of List of Available Candidates Famous Russian Composer Would Meet All Requirements, Organization Official Says. No American Has Been Considered.

Boston continues to be very much agitated over the question as to who will lead the Symphony Orchestra next Winter, with Dr. Karl Muck interned; and the musical world throughout the country seems little less interested as to its choice. The most recent "successor" to be named is the eminent Russian composer and conductor, Sergei Vassilievitch Rakhmaninov.

Rakhmaninov, it would appear from the list of available candidates, would most nearly meet the requirements of this wonderful orchestra. For many years the Boston Symphony has passed through season after season with practically no change in its personnel. It has been brought to the point where a director is more or less a figure head, merely necessary to infuse into the musicians, and through them to the audience, his own personality. Rakhmaninov, of all the candidates named, would meet this requirement, and more than that, he would be a picturesque figure as a conductor.

It is said that there is an increasing possibility of his being chosen for the post. No present American conductor has been given any consideration for the post, according to a statement from a prominent official of the orchestra. Before the name of Rakhmaninov was considered so seriously, the choice seemed to lie between Toscanini, the Italian conductor, and Sir Henry Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, of London.

Both Toscanini and Sir Henry would be acceptable from the personal viewpoint, but the erratic temperament of both these men has been thoroughly weighed and has caused no little fear as to what might be the result of placing them in charge of the orchestra, where such pacific conditions have existed for so many years, only to be broken with the interning of Dr. Muck.

In age, Mr. Rakhmaninov, at the beginning of his forty-sixth year, stands in the prime of his powers. Being of cosmopolitan habits, and a man who has made many journeys and long sojourns in various European cities and in the United States as well, it is considered that he would readily adapt himself to a new environment.

As a cultivated man of the world, accustomed to diverse contacts, Rakhmaninov would seem to most nearly fill the position with that same dignity so striking in the personality of Dr. Muck. As composer, his symphonies, tone poems—like the familiar "Isle of the Dead"—piano pieces, and songs, have all set him high in contemporary music. As pianist, he is a noted virtuoso on two Continents. As conductor he has gained experience and prestige, these twenty years, in the opera houses and concert halls of Petrograd and Moscow.

Indeed, it is said when, during his visit to the United States in 1909, he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his tone-poem, the men, from hard experience mistrustful of composing-conductors, quickly discovered in Mr. Rakhmaninov, a leader of signal ability; while his hearers were strongly impressed.

It is further said of Rakhmaninov that from the outset of the present war he was zealous for Russian participation; and that, until the revolution and the German conquest began, he abounded in good works for his country. If Boston selects the Russian composer as its conductor it can be assured in advanced that it will meet fully the approval of the friends of the orchestra in Philadelphia.

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season was given on Saturday evening, May 4, at which the benefactor of the orchestra for the thirty-seven years of its existence, Henry Lee Higginson, presented formally his resignation. The orchestra will, hereafter, be conducted by a recently formed association, consisting of nine public-spirited citizens of Boston, who have constituted themselves a board of directors, and upon whom will fall the task of financiering the orchestra and chosing the new director.

Of almost equal interest with the withdrawal of Mr. Higginson, the financial head of the orchestra, is the resignation of Charles A. Ellis, who has been manager of the orchestra since 1885. It is reported that henceforth Mr. Ellis will devote himself entirely to the exploiting of singers and musicians, a work in which he has also been engaged for many years, having under his direction such eminent artists as Geraldine Farrar, Nellie Melba, Fritz Kreisler, and many others. An effort is being made by the new management of the orchestra to have Mr. Ellis reconsider his resignation.

Following the internment of Dr. Muck, the remaining concerts of the season have been directed by the assistant conductor, Mr. Ernst Schmidt, and the series of Pops, always a Spring feature of music in Boston, which began on Monday evening, May 6, and which will be continued until the end of June, are being conducted by Agide Jacchia.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony took place on October 22, 1881, with George Henschel as conductor, who remained in that position for three years, and was followed by Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Emil Paur, again Gericke, then Dr. Muck, Gustav Mahler, Max Fiedler and finally Dr. Muck.

AMERICAN
New York City.
MAY 19 1918

By MAX SMITH.

IN criticising the interpretation of music, especially within the realm of symphonic concerts, the question of tempo often forms an important standard of measurement—more often, perhaps, than it should. We say that the conductor adopted too fast or too slow a pace. But usually we base our opinion on the instinctive impression received at the moment and forget not only that details of accent and rhythm and dynamics affect the impression but also that our own state of mind as listeners is as subject to changes of mood as is the state of mind of the man at the baton.

A case in point is the performance recently under Ossip Gabrilowitsch's direction of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. One critic who evidently was thoroughly sincere in his opinion and quite sure of his ground asserted that the conductor's tempi, except in the final movement, were "somewhat too slow," but admitted that he "maintained them with an alertness and elasticity of rhythm that kept them buoyant and effectively banished any suggestion of dragging." Nor was that critic alone in holding this view. A musician of high standing in the community and of good judgment voiced virtually the same idea. For him most of Gabrilowitsch's tempi also had been "too slow."

Now, there is only one way of making accurate observations regarding tempo, and that is with watch in hand. Such observations, it may be admitted, have no profound significance. But they offer rather interesting data of comparison, and at times serve as a corrective for off-hand and erroneous appraisements.

The writer of this made careful metronomic notes while listening to Gabrilowitsch's reading of the Seventh Symphony in order that he might compare them with the memoranda he had of other conductors, of Fiedler, Dr. Muck, Mahler and Stransky. And according to those tokens the Russian pianist's tempi cannot be described by any means as "too slow" if one excepts the Trio of the Scherzo, which he expanded into an even more dolefully retarded gait than did Gustav Mahler, upon whose strongly dramatic and electrifying interpretation he presumably had tried to model his reading.

In one respect the critic quoted above was correct. Gabrilowitsch adopted a tempo in the final movement exactly in keeping with that of Josef Stransky. His pace was measured by eighty-eight half notes to the minute as against Fiedler's eighty-two to the minute, Dr. Muck's eighty to the minute and Mahler's seventy-six to the minute or (on another occasion) sixty to the minute. In every other movement, however, save in the afore cited Trio of the Scherzo, Gabrilowitsch showed a tendency to be too fast rather than too slow. The "vivace" in six-eight time of the opening Allegro he took at the rate of 112 beats to the minute, whereas both Mahler and Fiedler fell considerably behind that record. (Incidentally, it may be observed that Weingartner, in his book of the Beethoven symphonies, warns against taking [illegible] too fast and re[illegible] and clarity [illegible] Allegretto [illegible] shade [illegible] Muck, Fiedler and Stransky. The three last-named conductors, by the way, hastened their stride slightly with the entrance of the beautiful A major melody on page thirty-six of the Partitur, while both Mahler and Gabrilowitsch preserved their original tempo in accordance with Weingartner's ideas. At the close of the movement, though, Gabrilowitsch had reduced his rate of progress by four beats to the minute, fulfilling in this the suggestion of Weingartner.

With 120 measures to the minute (Weingartner recommends 116-120), Gabrilowitsch was again not a bit "too slow" in the third movement, though Fiedler, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached 128 to the minute on January 12, 1911, and Josef Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic Society, spurted up to 136 to the minute on January 10, 1915. Mahler was content with 104 to the minute on one occasion and with 112 on another, and Dr. Muck's tempo tallied absolutely with Gabrilowitsch's.

It was only in the Trio of the Scherzo, as already indicated, that the Russian aspirant for honors retarded his progress inordinately. Weingartner proposes here 60 measures to the minute, and this approximately agrees with Dr. Muck's view, to judge from my notes. But Gabrilowitsch the other night held his orchestra down to 40 as against Mahler's 48 and 44, Fiedler's 49 and Stransky's 52.

That Gabrilowitsch adopted a faster tempo in the Finale than Fiedler, Mahler and Muck has already been pointed out. There can be no doubt on that point. How easily the listener may be misled by his appraisement of tempo, however, if he does not check his sensations with a watch, Weingartner shows interestingly in his remarks regarding this movement. "I have had strange experiences with the Finale," he writes. "For though I took it in slower time than any conductor of importance who has come under my observation, yet everywhere was I either praised or blamed for my especially fast tempo. I can only explain this phenomenon in one way, namely, that my quiet pace gave the players an opportunity to develop greater dramatic intensity, and consequently greater clarity, and that the impression of power which this movement made in my interpretation was mistaken for an impression of speed. As a matter of fact this movement is marked 'Allegro con brio,' not 'Vivace' or 'Presto,' a point that is often overlooked. Decidedly, therefore, the tempo should not be taken too fast."

Among the various charitable undertakings which the war has brought forth none ought to appeal more to professional musicians and lovers of music than the noble enterprise represented by the American Friends of Musicians in France. Already six or seven of the largest American cities have formed organizations to further the cause which the promoters had in mind, and plans are now being arranged to raise as much money as possible during the Summer months for the impoverished musicians of France and of Belgium.

With this end in view the new society, of which Walter Damrosch is the head, proposes to give a series of Summer concerts at such fashionable watering places as Bar Harbor, Newport, Gloucester, Southampton and Oyster Bay. The musicians who have volunteered to take part anywhere and at any time in these performances include George Harris, Jr., Ethel Leginska, Mischa Levitski, Carlos Salszedo, Lorraine Wyman, Rudolph Ganz, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Rogers, Marcia van Dresser, John Powell, Tom Dobson and the members of the Flonzaley Quartet. New Yorkers interested in the movement are Mrs. George Montgomery Tuttle, Mrs. J. West Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler, Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Mr. and Mrs. James M. Beck, Reginald de Koven, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Garrison Villard, Mrs. Edwin T. Rice, Miss Georgina Schuyler, Robert Underwood Johnson, Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, and Mrs. Frederic Tams.

rom PUBLIC LEDGER
ddress Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 9 - 19

A New Era in Music

THE retirement of Henry L. Higginson as the sole patron and financial supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is more than a retirement of a Maecenas from control of something that his taste and his money called into being; it is the close of one period in the development of music in America and the beginning of a new era. Just what the character of the organization, which is to be supported by a group of prominent citizens in Boston, may be is not significant save in so far as the reorganized Boston Symphony Orchestra now takes its place among the organizations which, in this country, are now representative of the broader musical interests of the centers in which they exist and not alone the whim of the personality nor the purse of any one individual. This is true even in the case of the New York Symphony Orchestra, endowed by Mr. Flagler, and the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, of Chicago, whose endowment is a memorial to the great conductor whose name it bears, and also representative of the collective efforts of a large body of Chicagoans who banded together to put the orchestra on its feet financially and give it a permanent home. The other orchestras, moreover, now in being throughout the country, however varied their methods and their management, all represent a decided effort to rally to their support the musical elements in the community as a whole, and in this sense they reveal a very democratic tendency. In addition, within the last few years, irrespective of the war, the movement to develop an American feeling has been most marked.

This American attitude, which has been conspicuously a feature of the policy of the Philadelphia Orchestra directors ever since the founding of the Orchestra Association, will gain force with the years. Now that the Boston Symphony Orchestra practically puts itself on the same plane and with the same plan of arousing the interest of the many and not the few in its management, it can be seen that the old order of things is now gone for good. This old order, which was represented brilliantly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its founder, was based, fundamentally, on the idea that music in America was an exotic, scarcely "naturalized from Europe," to use a scientific term, and that this exotic, instead of being the outcome of the efforts of the community, should be given more or less free to the community through the munificence of some wealthy patron of the arts. Along with this exotic idea also went the idea that it was absolutely necessary to have the European cachet over everything. The conductor must be imported and most of the musicians. That they should be a part of the local or national life or have any sympathy with it was not considered important. In fact, it was considered so unimportant that, at its best, however worthy of all praise the Boston Symphony organization may have been as decreed by Mr. Higginson, the group of musicians, in a way, suggested high-class helots in music. Indeed, though the percentage of alienism varied from year to year, the kind of thing that Mr. Higginson built up was the sort of thing that existed in imperial Rome when the technically trained Greeks became the cultural entertainers of their Roman masters, who had the desire for the best but were perfectly willing that in these matters the outsiders should do the interpreting, leaving to them the pleasant position of the determining and appreciative patrons. Of course, in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra there was a more serious side to the problem; and the munificence of Mr. Higginson, every one must admit, came at a critical time (1881) in the history of the development of music in America, and was of the most stimulating and pervasive character. Since his determination to have "the best music, played in the best way, by the best," resulted in a world-famous organization which, curiously enough—and money does not alone explain it—quite met the challenge of Europe and surpassed it.

However, long before the issue of the war and the bitter alienism of Doctor Muck made the continuance of the Boston Symphony impossible along the old lines it was very plain that, despite everything that could be said in its favor, the Higginson idea belonged to the past and not to the future. The very attitude of the patron in the Muck controversy revealed the fact that he refused to see the era that impended. This was natural and excusable; but the logic of events is too much for any one in these cataclysmic days. For all that Mr. Higginson did those who believe in the newer development of music in America will be eternally grateful. He did something that was rare when he began it and had qualities of rarity after thirty-seven years. But even if the war had not hastened it, events were making rapid headway which would have compelled a change in Boston Symphony methods along less artificial and more national lines. Of this the new organization is symptomatic.

Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 1 2 1918

continuation

RAKHMANINOV MAY CONDUCT BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Out of List of Available Candidates Famous Russian Composer Would Meet All Requirements, Organization Official Says. No American Has Been Considered.

Boston continues to be very much agitated over the question as to who will lead the Symphony Orchestra next Winter, with Dr. Karl Muck interned; and the musical world throughout the country seems little less interested as to its choice. The most recent "successor" to be named is the eminent Russian composer and conductor, Sergei Vassilievitch Rakhmaninov.

Rakhmaninov, it would appear from the list of available candidates, would most nearly meet the requirements of this wonderful orchestra. For many years the Boston Symphony has passed through season after season with practically no change in its personnel. It has been brought to the point where a director is more or less a figure head, merely necessary to infuse into the musicians, and through them to the audience, his own personality. Rakhmaninov, of all the candidates named, would meet this requirement, and more than that, he would be a picturesque figure as a conductor.

It is said that there is an increasing possibility of his being chosen for the post. No present American conductor has been given any consideration for the post, according to a statement from a prominent official of the orchestra. Before the name of Rakhmaninov was considered so seriously, the choice seemed to lie between Toscanini, the Italian conductor, and Sir Henry Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, of London.

Both Toscanini and Sir Henry would be acceptable from the personal viewpoint, but the erratic temperament of both these men has been thoroughly weighed and has caused no little fear as to what might be the result of placing them in charge of the orchestra, where such pacific conditions have existed for so many years, only to be broken with the interning of Dr. Muck.

In age, Mr. Rakhmaninov, at the beginning of his forty-sixth year, stands in the prime of his powers. Being of cosmopolitan habits, and a man who has made many journeys and long sojourns in various European cities and in the United States as well, it is considered that he would readily adapt himself to a new environment.

As a cultivated man of the world, accustomed to diverse contacts, Rakhmaninov would seem to most nearly fill the position with that same dignity so striking in the personality of Dr. Muck. As composer, his symphonies, tone poems—like the familiar "Isle of the Dead"—piano pieces, and songs, have all set him high in contemporary music. As pianist, he is a noted virtuoso on two Continents. As conductor he has gained experience and prestige, these twenty years, in the opera houses and concert halls of Petrograd and Moscow.

Indeed, it is said when, during his visit to the United States in 1909, he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his tone-poem, the men, from hard experience mistrustful of composing-conductors, quickly discovered in Mr. Rakhmaninov, a leader of signal ability; while his hearers were strongly impressed.

It is further said of Rakhmaninov that from the outset of the present war he was zealous for Russian participation; and that, until the revolution and the German conquest began, he abounded in good works for his country. If Boston selects the Russian composer as its conductor it can be assured in advanced that it will meet fully the approval of the friends of the orchestra in Philadelphia.

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season was given on Saturday evening, May 4, at which the benefactor of the orchestra for the thirty-seven years of its existence, Henry Lee Higginson, presented formally his resignation. The orchestra will, hereafter, be conducted by a recently formed association, consisting of nine public-spirited citizens of Boston, who have constituted themselves a board of directors, and upon whom will fall the task of financiering the orchestra and chosing the new director.

Of almost equal interest with the withdrawal of Mr. Higginson, the financial head of the orchestra, is the resignation of Charles A. Ellis, who has been manager of the orchestra since 1885. It is reported that henceforth Mr. Ellis will devote himself entirely to the exploiting of singers and musicians, a work in which he has also been engaged for many years, having under his direction such eminent artists as Geraldine Farrar, Nellie Melba, Fritz Kreisler, and many others. An effort is being made by the new management of the orchestra to have Mr. Ellis reconsider his resignation.

Following the internment of Dr. Muck, the remaining concerts of the season have been directed by the assistant conductor, Mr. Ernst Schmidt, and the series of Pops, always a Spring feature of music in Boston, which began on Monday evening, May 6, and which will be continued until the end of June, are being conducted by Agide Jacchia.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony took place on October 22, 1881, with George Henschel as conductor, who remained in that position for three years, and was followed by Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Emil Paur, again Gericke, then Dr. Muck, Gustav Mahler, Max Fiedler and finally Dr. Muck.

AMERICAN
New York City.
MAY 1 2 1918

By MAX SMITH.

IN criticising the interpretation of music, especially within the realm of symphonic concerts, the question of tempo often forms an important standard of measurement—more often, perhaps, than it should. We say that the conductor adopted too fast or too slow a pace. But usually we base our opinion on the instinctive impression received at the moment and forget not only that details of accent and rhythm and dynamics affect the impression but also that our own state of mind as listeners is as subject to changes of mood as is the state of mind of the man at the baton.

A case in point is the performance recently under Ossip Gabrilowitsch's direction of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. One critic who evidently was thoroughly sincere in his opinion and quite sure of his ground asserted that the conductor's tempi, except in the final movement, were "somewhat too slow," but admitted that he "maintained them with an alertness and elasticity of rhythm that kept them buoyant and effectively banished any suggestion of dragging." Nor was that critic alone in holding this view. A musician of high standing in the community and of good judgment voiced virtually the same idea. For him most of Gabrilowitsch's tempi also had been "too slow."

Now, there is only one way of making accurate observations regarding tempo, and that is with watch in hand. Such observations, it may be admitted, have no profound significance. But they offer rather interesting data of comparison, and at times serve as a corrective for off-hand and erroneous appraisements.

The writer of this made careful metronomic notes while listening to Gabrilowitsch's reading of the Seventh Symphony in order that he might compare them with the memoranda he had of other conductors, of Fiedler, Dr. Muck, Mahler and Stransky. And according to those tokens the Russian pianist's tempi cannot be described by any means as "too slow" if one excepts the Trio of the Scherzo, which he expanded into an even more dolefully retarded gait than did Gustav Mahler, upon whose strongly dramatic and electrifying interpretation he presumably had tried to model his reading.

In one respect the critic quoted above was correct. Gabrilowitsch adopted a tempo in the final movement exactly in keeping with that of Josef Stransky. His pace was measured by eighty-eight half notes to the minute as against Fiedler's eighty-two to the minute, Dr. Muck's eighty to the minute and Mahler's seventy-six to the minute or (on another occasion) sixty to the minute. In every other movement, however, save in the afore cited Trio of the Scherzo, Gabrilowitsch showed a tendency to be too fast rather than too slow. The "Vivace" in six-eight time of the opening Allegro he took at the rate of 112 beats to the minute, whereas both Mahler and Fiedler fell considerably behind that record. (Incidentally, it may be observed that Weingartner, in his book of the Beethoven Symphonies, warns against taking [illegible] too fast and re[illegible] and clarity [illegible] Allegretto [illegible] a shade [illegible] Muck, Fiedler and Stransky. The three last-named conductors, by the way, hastened their stride slightly with the entrance of the beautiful A major melody on page thirty-six of the Partitur, while both Mahler and Gabrilowitsch preserved their original tempo in accordance with Weingartner's ideas. At the close of the movement, though, Gabrilowitsch had reduced his rate of progress by four beats to the minute, fulfilling in this the suggestion of Weingartner.

With 120 measures to the minute (Weingartner recommends 116-120), Gabrilowitsch was again not a bit "too slow" in the third movement, though Fiedler, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reached 128 to the minute on January 12, 1911, and Josef Stransky, conductor of the Philharmonic Society, spurted up to 136 to the minute on January 10, 1915. Mahler was content with 104 to the minute on one occasion and with 112 on another, and Dr. Muck's tempo tallied absolutely with Gabrilowitsch's.

It was only in the Trio of the Scherzo, as already indicated, that the Russian aspirant for honors retarded his progress inordinately. Weingartner proposes here 60 measures to the minute, and this approximately agrees with Dr. Muck's view, to judge from my notes. But Gabrilowitsch the other night held his orchestra down to 40 as against Mahler's 48 and 44, Fiedler's 49 and Stransky's 52.

That Gabrilowitsch adopted a faster tempo in the Finale than Fiedler, Mahler and Muck has already been pointed out. There can be no doubt on that point. How easily the listener may be misled by his appraisement of tempo, however, if he does not check his sensations with a watch, Weingartner shows interestingly in his remarks regarding this movement. "I have had strange experiences with the Finale," he writes. "For though I took it in slower time than any conductor of importance who has come under my observation, yet everywhere was I either praised or blamed for my especially fast tempo. I can only explain this phenomenon in one way, namely, that my quiet pace gave the players an opportunity to develop greater dramatic intensity, and consequently greater clarity, and that the impression of power which this move[illegible] made in my interpretation was mistaken for an impression of speed. As a matter of fact this movement is marked 'Allegro con brio,' not 'Vivace' or 'Presto,' a point that is often overlooked. Decidedly, therefore, the tempo should not be taken too fast."

Among the various charitable undertakings which the war has brought forth none ought to appeal more to professional musicians and lovers of music than the noble enterprise represented by the American Friends of Musicians in France. Already six or seven of the largest American cities have formed organizations to further the cause which the promoters had in mind, and plans are now being arranged to raise as much money as possible during the Summer months for the impoverished musicians of France and of Belgium.

With this end in view the new society, of which Walter Damrosch is the head, proposes to give a series of Summer concerts at such fashionable watering places as Bar Harbor, Newport, Gloucester, Southampton and Oyster Bay. The musicians who have volunteered to take part anywhere and at any time in these performances include George Harris, Jr., Ethel Leginska, Mischa Levitski, Carlos Salszedo, Lorraine Wyman, Rudolph Ganz, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Rogers, Marcia van Dresser, John Powell, Tom Dobson and the members of the Flonzaley Quartet. New Yorkers interested in the movement are Mrs. George Montgomery Tuttle, Mrs. J. West Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler, Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Mr. and Mrs. James M. Beck, Reginald de Koven, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Garrison Villard, Mrs. Edwin T. Rice, Miss Georgina Schuyler, Robert Underwood Johnson, Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, and Mrs. Frederic Tams.

TIGHT BINDING

From TOWN & COUNTRY
Address: New York City
Date MAY 20 1918

Boston and Music

THE swan song of the musical season has been sung with the closing of the week of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Galli-Curci's concert, and last but not least the final concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At the Friday afternoon rehearsal as well as at the Saturday evening concert, even in these busy wartimes, were gathered at Symphony Hall not only all of Boston's beauty and her chivalry but large slices of every other element. Because of war conditions generally, because of the very mixed (nationally) personnel of the orchestra, because of the very sensational culmination of various accusations in the arrest of Dr. Muck, the leader, on the charge of espionage; and finally because of the concerts being the last under Major Higginson's personally conducted management and support, these last performances held a unique place in the annals of the orchestra and were events unequalled in its more than thirty-seven years' existence. At Friday afternoon's "rehearsal" when, at the intermission, Major Higginson rose from his seat to go out into the corridors, there was tremendous clapping and cheering and a speech was hoped for, but the veteran organizer and supporter of this greatest of orchestras saw fit to wait until the last performance on Saturday evening to take leave publicly and formally both of the orchestra and the public. As he appeared on the platform he was literally overwhelmed with applause from both musicians and listeners. It fell fittingly to Mayor Peters to voice the appreciation of the citizens of Boston. Mr. Schmidt, who has been conducting since Dr. Muck's internment, came in for his share of applause, and deservedly so, for in spite of trying conditions and unusual difficulties, he has made good in every way. Never was the orchestra heard to greater advantage than in those last two concerts when the piece de resistance of the program, the Eroica Symphony, was given without a flaw. The question of greatest interest now in Boston's musical circles is "Who shall be Dr. Muck's successor?"

RECORD
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 22 1918

AT MAJOR HIGGINSON'S MEMORABLE FAREWELL

"Founder and Sustainer" of the Orchestra Has Moving Reception.

PLAY FAVORITE SYMPHONY

Mayor Peters, of Boston, Responds On Part of the Audience.

AT THE last concert of the season, Saturday evening, May 4, Major Higginson said a public farewell to the great Boston Orchestra of which he was founder and of which he has so long been "sustainer" as well.

It was an extremely moving occasion. The entire audience in Symphony Hall rose and stood while the orchestra played a fanfare, and continued to stand while Major Higginson spoke.

A Wonderful Occasion.

The first part of his short and touching address was to the audience. Then he turned and mounted the conductor's stand and addressed the players in the band. It was all very fine; very simple and dignified; and therefore, of course, the more impressive. The roar of sympathetic applause which greeted his deep-felt reasons for retiring (his advanced age, as every body knows, and the managerial complications brought on by the war) presently found an articulate voice. Mayor Andrew Peters also climbed upon the platform and thanked Major Higginson in unmistakable terms for the service he has done music in this country in general, and Boston in particular.

Then Major Higginson replied with another few words, and moved away from the platform; the good-will of the audience being very obviously with him. The

...r of Muck and the Major's retirement has been a mighty troublesome business on the whole; but the scene in Symphony Hall that farewell Saturday must have taken all bitterness out of the minds of even the most partisan.

The symphony for that final performance was Beethoven's "Eroica," as a tribute to Major Higginson's fondness, it being his favorite symphony.

From Vreeland's
Address: New York City.
MAY 22 1918

ARTISTIC RESPONSIBILITY

LEADING up to the question of undivided responsibility in artistic affairs, an editorial writer in the Globe has some wise and gracious words to say concerning the venerable Major Higginson and his famous symphony orchestra. We quote the editorial as follows:

"When the venerable Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded and for thirty-seven years sustained single-handed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took public farewell of that orchestra at the closing concert of its season Saturday night, a situation resulted which inevitably must appeal to all who were present or, being absent, have heard of it. Nothing less than the best orchestra in this country, if not in the whole world, grew out of Major Higginson's enthusiasm, generosity, and steadfastness. For a generation the orchestra has exhibited the highest type of orchestral playing not only to the people of Boston but, through its tours, to the people of many other cities. It has constantly played the best standard music in the best way, and it has been a diligent missioner for worthy new music. Devoted to an ideal so lofty, it has proved the most ennobling influence in our musical life, our highest inspiration in tonal art.

"Major Higginson in saying in the course of his farewell talk that its concerts had been to him 'a great joy, not only because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future,' furnishes pathetic and convincing proof of what the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to mean to the general public. It is regrettable that the last year Major Higginson was to stand behind the orchestra he cherished should have been marked by troubles foreign to the serene realm of art and, one can guess, harrowing to the venerable founder.

"Fortunately the orchestra has survived a situation which for a time threatened to kill it. For the gentlemen of Boston who as trustees will now endeavor to carry on the work hitherto devolving on Major Higginson alone, the latter bespoke from the players and the public the same devotion and support they had accorded him, and furthermore he avowed his belief that to achieve great and permanent orchestras it is necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success. That dictum is a true pearl of wisdom which the trustees of the orchestra should treasure jealously and observe scrupulously. Of course the conductor should be worthy of such responsibility. As soon as he proves not to be the trustees should depose him. But the greatest conductor on earth cannot fully express himself artistically without such undivided responsibility. Otherwise there is dissension, anxiety, preoccupation with questions have no direct bearing on art, and at last confusion and ruin.

239

"Most of the men who have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been artistically entirely worthy of such responsibility. Otherwise the orchestra could not have risen to its high estate. If the trustees now follow the advice implied in Major Higginson's dictum they will obtain, as apparently they can, a conductor of the first order, and then give him an absolutely untrammelled hand."

From STANDARD UNION
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Address:
Date MAY 24 1918

ENGLISHMAN TO LEAD THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

884

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its usual series of concerts next season, Brooklyn audiences will see for the first time a titled Englishman as conductor. A dispatch from London to-day announces Sir Joseph Henry Wood has accepted the leadership of that famous musical organization. "He may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers," the dispatch says.

Sir Henry Wood, who will take the place left by the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck on his internment as an enemy alien, was born in London, March 3, 1869. When but 10 years old, he became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. In 1889 he became a conductor after having given organ recitals for several years. He has been constantly before the English public since as director of some of the greatest orchestras in England.

TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
MAY 24 1918

ENGLISHMAN TO TAKE DR. MUCK'S PLACE IN BOSTON

Sir Henry Wood to Succeed German Alien as Leader of Symphony Orchestra.

LONG FAMOUS AS BRITISH MUSICAL LEADER.

LONDON, Friday.—The Daily Telegraph has announced that Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Telegraph remarks that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Doktor Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Doktor Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence on October 30 last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 13, 1869, and when ten years old became assistant organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 18... after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the "Parsifal" tableaux.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

From TIMES
Address: New York City
Date

SIR HENRY J. WOOD TO SUCCEED DR. MUCK

Noted British Conductor Accepts Offer of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Dr. Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence, R. I., on Oct. 30, last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when 10 years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889, after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended many musical festivals, the last of which was the Parsifal Tableux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

EVENING WORLD
Address: New York City.
MAY 24 19

SIR HENRY JOSEPH WOOD SUCCEEDS DR. MUCK AS BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEA

SIR HENRY J. WOOD

Briton to Take Place of Conduct Now Held as an Enemy Alien.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Hen Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers." Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck.

From EVENING GLOBE
Address: New York City
Date

SIR HENRY WOOD MAY NOT LEAD BOSTON ORCHESTRA

LONDON, May 24. — Although the Daily Telegraph reports that Sir Henry Joseph Wood had accepted an offer to become Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Daily News quotes Sir Henry as saying that he has not yet decided whether he would accept the offer. Sir Henry, the paper adds, will not reach a decision in the matter until next week.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the "Parsifal" tableaux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

n EVENING SUN
ress: New York City
MAY 24 19

MUCK'S SUCCESSOR NAMED.

Sir Henry Wood to Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry J. Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, has accepted an offer to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was announced to-day.

Sir Henry J. Wood will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, who is interned as an alien enemy for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry became a conductor when only 20 years old. At 10 years of age he became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury, and gave recitals for a number of years.

n CITIZEN
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAY 23 191

Dr. Muck's kind neighbors knew that he had a powerful wireless outfit in his home, in spite of Federal prohibition, but with characteristic neighborly kindness they refrained from mentioning it to the authorities.—Rochester

From POST 131
Address New York City
Date MAY 24 1918

Although the London Daily News says that Sir Henry Joseph Wood has not yet accepted the offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is to be hoped he will do so. In England he has long been rated as one of the best orchestral leaders of the period, nor need Americans accept him on faith, for he was cordially acclaimed in New York more than a decade ago when he came over to conduct some of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. Having been born in 1870, he is still in the best vigor of his manhood, and his art of interpretation has had ample time to mature since he began, in 1895, to conduct the Promenade Concerts in the new Queen's Hall. At these concerts he demonstrated that, as Fuller Maitland has remarked, "good things well done will attract large audiences by their own inherent strength, notwithstanding all the advertising methods by which other compositions are forced down the throats of the public." In Boston and the cities visited by its orchestra he will appeal to audiences of the most cultivated hearers, and as his taste is catholic, there is no reason why his programmes should not appeal to everybody. As it was he who made Tchaikovsky and other Russians famous in London (his first wife was the daughter of a Russian princess), it is likely that Russian music will be specially featured by him. He may also be counted upon to make some of the best English music known here, and his record shows he does not neglect American composers.

m AMERICAN
dress: New York City.
AY 24 1918

Wood to Lead Boston Symphony, Says London

LONDON, May 24.

SIR HENRY JOSEPH WOOD has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Dr. Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence, Rhode Island, on October 30 last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the Parsifal tableaux given at the London Colisseum in 1913.

TIGHT BINDING

om TOWN & COUNTRY
dress: New York City.
te MAY 20 1918

Boston and Music

THE swan song of the musical season has been sung with the closing of the week of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Galli-Curci's concert, and last but not least the final concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At the Friday afternoon rehearsal as well as at the Saturday evening concert, even in these busy wartimes, were gathered at Symphony Hall not only all of Boston's beauty and her chivalry but large slices of every other element. Because of war conditions generally, because of the very mixed (nationally) personnel of the orchestra, because of the very sensational culmination of various accusations in the arrest of Dr. Muck, the leader, on the charge of espionage; and finally because of the concerts being the last under Major Higginson's personally conducted management and support, these last performances held a unique place in the annals of the orchestra and were events unequalled in its more than thirty-seven years' existence. At Friday afternoon's "rehearsal" when, at the intermission, Major Higginson rose from his seat to go out into the corridors, there was tremendous clapping and cheering and a speech was hoped for, but the veteran organizer and supporter of this greatest of orchestras saw fit to wait until the last performance on Saturday evening to take leave publicly and formally both of the orchestra and the public. As he appeared on the platform he was literally overwhelmed with applause from both musicians and listeners. It fell fittingly to Mayor Peters to voice the appreciation of the citizens of Boston. Mr. Schmidt, who has been conducting since Dr. Muck's internment, came in for his share of applause, and deservedly so, for in spite of trying conditions and unusual difficulties, he has made good in every way. Never was the orchestra heard to greater advantage than in those last two concerts when the piece de resistance of the program, the Eroica Symphony, was given without a flaw. The question of greatest interest now in Boston's musical circles is "Who shall be Dr. Muck's successor?"

RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 22

AT MAJOR HIGGINSON'S MEMORABLE FAREWELL

"Founder and Sustainer" of the Orchestra Has Moving Reception.

PLAY FAVORITE SYMPHONY

Mayor Peters, of Boston, Responds On Part of the Audience.

AT THE last concert of the season, Saturday evening, May 4, Major Higginson said a public farewell to the great Boston Orchestra of which he was founder and of which he has so long been "sustainer" as well.

It was an extremely moving occasion. The entire audience in Symphony Hall rose and stood while the orchestra played a fanfare, and continued to stand while Major Higginson spoke.

A Wonderful Occasion.

The first part of his short and touching address was to the audience. Then he turned and mounted the conductor's stand and addressed the players in the band. It was all very fine; very simple and dignified; and therefore, of course, the more impressive. The roar of sympathetic applause which greeted his deep-felt reasons for retiring (his advanced age, as every body knows, and the managerial complications brought on by the war) presently found an articulate voice. Mayor Andrew Peters also climbed upon the platform and thanked Major Higginson in unmistakable terms for the service he has done music in this country in general, and Boston in particular.

Then Major Higginson replied with another few words, and moved away from the platform; the good-will of the audience being very obviously with him. The matter of Muck and the Major's retirement has been a mighty troublesome business on the whole; but the scene in Symphony Hall that farewell Saturday night must have taken all bitterness out of the minds of even the most partisan.

The symphony for that final performance was Beethoven's "Eroica," as a tribute to Major Higginson's fondness, it being his favorite symphony.

Vreeland's
s: New York City.
MAY 22 1918

ARTISTIC RESPONSIBILITY

LEADING up to the question of undivided responsibility in artistic affairs, an editorial writer in the Globe has some wise and gracious words to say concerning the venerable Major Higginson and his famous symphony orchestra. We quote the editorial as follows:

"When the venerable Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded and for thirty-seven years sustained single-handed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took public farewell of that orchestra at the closing concert of its season Saturday night, a situation resulted which inevitably must appeal to all who were present or, being absent, have heard of it. Nothing less than the best orchestra in this country, if not in the whole world, grew out of Major Higginson's enthusiasm, generosity, and steadfastness. For a generation the orchestra has exhibited the highest type of orchestral playing not only to the people of Boston but, through its tours, to the people of many other cities. It has constantly played the best standard music in the best way, and it has been a diligent missioner for worthy new music. Devoted to an ideal so lofty, it has proved the most ennobling influence in our musical life, our highest inspiration in tonal art.

"Major Higginson in saying in the course of his farewell talk that its concerts had been to him 'a great joy, not only because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future,' furnishes pathetic and convincing proof of what the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to mean to the general public. It is regrettable that the last year Major Higginson was to stand behind the orchestra he cherished should have been marked by troubles foreign to the serene realm of art and, one can guess, harrowing to the venerable founder.

"Fortunately the orchestra has survived a situation which for a time threatened to kill it. For the gentlemen of Boston who as trustees will now endeavor to carry on the work hitherto devolving on Major Higginson alone, the latter bespoke from the players and the public the same devotion and support they had accorded him, and furthermore he avowed his belief that to achieve great and permanent orchestras it is necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success. That dictum is a true pearl of wisdom which the trustees of the orchestra should treasure jealously and observe scrupulously. Of course the conductor should be worthy of such responsibility. As soon as he proves not to be the trustees should depose him. But the greatest conductor on earth cannot fully express himself artistically without such undivided responsibility. Otherwise there is dissension, anxiety, preoccupation with questions have no direct bearing on art, and at last confusion and ruin.

239

"Most of the men who have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been artistically entirely worthy of such responsibility. Otherwise the orchestra could not have risen to its high estate. If the trustees now follow the advice implied in Major Higginson's dictum they will obtain, as apparently they can, a conductor of the first order, and then give him an absolutely untrammelled hand."

rom
ddress:
Date

ENGLISHMAN TO LEAD THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

884

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its usual series of concerts next season, Brooklyn audiences will see for the first time a titled Englishman as conductor. A dispatch from London to-day announces Sir Joseph Henry Wood has accepted the leadership of that famous musical organization. "He may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers," the dispatch says.

Sir Henry Wood, who will take the place left by the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck on his internment as an enemy alien, was born in London, March 3, 1869. When but 10 years old, he became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. In 1889 he became a conductor after having given organ recitals for several years. He has been constantly before the English public since as director of some of the greatest orchestras in England.

TELEGRAM
s: New York City.

ENGLISHMAN TO TAKE DR. MUCK'S PLACE IN BOSTON

Sir Henry Wood to Succeed German Alien as Leader of Symphony Orchestra.

LONG FAMOUS AS BRITISH MUSICAL LEADER.

LONDON, Friday.—The Daily Telegraph has announced that Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Telegraph remarks that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Doktor Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Doktor Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence on October 30 last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became assistant organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 18 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the "Parsifal" tableaux.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

From TIMES
Address: New York City
Date

SIR HENRY J. WOOD TO SUCCEED DR. MUCK

Noted British Conductor Accepts Offer of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Dr. Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence, R. I., on Oct. 30, last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when 10 years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889, after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended many musical festivals, the last of which was the Parsifal Tableux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

EVENING WORLD
ss: New York City.
MAY 24 19

SIR HENRY JOSEPH WOOD SUCCEEDS DR. MUCK AS BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEA

SIR HENRY J. WOOD

Briton to Take Place of Conduct Now Held as an Enemy Alien.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Hen Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers." Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck.

rom EVENING GLOBE
ddress: New York City
te

SIR HENRY WOOD MAY NOT LEAD BOSTON ORCHESTRA

LONDON, May 24. — Although the Daily Telegraph reports that Sir Henry Joseph Wood had accepted an offer to become Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Daily News quotes Sir Henry as saying that he has not yet decided whether he would accept the offer. Sir Henry, the paper adds, will not reach a decision in the matter until next week.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the "Parsifal" tableaux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

n EVENING SUN
ress: New York City

MUCK'S SUCCESSOR NAMED.

Sir Henry Wood to Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry J. Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, has accepted an offer to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was announced to-day.

Sir Henry J. Wood will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, who is interned as an alien enemy for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry became a conductor when only 20 years old. At 10 years of age he became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury, and gave recitals for a number of years.

n CITIZEN
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Muck's kind neighbors knew that he had a powerful wireless outfit in his home, in spite of Federal prohibition, but with characteristic neighborly kindness they refrained from mentioning it to the authorities.—Rochester

From POST 131
Address New York City
Date MAY 24 1918

Although the London Daily News says that Sir Henry Joseph Wood has not yet accepted the offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is to be hoped he will do so. In England he has long been rated as one of the best orchestral leaders of the period, nor need Americans accept him on faith, for he was cordially acclaimed in New York more than a decade ago when he came over to conduct some of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. Having been born in 1870, he is still in the best vigor of his manhood, and his art of interpretation has had ample time to mature since he began, in 1895, to conduct the Promenade Concerts in the new Queen's Hall. At these concerts he demonstrated that, as Fuller Maitland has remarked, "good things well done will attract large audiences by their own inherent strength, notwithstanding all the advertising methods by which other compositions are forced down the throats of the public." In Boston and the cities visited by its orchestra he will appeal to audiences of the most cultivated hearers, and as his taste is catholic, there is no reason why his programmes should not appeal to everybody. As it was he who made Tchaikovsky and other Russians famous in London (his first wife was the daughter of a Russian princess), it is likely that Russian music will be specially featured by him. He may also be counted upon to make some of the best English music known here, and his record shows he does not neglect American composers.

m AMERICAN
dress: New York City.
te

Wood to Lead Boston Symphony, Says London

LONDON, May 24.

SIR HENRY JOSEPH WOOD has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Dr. Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence, Rhode Island, on October 30 last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the Parsifal tableaux given at the London Colisseum in 1913.

TIGHT BINDING

om TOWN & COUNT
dress: New York City
te MAY 20

Boston and Music

THE swan song of the music has been sung with the closin week of the Metropolitan Opera (Galli-Curci's concert, and last but the final concerts of the Boston S Orchestra. At the Friday after hearsal as well as at the Saturday concert, even in these busy wartim athered at Symphony Hall not on Boston's beauty and her chiv large slices of every other Because of war conditions g because of the very mixed (na personnel of the orchestra, bec the very sensational culmina various accusations in the arres Muck, the leader, on the ch espionage; and finally because concerts being the last under Higginson's personally conducte agement and support, these la formances held a unique place annals of the orchestra and wer unequalled in its more than seven years' existence. At afternoon's "rehearsal" when, intermission, Major Higginso from his seat to go out into t ridors, there was tremendous and cheering and a speech wa for, but the veteran organizer a porter of this greatest of or saw fit to wait until the last p ance on Saturday evening to tal publicly and formally both orchestra and the public. As peared on the platform he was overwhelmed with applause fr musicians and listeners. It fell to Mayor Peters to voice the a tion of the citizens of Bosto Schmidt, who has been conducti Dr. Muck's internment, came in share of applause, and deserve for in spite of trying conditio unusual difficulties, he has mad in every way. Never was the or heard to greater advantage t those last two concerts when th de résistance of the progran Eroica Symphony, was given wit flaw. The question of greatest i now in Boston's musical circl "Who shall be Dr. Muck's succes

RECORD
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 22

AT MAJOR HIGGINSON'S MEMORABLE FAREWELL

"Founder and Sustainer" of the Orchestra Has Moving Reception.

PLAY FAVORITE SYMPHONY

Mayor Peters, of Boston, Responds On Part of the Audience.

AT THE last concert of the season, Saturday evening, May 4, Major Higginson said a public farewell to the great Boston Orchestra of which he was founder and of which he has so long been "sustainer" as well.

It was an extremely moving occasion. The entire audience in Symphony Hall rose and stood while the orchestra played a fanfare, and continued to stand while Major Higginson spoke.

A Wonderful Occasion.

The first part of his short and touching address was to the audience. Then he turned and mounted the conductor's stand and addressed the players in the band. It was all very fine; very simple and dignified; and therefore, of course, the more impressive. The roar of sympathetic applause which greeted his deep-felt reasons for retiring (his advanced age, as every body knows, and the managerial complications brought on by the war) presently found an articulate voice. Mayor Andrew Peters also climbed upon the platform, and thanked Major Higginson in unmistakable terms for the service he has done music in this country in general, and Boston in particular.

Then Major Higginson replied with another few words, and moved away from the platform; the good-will of the audience being very obviously with him. This atter of Muck and the Major's retirement has been a mighty troublesome business on the whole; but the scene in Symphony Hall that farewell Saturday night must have taken all bitterness out of the minds of even the most partisan. The symphony for that final performance was Beethoven's "Eroica," as a tribute to Major Higginson's fondness, it be his favorite symphony.

m Vrezeln's
ress: New York City.
MAY 22 1918
e

ARTISTIC RESPONSIBILITY

LEADING up to the question of undivided responsibility in artistic affairs, an editorial writer in the Globe has some wise and gracious words to say concerning the venerable Major Higginson and his famous symphony orchestra. We quote the editorial as follows:

"When the venerable Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded and for thirty-seven years sustained single-handed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took public farewell of that orchestra at the closing concert of its season Saturday night, a situation resulted which inevitably must appeal to all who were present or, being absent, have heard of it. Nothing less than the best orchestra in this country, if not in the whole world, grew out of Major Higginson's enthusiasm, generosity, and steadfastness. For a generation the orchestra has exhibited the highest type of orchestral playing not only to the people of Boston but, through its tours, to the people of many other cities. It has constantly played the best standard music in the best way, and it has been a diligent missioner for worthy new music. Devoted to an ideal so lofty, it has proved the most ennobling influence in our musical life, our highest inspiration in tonal art.

"Major Higginson in saying in the course of his farewell talk that its concerts had been to him 'a great joy, not only because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future,' furnishes pathetic and convincing proof of what the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to mean to the general public. It is regrettable that the last year Major Higginson was to stand behind the orchestra he cherished should have been marked by troubles foreign to the serene realm of art and, one can guess, harrowing to the venerable founder.

"Fortunately the orchestra has survived a situation which for a time threatened to kill it. For the gentlemen of Boston who as trustees will now endeavor to carry on the work hitherto devolving on Major Higginson alone, the latter bespoke from the players and the public the same devotion and support they had accorded him, and furthermore he avowed his belief that to achieve great and permanent orchestras it is necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success. That dictum is a true pearl of wisdom which the trustees of the orchestra should treasure jealously and observe scrupulously. Of course the conductor should be worthy of such responsibility. As soon as he proves not to be the truste should depose him. But the greatest co ductor on earth cannot fully express h self artistically without such undivided sponsibility. Otherwise there is dissen anxiety, preoccupation with questions have no direct bearing on art, and at last confusion and ruin.

"Most of the men who have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been artistically entirely worthy of such responsibility. Otherwise the orchestra could not have risen to its high estate. If the trustees now follow the advice implied in Major Higginson's dictum they will obtain, as apparently they can, a conductor of the first order, and then give him an absolutely untrammelled hand."

rom
ddress:
Date

ENGLISHMAN TO LEAD THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its usual series of concerts next season, Brooklyn audiences will see for the first time a titled Englishman as conductor. A dispatch from London to-day announces that Joseph Henry Wood has accepted the leadership of that famous musical organization. "He may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers," the dispatch says.

Sir Henry Wood, who will take the place left by the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck on his internment as an enemy alien, was born in London, March 3, 1869. When but 10 years old he became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. In 1889 he became a conductor after having given recitals for several years. He has been constantly before the English public since as director of some of the greatest orchestras in England.

TELEGRAM
ss: New York City.

ENGLISHMAN TO TAKE DR. MUCK'S PLACE IN BOSTON

Sir Henry Wood to Succeed German Alien as Leader of Symphony Orchestra.

LONG FAMOUS AS BRITISH MUSICAL LEADER.

LONDON, Friday.—The Daily Telegraph has announced that Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Telegraph remarks that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Doktor Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Doktor Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence on October 30 last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 13, 1869, and when ten years old became assistant organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the "Parsifal" tableaux.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff, of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

From TIMES
Address: New York City
Date

SIR HENRY J. WOOD TO SUCCEED DR. MUCK

Noted British Conductor Accepts Offer of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Dr. Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence, R. I., on Oct. 30, last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when 10 years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889, after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended many musical festivals, the last of which was the Parsifal Tableux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

EVENING WORLD
ss: New York City.
MAY 24 19

SIR HENRY JOSEPH WOOD SUCCEEDS DR. MUCK AS BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEA

SIR HENRY J. WOOD

Briton to Take Place of Conduct Now Held as an Enemy Alien.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Hen eph Wood has accepted an r to become conductor of the Bos- Symphony Orchestra, according this morning's Daily Telegraph ch says that he "may be relied n to introduce to his new Ameri- public many works of the British posers." Sir Henry will succeed Karl Muck.

EVENING GLOBE
: New York City

SIR HENRY WOOD MAY NOT LEAD BOSTON ORCHESTRA

LONDON, May 24. — Although the Daily Telegraph reports that Sir Henry Joseph Wood had accepted an offer to become Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Daily News quotes Sir Henry as saying that he has not yet decided whether he would accept the offer. Sir Henry, the paper adds, will not reach a decision in the matter until next week.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the "Parsifal" tableaux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

n EVENING SUN
ress: New York City

MUCK'S SUCCESSOR NAMED.

Sir Henry Wood to Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry J. Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, has accepted an offer to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was announced to-day.

Sir Henry J. Wood will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, who is interned as an alien enemy for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry became a conductor when only 20 years old. At 10 years of age he became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury, and gave recitals for a number of years.

n CITIZEN
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Muck's kind neighbors knew that he had a powerful wireless outfit in his home, in spite of Federal prohibition, but with characteristic neighborly kindness they refrained from mentioning it to the authorities.—Rochest

From POST
Address New York City
Date MAY 24 1918

Although the London Daily News says that Sir Henry Joseph Wood has not yet accepted the offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is to be hoped he will do so. In England he has long been rated as one of the best orchestral leaders of the period, nor need Americans accept him on faith, for he was cordially acclaimed in New York more than a decade ago when he came over to conduct some of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. Having been born in 1870, he is still in the best vigor of his manhood, and his art of interpretation has had ample time to mature since he began, in 1895, to conduct the Promenade Concerts in the new Queen's Hall. At these concerts he demonstrated that, as Fuller Maitland has remarked, "good things well done will attract large audiences by their own inherent strength, notwithstanding all the advertising methods by which other compositions are forced down the throats of the public." In Boston and the cities visited by its orchestra he will appeal to audiences of the most cultivated hearers, and as his taste is catholic, there is no reason why his programmes should not appeal to everybody. As it was he who made Tchaikovsky and other Russians famous in London (his first wife was the daughter of a Russian princess), it is likely that Russian music will be specially featured by him. He may also be counted upon to make some of the best English music known here, and his record shows he does not neglect American composers.

m AMERICAN
dress: New York City.

Wood to Lead Boston Symphony, Says London

LONDON, May 24.

SIR HENRY JOSEPH WOOD has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Dr. Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence, Rhode Island, on October 30 last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the Parsifal tableaux given at the London Colisseum in 1913.

TIGHT BINDING

TOWN & COUNTRY
New York City
MAY 20 1918

Boston and Music

THE swan song of the musical se has been sung with the closing of the week of the Metropolitan Opera Compa Galli-Curci's concert, and last but not les the final concerts of the Boston Sympho Orchestra. At the Friday afternoon rehearsal as well as at the Saturday even concert, even in these busy wartimes, we athered at Symphony Hall not only all Boston's beauty and her chivalry large slices of every other elemen Because of war conditions genera because of the very mixed (national personnel of the orchestra, because the very sensational culmination various accusations in the arrest of Muck, the leader, on the charge espionage; and finally because of concerts being the last under Maj Higginson's personally conducted m agement and support, these last formances held a unique place in annals of the orchestra and were even unequalled in its more than thirt seven years' existence. At Frida afternoon's "rehearsal" when, at th intermission, Major Higginson ro from his seat to go out into the co ridors, there was tremendous clappin and cheering and a speech was hope for, but the veteran organizer and sup porter of this greatest of orchestr saw fit to wait until the last perfor ance on Saturday evening to take le publicly and formally both of orchestra and the public. As he peared on the platform he was liter overwhelmed with applause from b musicians and listeners. It fell fittin to Mayor Peters to voice the appre tion of the citizens of Boston. Schmidt, who has been conducting sin Dr. Muck's internment, came in for share of applause, and deservedly for in spite of trying conditions a unusual difficulties, he has made go in every way. Never was the orchest heard to greater advantage than those last two concerts when the pi de resistance of the program, t Eroica Symphony, was given without flaw. The question of greatest intere now in Boston's musical circles "Who shall be Dr. Muck's successor

RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAY 22

AT MAJOR HIGGINSON'S MEMORABLE FAREWELL

"Founder and Sustainer" of the Orchestra Has Moving Reception.

PLAY FAVORITE SYMPHONY

Mayor Peters, of Boston, Responds On Part of the Audience.

AT THE last concert of the season, Saturday evening, May 4, Major Higginson said a public farewell to the great Boston Orchestra of which he was founder and of which he has so long been "sustainer" as well.

It was an extremely moving occasion. The entire audience in Symphony Hall rose and stood while the orchestra played a fanfare, and continued to stand while Major Higginson spoke.

A Wonderful Occasion.

The first part of his short and touching address was to the audience. Then he turned and mounted the conductor's stand and addressed the players in the band. It was all very fine; very simple and dignified; and therefore, of course, the more impressive. The roar of sympathetic applause which greeted his deep-felt reasons for retiring (his advanced age, as every body knows, and the managerial complications brought on by the war) presently found an articulate voice. Mayor Andrew Peters also climbed upon the platform and thanked Major Higginson in unmistakable terms for the service he has done music in this country in general, and Boston in particular.

Then Major Higginson replied wit another few words, and moved away fro the platform; the good-will of the aud ence being very obviously with him. Th matter of Muck and the Major's retirement has been a mighty troublesome business, on the whole; but the scene in Symphony Hall that farewell Saturday night must have taken all bitterness out of the minds of even the most partisan. The symphony for that final performance was Beethoven's "Eroica," as a tribute to Major Higginson's fondness, it be favorite symphony.

Vreeland's
New York City.
MAY 22 1918

ARTISTIC RESPONSIBILITY

LEADING up to the question of undivided responsibility in artistic affairs, an editorial writer in the Globe has some wise and gracious words to say concerning the venerable Major Higginson and his famous symphony orchestra. We quote the editorial as follows:

"When the venerable Major Henry L. Higginson, who founded and for thirty-seven years sustained single-handed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, took public farewell of that orchestra at the closing concert of its season Saturday night, a situation resulted which inevitably must appeal to all who were present or, being absent, have heard of it. Nothing less than the best orchestra in this country, if not in the whole world, grew out of Major Higginson's enthusiasm, generosity, and steadfastness. For a generation the orchestra has exhibited the highest type of orchestral playing not only to the people of Boston but, through its tours, to the people of many other cities. It has constantly played the best standard music in the best way, and it has been a diligent missioner for worthy new music. Devoted to an ideal so lofty, it has proved the most ennobling influence in our musical life, our highest inspiration in tonal art.

"Major Higginson in saying in the course of his farewell talk that its concerts had been to him 'a great joy, not only because of the refreshment and enjoyment of the multitude of people unknown to me who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine, and who have written to me a mass of warm letters full of gratitude for the past and of urgent requests for the future,' furnishes pathetic and convincing proof of what the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to mean to the general public. It is regrettable that the last year Major Higginson was to stand behind the orchestra he cherished should have been marked by troubles foreign to the serene realm of art and, one can guess, harrowing to the venerable founder.

"Fortunately the orchestra has survived a situation which for a time threatened to kill it. For the gentlemen of Boston who as trustees will now endeavor to carry on the work hitherto devolving on Major Higginson alone, the latter bespoke from the players and the public the same devotion and support they had accorded him, and furthermore he avowed his belief that to achieve great and permanent orchestras it is necessary to give to the conductor the sole artistic responsibility as an essential to success. That dictum is a true pearl of wisdom which the trustees of the orchestra should treasure jealously and observe scrupulously. Of course the conductor should be worthy of such responsibility. As soon as he proves not to be the truste should depose him. But the greatest co ductor on earth cannot fully express hi self artistically without such undivided sponsibility. Otherwise there is dissen anxiety, preoccupation with questions have no direct bearing on art, and at last confusion and ruin.

"Most of the men who have led the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been artistically entirely worthy of such responsibility. Otherwise the orchestra could not have risen to its high estate. If the trustees now follow the advice implied in Major Higginson's dictum they will obtain, as apparently they can, a conductor of the first order, and then give him an absolutely untrammelled hand."

rom
ddress:
Date

ENGLISHMAN TO LEAD THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its usual series of concerts next season, Brooklyn audiences will see for the first time a titled Englishman as conductor. A dispatch from London to-day announces Sir Joseph Henry Wood has accepted the leadership of that famous musical organization. "He may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers," the dispatch says.

Sir Henry Wood, who will take the place left by the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck on his internment as an enemy alien, was born in London, March 3, 1869. When but 10 years old, he became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. In 1889 he became a conductor after having given organ recitals for several years. He has been constantly before the English public since as director of some of the greatest orchestras in England.

TELEGRAM
New York City.

ENGLISHMAN TO TAKE DR. MUCK'S PLACE IN BOSTON

Sir Henry Wood to Succeed German Alien as Leader of Symphony Orchestra.

LONG FAMOUS AS BRITISH MUSICAL LEADER.

LONDON, Friday.—The Daily Telegraph has announced that Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Telegraph remarks that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Doktor Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Doktor Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence on October 30 last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 13, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 18 after giving organ recitals for severa years. Since that time he has been con stantly before the English public and i charge of some of the greatest orchestra of England. In addition, he has directe the presentation of notable concerts a superintended numerous musical festiva the last of which was the "Parsifal" ta leaux.

Sir Henry has been twice married. T first wife was Princess Olga Ourouso of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muri the daughter of Major Greatrex. He hi two daughters.

From TIMES
Address: New York City
Date

SIR HENRY J. WOOD TO SUCCEED DR. MUCK

Noted British Conductor Accepts Offer of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers."

Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck, whose resignation as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accepted on March 31, following his arrest at Boston as an enemy alien. Dr. Muck, the agitation against whom started at Providence, R. I., on Oct. 30, last, when he was accused of refusing a request to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a concert, is now interned for the duration of the war.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when 10 years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889, after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended many musical festivals, the last of which was the Parsifal Tableux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

EVENING WORLD
New York City.
MAY 24 1918

SIR HENRY JOSEPH WOOD SUCCEEDS DR. MUCK AS BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEAD

SIR HENRY J. WOOD.

Briton to Take Place of Conduct Now Held as an Enemy Alien.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry Joseph Wood has accepted an offer to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to this morning's Daily Telegraph, which says that he "may be relied upon to introduce to his new American public many works of the British composers." Sir Henry will succeed Dr. Karl Muck.

From EVENING GLOBE
Address: New York City
Date

SIR HENRY WOOD MAY NOT LEAD BOSTON ORCHESTRA

LONDON, May 24. — Although the Daily Telegraph reports that Sir Henry Joseph Wood had accepted an offer to become Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Daily News quotes Sir Henry as saying that he has not yet decided whether he would accept the offer. Sir Henry, the paper adds, will not reach a decision in the matter until next week.

Sir Henry was born in London on March 3, 1869, and when ten years old became deputy organist at St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. He became a conductor in 1889 after giving organ recitals for several years. Since that time he has been constantly before the English public and in charge of some of the greatest orchestras of England. In addition, he has directed the presentation of notable concerts and superintended numerous musical festivals, the last of which was the "Parsifal" tableaux, given at the London Coliseum in 1913.

Sir Henry has been twice married. The first wife was Princess Olga Ourousoff of Podolia, Russia. She died in 1909. In 1911 Sir Henry was married to Miss Muriel, the daughter of Major Greatrex. He has two daughters.

n EVENING SUN
ress: New York City

MUCK'S SUCCESSOR NAMED.

Sir Henry Wood to Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LONDON, May 24.—Sir Henry J. Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, has accepted an offer to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was announced to-day.

